Vol. 116, No. 1 June 30, 1934

AT LAST, A SOLUTION

"THERE is but one answer, and one answer only to reasonable objections to pictures, and that is the pictures themselves.

That is the essence of a statement from Mr. Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., issued in the aftermath of the impact of the Legion of Decency on the screen.

At the moment one is reminded, too, of a statement back in the dark days of the depression from Mr. Nicholas M. Schenck, who observed in substance that: "there is nothing the matter with this business that good pictures can not cure."

And that is true of more aspects of the industry, probably, than Mr. Schenck had in mind at the figure laden moment.

These assertions have a certain rather obvious quality about them. It would seem that the simple fact might have been known right along, and in truth it has been, but as always a certain minority have brought down difficulties upon a whole industry hoping to elude the inevitable. "Getting-by" is the Hollywood word for it.

Some months ago the writer, sitting in Hollywood, observed in a dry moment that some producer would make a fortune discovering the United States.

The Legion of Decency expression, storming from pulpit and press across the nation, is one of the methods by which these United States expose themselves to discovery by Hollywood.

The smart, chipper, wise-cracking young dialogue writers, with glib innuendo in their pens, for all their facile craftsmanship, do not know the motion picture and its public.

It may be observed to them that while the individual citizen may be considerable of a private sinner, Mr. John R. Public, seen in public and taken in flocks of his fellows, is as righteous as Rotary and as proper as "the parlour" in a Kansas farmhouse.

Also, while we are recording the obvious, it seems just as well to set down the fact that the motion picture is a public institution, that it is exhibited not to individuals, sinners that they are, but to the public, in flocks, in the presence of families and neighbors.

And smart young men can put down words and action in a book printed for individual consumers with all the daring they like, but they can not go out to Hollywood and arrange to have it all done out loud from Macy's window in Herald Square, or any Bijou-Empress in Main Street, U. S. A.

The problem is after all not "How to get by."

The problem is how to make pictures for the real market. In the main the industry has done a fair job of it, otherwise the motion picture would not be the dominant amusement form.

Recently a lot of the customers have cast a vote about some of the merchandise.

TIME MARCHES ON

H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, who it seems was but yesterday the world's chosen exemplification of romantic youth, on Saturday last turned his fortieth birthday, and spent it sedately in his garden. He was born the same year that the Kinetoscope brought the motion picture to light. As a brave little lad holding the Union Jack he posed for Biograph in 1901, and in the years after the newreels made him a popular idol. And now he has come to the middle years. We must be knowing now that there is a whole generation at hand which thinks of the world war as of a long time ago.

"A CHAPLIN THIS YEAR"

"CHARLIE CHAPLIN is definitely set for a film this year," says Motion Picture Daily, which relates that it will be all silent. The picture as contemplated will deal with industrial conditions and will present "big factory sets." Naively enough the Hollwood story says that Mr. Chaplin has "the whole film on paper because overhead will not permit improvising."

The day has come in the art of the screen when even the great Chaplin cannot shoot it "off the cuff." Many the odd million the motion picture might have saved itself in years gone by recognizing the merits of preparation and the advisability of drawing plans before building.

Mr. Chaplin's technique has been in the making now just twenty-one years. He became famous in Keystone's one-reelers at a reel a week and tremendous mass circulation. He became a genius in two reels for Lone-Star Mutual and he became wealthy in a handful of releases through First National. But all that was rather a long time ago, as time goes in the screen world. He is still the great Chaplin, but it will be necessary to refresh the memories of the oldsters and to tell the youngsters about him all over again.

NEVER, SO HELP US!

THE last time that the Selwyns went out a-hybridizing cognomens and evolving nomenclature the motion picture industry and the amusement world were enriched by the new name "Goldwyn." This week out comes No. 1 issue of "The Theatre," a monthly, devoted to the interests of "Frankwyn Productions, Inc." A Harwold Frankwyn would be too much!

FILM SCHOOL RACKET

Meeting with determined opposition from the Motion Picture Producers' Association in Hollywood is a new kind of racket concerning alleged film schools. Agents contact convalescents in hospitals, counting on the desire of those near recovery to be "up and doing" acting as an incentive to a signature enrolling them in a film dramatic school. . . .

STARS ON THE AIR

Acting on innumerable exhibitor protests, and seen as presaging a concerted drive by all major studios, Paramount and MGM have induced Mae West, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland to cancel radio engagements on the Lehn and Fink Hall of Fame program. MGM likewise refused Lionel Barrymore permission to appear on a Campbell program. . . .

ACTIVE CENSORS

First run situations in and about Columbus, Ohio, were vastly relieved last week when RKO's "The Life of Vergie Winters," banned earlier, was passed with few alterations. The board also had banned Paramount's Mae West film, "It Ain't No Sin," and is holding up Warner's "Dr. Monica," also being delayed by the Pennsylvania board. The New York censor has turned thumbs down on "It Ain't No Sin," which will be remade, probably retitled. . . .

MEXICAN APPROVAL

Although Columbia obtained permission from the Mexican government to film scenes of a forthcoming film in the Pacific port of Mazatlan, and cameraman, technicians and directors will be allowed freedom of movement, it is stipulated that prints of the finished sequences must go to Mexico City for inspection and approval.

DICKENS SCREENED

Again returning to active production, D. W. Griffith has been signed by British and Dominions to direct a screen version of Charles Dickens' famed "Old Curiosity Shop," last week in New York announced Herbert Wilcox, managing director. The film, starting in August, will feature an American star, and will be filmed largely in the original London settings. . . .

EXHIBITORS MEET

The drought, censorship, general economic problems were to be aired this week at a Wisconsin statewide meeting at Lake Geneva, called by Allied States for all independent theatre owners, the idea being to form a single organization. Plans were to be outlined looking to a method whereby the independents may turn the "clean screen" situation to their own advantage. . . .

ART SPASM

Unwittingly last week was Marion Davies the star, by proxy, so to speak, of a bitterly dramatic story of the art world. At the 19th International Biennial Art Exhibition in Venice, in the American collection from the Whitney Museum of American Art, suddenly appeared a portrait of Miss Davies, done by Tada Styka. Mrs. Juliana Force, Whitney director, asked its removal. Nothing was done, and Miss Force threatened to remove the entire collection, which precipitated a nervous spasm through the art world of two continents. Miss Davies, calmly touring in England, seemed completely undisturbed. . . .

RICHARD SAUNDERS

Richard West Saunders, who, a law graduate, went from banking to the controllership of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation in 1916, and remained through mergers and motion picture industry development until retirement in 1930, died last week in New York at the age of 59. A strangely versatile person, Mr. West authored several works on banking and economics, was the possessor of a fine library, wrote considerable verse, edited poetry anthologies. . . .

LUNCH, FILMS

The ingenious idea of Memphis exhibitors to evade the Sunday blue law has hit a snag. Opening his theatre on Sunday under a restaurant license, selling sandwiches, drinks, with films added free, manager Charles Mensing of the Orpheum was arrested, fined. Refusing a court offer to drop the fine in return for a promise to desist, Mr. Mensing plans an appeal. . . .

NEW ORLEANS TAX

A new New Orleans taxation ordinance will burden theatre owners using outdoor advertising thus: marquees, $10 per year; electric signs, $5; muslin signs, $1; easel signs, $5; any theatre sign, $3; streamers, $5; weighing machines, $1.50. Neighborhood houses will pay half that rate. . . .

SENTENCE SUSTAINED

Apparently destined to serve his two and one-half year prison sentence for bribe solicitation is former Alabama state senator Elmer D. Jordon, since his latest request for a state supreme court review was refused. The accusation concerned an effort to obtain Sunday films for Gadsden, Ala., in 1932. . . .

STAGE LABORATORY

The stage as a screen laboratory is the plan of 20th Century Pictures, furthered by the intended New York presentation of "The Red Cat," by Rudolph Lothar and Hans Adler, under the A. H. Woods banner. Darryl Zanuck, 20th Century production chief, will base his screen casting on the play's characterizations. United Artists will release the film. . . .

FILM "CHAMPION"

Three pictures, with as many companies, are in the offing for heavyweight champion Max Baer, according to his own New York-spread story. The three, says he: with MGM and a marine background; a police yarn, for Paramount; one for Columbia. In a few weeks he starts for the Coast and the MGM studio. . . .

UPWARD CURVE

Of real interest to exhibitors of Ohio should be the result of a survey by the Bureau of Business Research of Ohio State University. Graphs indicate the statewide employment curve moved definitely upward during May, as compared with April.

TO THEATRES AGAIN

Indicative of the return of William Goldman to the exhibition scene is the incorporation, in Dover, Del., of William Goldman Theatres, Inc., with capital stock of 100 no par value shares. . . .

RESEARCH CONFERENCE IS CALLED

derwood's or elsewhere among the newsphotographic services.

A possibly indicative factor in the eclipse phenomena of the situation is the reported fading of the enthusiasm of Mr. George J. Hecht, publisher of "The Parents Magazine," who has these several years been engaged at endeavors to evolve in some manner a motion picture cause calculated to aid in building circulation.

Short a Career

In this connection it is to be observed that Mr. Hecht in a publicity release of the week announcing the forthcoming publication of a "Movie Guide" speaks of "the widespread interest in the crusade for clean films sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches and the League of Decency" as inspiring his project, but he does not avail himself of any of the recent big publicity wave of the Motion Picture Research Council and its admirable list of hand-picked "names."

In a manner of speaking this does not denote real reciprocity, because Mr. Hecht's magazine supplied to the Motion Picture Research Council pamphlet "A NEW DAY, for the movies and for the children" a drawing, used for the cover, in violent indictment of the screen, depicting a lobby presenting the fictitious titles: "Machine Gun Joe," "The Gunman's Moll," "Mamie, Queen of the Mob" and "Hot Love." The titles are all plucked from the fancy of the artist Mr. Ray VanBuren, formerly of Kansas City and who learned about life in New York's West Sixty-fifth street.

So now it seems the Motion Picture Council is short a career.

Mrs. Belmont Arranges Washington Conference

The Motion Picture Research Council, in its announcement of Mrs. Belmont's resignation as president, declared:

"In her statement, Mrs. Belmont said: 'My devotion to the work is greater than ever, for it is apparent that right-thinking people everywhere now see how essential it is to have motion pictures improved. While I haven't the strength to meet the exacting demands of leadership, I shall continue as a member of the executive board of the Council and do everything in my power to advance its work. I have arranged a meeting, together with former Ambassador Alanson B. Houghton, of our best research men and national organizers, to meet in Washington Thursday. This conference will formulate a program to meet the unusual situation that has arisen. With the Pope expressing his condemnation in Rome, and the Protestant churches, through their Federal Council, supporting the Catholic position in this country, the need is manifest for the kind of coordinating work the Motion Picture Research Council can supply. The meeting in Washington, therefore, has been arranged and a careful program will be prepared to meet the present situation in a strong and constructive way.' Mrs. Belmont's statement was telephoned from her summer home in Seal Harbor, Maine, to Mr. Herbert S. Houston, chairman of the Council's Committee on Public Relations.

"Strength Overtaxed," Says Short

"Following the receipt of Mrs. Belmont's statement, the director of the Council, Mr. William H. Short, said: 'The officers of the Council have known for some weeks that Mrs. Belmont's strength has been seriously overtaxed by the complete abandon with which she had thrown herself into the exacting work of the Council, that she had been warned by her physician of a pending breakdown if she continued her present pace, and that she would eventually have to retire from active leadership of the Council.

" 'The Executive Committee of the Council held a meeting on Friday, June 22, at which the matter of a successor was considered, and will meet again on Monday, July 9th, for the same purpose. Mrs. Belmont is cooperating with the executive committee in the matter, and a public announcement will be made in due time.

" 'The conference to which Mrs. Belmont referred will meet at the National Education Association Building at Washington,' Mr. Short said, 'and will review the whole matter of the objectives of the Council and the practical ways in which individuals and groups throughout the nation can further those objectives. The conference is composed of sociologists, psychologists, educators and leaders in organization work. It convenes on Thursday morning, June 28, and will continue in session for several days.

Trade Practices To Be Studied

" 'The trade practices of the motion picture industry which have received much public attention in connection with the framing and administration of the NRA Code for motion pictures is another subject that will be studied during the summer,' Mr. Short said. 'The controversy on the subject between Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, the honorary president of the Council, and General Hugh S. Johnson is still fresh in the public mind. The Council proposes to secure authoritative statements on these trade practices. A research committee has been appointed which now consists of Drs. Wesley C. Mitchell, chairman, Ben D. Wood, Frederick M. Thrasher, Paul D. Cressey, and Arthur Butler Graham, Esq., and which will be enlarged by the addition of other authorities. The study will be made by Mr. Graham under the direction of this research committee. Mrs. Belmont and Mr. Thomas J. Watson have collaborated in the planning of this study of trade practices."

" 'The general purpose of the Council,' Mr. Short said, 'is to provide dependable information and wise guidance for the great movement towards clean films and a social use of the film art which has been started as a result of the publication and dissemination of the findings of the Payne Fund, studies that were made on the Council's initiative, and which are now sweeping the country.

" 'The Council has large chapters in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia and others either formed or forming in Hartford, Northampton, Richmond, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco and many other points.'

"The President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, who visited the King and Queen of England on Monday, and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge are honorary vice-presidents of the Council. The active vice-presidents are Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, Prof. E. R. A. Seligman and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise."

SALLY RAND LOSES FANS

Tangible evidence of the effect of the Legion of Decency movement was seen this week in the action of a Syracuse, N. Y., theatre in removing Sally Rand's name from the bill of the current show at less than 24 hours notice.

Miss Rand's fans had brought thunderous denunciation from local clergymen and civic organizations. Said Bishop John A. Duffy:

"I must regard the presence of the Rand woman on the stage of Loew's State Theatre as an act of public defiance of the moral sentiment of the Catholic people of Syracuse."

Skinner Defends Censor

Defending the efforts of the Ohio censors as doing "the best they could," Dr. Beverly O. Skinner, state director of education, and head of the censor board, last week predicted a new era in pictures in which there will be less objectionable material. Commenting on the pastoral of Bishop Joseph Schrembs, of the Cleveland Catholic diocese, who asserted that the feeble efforts of censors "have been so pitiable that the flood of indecent films has continued unabated," Dr. Skinner said he was entirely in sympathy with the general movement among both Catholic and Protestant churches to arouse public sentiment against indecent films.

Censor Likely in Oklahoma City

It appeared likely this week that a new board of censors to preview pictures exhibited in Oklahoma City would be formed soon. Pat McGee, district manager for Standard Theatres, said he and Bishop Francis C. Kelly of the Oklahoma City and Tulsa diocese have been conferring on plans for the new board.

Allied Asks Clean Films

At a special meeting of its directors in Des Moines, Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska last week went on record for "clean pictures only." Regional meetings are being arranged to discuss cooperation with church groups.

RESEARCH COUNCIL LOOKING FOR CAREER; MRS. BELMONT RESIGNS

Outgoing President Cites "New Responsibilities" in Churches' Campaign on Films; Continues on Executive Board

By TERRY RAMSAYE

That recent ball of fire in the motion picture sky, the Motion Picture Research Council, is now in a state of eclipse, publicity eclipse, covered by the swift rise of the Legion of Decency campaign.

And true to the attendant phenomena of eclipses, there are special revelations available in the corona and shadows, to the eye of the observer.

In the midst of the current period of totality, emerge most persistent intimations and indications that cosmic changes threaten. Conjectures and reports abound that Mrs. August Belmont, of social grace and fame, third to be cast in the role of president of the Council, is on the verge of resignation from that post. Further it is admitted, without, most insistently without, explanation, that the "financial consultants," the celebrated firm of Tamblyn & Brown, fund raisers, not so long ago brought to the service of the Council by Dr. Short, are no longer serving it.

Further here and there among the adherents and members of the Council organization, including some of its most ardent supporters, appear signs of disaffection, and covert expressions of doubting with significantly secretive shakings of the head. Those whose special personal causes and aims might have been tied in hope to the program of the Research Council are apparently beginning to wonder what that program can be now that the Legion of Decency campaign has swept the scene, and has in fact come to what might well be a superseding understanding with the motion picture industry pertaining to the whole broad subject.

Crystallization Doesn't Crystallize

Dr. Short's proclamations of the aims and purposes of the Council, in sum the crystallization of a public demand for motion pictures of improved social and moral status and influence, when recalled today does not itself crystallize and come to focus. The crystallization of public demand is a hazy objective alongside the demonstration of decisive action and influence by that somewhat older social and religious organization—The Church.

The motion picture industry, through the Production Code Administration and its understanding with and assurances to the Episcopal Committee, finds itself, in the current moral issues of the screen, before the public on a considerably firmer footing and with a still maintained principle of self-regulation, but such program as the Motion Picture Research Council offered gave no prospect of any kindred adjustment.

It would appear that still today, at the admitted end of its "researches" with the publication of many volumes of findings, the Council is by circumstance left still with the problem with which it was born—how and why to exist.

As has been set forth in the pages of Motion Picture Herald in months past, a considerable part of the reason for the existence of the Motion Picture Research Council would appear to be to supply a career and activity for its staff, headed by Dr. William Harrison Short, whose own "Who's Who in America" biography shows him to be a person of many, many movements, causes and most frequent changes of post.

That autobiography, by the by, does overlook or ignore the merry action episode wherein it is related that Dr. Short hit so high a mark in bristling discipline and efficiency as business manager of Rollins College in Florida that the students tossed him into the park lake and thereafter kept his motor tires in a constant state of puncture until he sought other fields.

Some months ago it was permitted to become known that the Research Council had exhausted its share of the Payne Fund and that it would be necessary to take steps in quest of financial support. The financial consultants Tamblyn & Brown were retained. Tamblyn & Brown is famous for its service to imposing organizations and movements of high status. It is said to have numbered among its causes the imposing Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York. The objective of the new Research drive was said to be a fund of $200,000, for carrying forward the work. The program, as it then stood, was understood to contemplate the organization of a nationwide machine of subsidiary chapters or councils, which would be in effect considerably a duplication of the Better Films Committees and councils now operating in cooperation with the National Board of Review and its previewing committees, with their several lists of classification of screen product.

Mrs. Belmont Silent

This week it became known that Mrs. Belmont, who was placed in the presidency of the Motion Picture Research Council after the withdrawal of Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, who was in turn successor to the late Dr. John Grier Hibben of Princeton, had been looking with increasing interest into various aspects of the Council's movements and motivations. Naturally enough a considerable array of sources of both opinion and information, through many persons, was to be found available.

Mrs. Belmont is said meanwhile to have departed to spend the summer at Seal Harbor, Maine, in itself an indication that no vast activity from the chief executive officer of the Council was to be expected.

Twenty-four hours after, no response was had to a telegraphic invitation to Mrs. Belmont to verify or comment upon the report of her retirement and contemplated withdrawal from the post of leadership in the Council.

Inquiry directed at the offices of the Motion Picture Research Council brought Dr. Short to the telephone:

"Will you verify the report that Mrs. Belmont has resigned or is about to resign?" he was asked.

"That's premature!" Dr. Short snapped back. There was a pause, and he said: "Will you please hold the wire?"

The wire was held a while.

Dr. Short came on the line again.

"We are ready to deny Mrs. Belmont's resignation," he said, and beyond that nothing more.

More Bepuzzlements

Some of the bepuzzlements of the Council on the subject of "where do we go from here?" were reflected in the meeting held April 6 of this year when there was discussion of a project to change the name of the organization in connection with the fund raising campaign. Objection had been made that since the researches had all been researched the name was for future purposes perhaps not quite correct. Dr. George Millard Davidson of a committee named in December prior reported against a change of name and Tamblyn & Brown, holding that the public had been sold the "Motion Picture Research Council," concurred.

This week tight-lipped Tamblyn & Brown referred all inquiries concerning the Council back to it. The Council asserted on interrogation that Tamblyn & Brown had issued no publicity in its behalf since June 1.

Another slight element of the publicity eclipse of the Council is the personal attitude of Dr. Short. A few months ago he referred journals seeking his photograph to Underwood & Underwood, the commercial and newsphotographic concern. This week it was found that no photographs of Dr. Short were available either at Underwood & Un-

BULLETIN

The Motion Picture Research Council announced late Wednesday night that Mrs. August Belmont had resigned as president "because of the new and increased responsibilities that have been quickly developing since the Catholic Church and the Federal Council of Churches have begun their aggressive campaign against objectionable motion pictures."

Company Raising Funds Fades Out of Researchers' Picture as Drives Mark Time; Conference Called in Washington

PRODUCTION CODE ADMINISTRATION GOES INTO OPERATION ON JULY 1

Amplified Studio Relations Committee Will Direct New Deal in Moral Supervision of Hollywood's Film Output

With the adoption of plans intended to expand and fortify the industry's methods of self-regulation, adjustments aimed to meet the issue raised by the campaign of protest have been effected.

The critical situation of the last few weeks has been met by steps to make effective the Production Code adopted some years ago. The Legion of Decency movement and its standards will continue, but with an expectation that henceforward the code-controlled products of the screen, by appropriate precautions of the industry, will meet the standards of the Legion and its followers.

Administration Starts July 1

The Production Code Administration, which is a fortified reincarnation of the Studio Relations department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., begins to function July 1 on the industry's revised plan of self-regulation.

The director of the new PCA is Joseph I. Breen, who has been the Hollywood assistant to Will Hays, in charge of studio relations since last December 1.

Mr. Breen will have augmented staff and facilities and his findings with respect to motion pictures, scripts and the like will be hereafter subject to review only on appeal to the company presidents of the member concerns of the MPPDA in New York, the distribution chiefs. Previously the Studio Relations Committee rulings were subject to appeal to a committee made up of Hollywood studio heads.

New Seal for Approved Films

Under the new plan of operation, approved Hollywood productions will carry, in place of the present seal of MPPDA, a similar medallion stating it to be an approved production and bearing a serial number. Appropriate provisions have been adopted protecting the use of the new seal.

Meanwhile this program of procedure was presented by Mr. Breen and Martin Quigley, president of Quigley Publications, to the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures of the Catholic church in session in Cincinnati late last week, as forecast in last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald.

The Episcopal Committee has taken cognizance of the announced plans of the industry and through a statement issued in Cincinnati, made public at the end of the session, has given the industry's self-regulative program as much approval and encouragement as such an official pronouncement could contain. The committee's Cincinnati statement follows:

Insist on Wholesome Films

"During the past several months the Catholic Bishops' Committee on Motion Pictures, in cooperation with the authorities of all the dioceses of the country, has been waging a campaign of protest against the destructive moral influence of evil motion pictures. There has been no wish to harm nor destroy the motion picture business, but the evil character of portions of many motion pictures and the low standards of some motion pictures have forced the bishops to take direct and aggressive action in safeguarding the moral well-being of their people.

"These recent activities against motion pictures which offend decency and morality were launched only after years of vain hope that the producers of these pictures would realize the harm being done and take positive steps to correct the trend. The committee is not hostile to the entertainment business; in fact, it recognizes entertainment as a virtual necessity in modern life, but such entertainment must be of a wholesome character, and to that objective the committee has earnestly addressed its efforts.

"The Legion of Decency, whose members pledge themselves not to patronize theatres showing offensive films, has gathered to its banner many thousands of adherents wherever it has been introduced. Plans are being developed to extend its membership to every town and city in the United States and to invite all persons in sympathy with its purpose to lend their support.

Cite Curtailed Patronage

"The committee has been informed that, through the loyal cooperation of our Catholic people, together with a widespread response on the part of many others who believe that a purification of the cinema is an outstanding moral issue of the day, the motion picture theatres have suffered a severe curtailment of patronage. This curtailment has prompted the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to send Mr. Martin Quigley of New York City and Mr. Joseph I. Breen of Hollywood to the meeting of the Episcopal committee today.

"The companies which are members of the above-named organization are reputed to be responsible for approximately 90 per cent of the films produced in the United States. These companies are: RKO Pictures Corp., Fox Film Corp., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp., Paramount Pictures Corp., Warner Brothers, First National Pictures Corp., Columbia Pictures Corp., Hal Roach, Educational Pictures, Inc., Universal Pictures Corp., United Artists, Inc., Walt Disney Prod., Pathe, Inc., Principal Pictures, Inc.

MPPDA Plan Discussed

"The representatives of the association submitted a proposal covering certain specific revisions of the industry's plan of self-regulation.

"The committee has been pleased to receive these representatives and to learn from them of the renewed efforts toward enforcement of the industry's plan of self-regulation, effective as of July 1, 1934, which have been decided upon. The committee is informed that the producers' jury in Hollywood, a part of the original machinery of enforcement of the production code, which was adopted in April, 1930, has been abandoned and that additional local authority has been assigned to the code administration, which administration is to be given an amplified personnel. In the past the producers' jury has functioned ineffectively.

"The final responsibility for the character of the motion pictures to be issued by the organized industry has been accepted by the board of directors of the organized industry. The court of last resort in the settlement of any disputes which may arise between the studios and the code administration will be this board of directors.

"The Episcopal committee views with favor the renewed efforts of the organized industry to discharge its responsibility of issuing only such motion pictures as may conform with reasonable moral standards. The committee believes that the production code if given adequate enforcement will materially and constructively influence the character of screen entertainment. Hence it is disposed to lend encouragement and cooperation to these efforts, which it hopes will achieve the promised results.

National Committee Approved at Meeting of Catholic Hierarchy; 'Council of Legion of Decency' Is Indorsed

Campaign Will Continue

"Our Catholic people, however, are counselled that in the long run the desired result of a wholesome screen can be assured only through unfailing opposition to evil motion pictures. The widespread interest in and loyal support of our campaign of protest must be maintained in order that the producers of motion pictures may constantly be aware of the demand for clean entertainment. The salacious and otherwise objectionable type of motion picture must be avoided.

"The Episcopal committee hopes that the results of the organized industry's renewed efforts looking toward adequate self-regulation will be followed by an adequate moral improvement in the pictures shown, and thus it is hoped that the Catholic Bishops may be relieved of what otherwise will be the imperative necessity of continuing indefinitely and of extending the campaign of protest."

National Committee Named

The Episcopal committee approved of a national committee of priests, members of which are as follows: Rt. Rev. Mgr. Hugh L. Lamb, D.D., Chancellor, Archdiocese of Philadelphia; Rev. Edward Roberts Moore, Ph.D., head of the Division of Social Action, Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York; Rev. George F. Johnson, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Education, Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C., and executive secretary, Department of Education, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Rev. F. G. Dineen, S.J., rector St. Ignatius Church, Chicago; Rev. John J. Devlin, St. Victor's Church, West Hollywood, Cal.

The formation of a "Council of the Legion of Decency" was approved.

Meanwhile in New York, Mr. Hays con-

Other Churches Join in Crusade

Support of the Roman Catholic "Legion of Decency" campaign against "unclean" motion pictures was volunteered this week by clergymen representing millions of churchgoers of the Jewish, Evangelican, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian Endeavor, Baptist, Episcopalian and a dozen other Protestant congregations.

The Federal Council of Churches, a union of 25 Protestant denominations, in session at Oxford, Ohio, last Saturday, decided to nuite with the Catholic Church in the campaign.

The executive committee of the Federal Council at a subsequent meeting in New York set the third Sunday in October as the date when all Protestant pastors will be urged to present the motion picture problem to their congregations, declaring the time had come for drastic action.

Rabbi David Philipson, a leader of the Central Congress of American Rabbis, wrote Archbishop John T. McNicholas, a sponsor of the "Legion of Decency," that "You are performing an incalculable service in the cause of clean and decent recreation." The Congress of Rabbis and the Synagogue Council of America already are considering action of their own, Dr. Philipson advised.

The Atlantic district of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod, in conference at Albany, New York, heard Dr. Theodore Graebner, of St. Louis, express the opinion that, "the industry must learn there is force behind the action for suppression of the open sewer of America."

The western district of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod, assembled at St. Louis, resolved that the motion picture industry's "utter disregard of complaints and protests" is to be deeply deplored.

Buffalo Group Endorses Drive

Buffalo's Protestant Council of Churches endorsed the efforts of the Catholic diocese of Buffalo and the "Legion of Decency" to obtain "clean pictures." Definite action to join the movement will be taken up shortly by the Buffalo General Pastors' Association. Meanwhile, the Council pledged its aid to the "Legion."

Protestants in Chicago launched a movement to enlist in the movement. One million Protestants in the Chicago area will be asked to cooperate through a pledge of non-attendance.

Baptists Criticize Films

In a letter sent by Dr. B. F. Lamb, secretary of the Ohio Council of Churches, to Protestant pastors in the state, all Protestants are invited to join with the Catholic churches in the crusade. Petitions accompanying the letters are to be sent by the clergymen to Dr. B. O. Skinner, state censor head, requesting the censors to ban in their entirety all "off-color" pictures, on the grounds that mere "pruning" is not sufficient to correct the "evils." Dr. Lamb further pointed out in his letter to the Protestant pastors that more than 500 exhibitors in Ohio had expressed a desire to cooperate with the churches in the movement.

Reverend Jesse Halsey, Presbyterian, of Cincinnati, publicly praised the Catholics for their stand against pictures. "We need a national housecleaning," he said, "and we need some form of cooperative attack on this, the most crying problem of our time."

Active support of the principles of the "Legion of Decency" was recommended to the Christian Endeavor Union in convention over the week end at Detroit.

The Hartford (Protestant) Federation of Churches adopted a resolution commending the efforts of the "Legion of Decency."

The Baptist Ministers' Conference, meeting at New Orleans, criticized motion pictures.

The Presbytery of Brooklyn-Nassau (N. Y.), meeting in Brooklyn on Monday, "heartily endorsed" the Catholic Church, the Federal Churches of Christ and the Central Council of American Rabbis, for their protests against motion pictures. The churchmen pledged their support of the movement and decided to urge their parishioners to patronize only those theatres that offer "wholesome" programs.

Clergymen of the Philadelphia Federation of Churches were called upon to support the "League of Decency" and to urge their members to refrain from attending "unwholesome" pictures.

Rev. Henry Gruber, addressing the 58th annual convention of the western district of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod, held at Clayton, Missouri, urged the church to take a stand against "immoral" pictures, which he charged constitute "one of the greatest dangers that threaten the young people of the Lutheran church." Before adjournment, the convention resolved to ask pastors to urge churchgoers not to patronize "indecent" films.

The Methodist Protestant Church, meeting at Westminster, Maryland, with delegates in attendance from Maryland, Delaware, Philadelphia and Washington, denounced "as enemies of God and society" the makers of :"bad" films, and adopted a resolution to continue to "list motion pictures among modern evils as long as they continue to exalt the gangster and glorify the woman with a questionable past."

The Ohio State Synod of the Presbyterian Church, in session at Wooster, Ohio, voted to inaugurate a nationwide program designed to "improve permanently the moral tone of the motion picture," and, furthermore, to urge churches to use petitions registering protests against "salacious" films. Another resolution commended the "Legion of Decency."

currently issued a statement which declared:

"At the quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., action was taken to amend its system of self-regulation in order to eliminate appeals from the decions of the Production Code Administration to the jury of producers in Hollywood.

"Additional local authority has been assigned to the Production Code Administration in Hollywood, of which Joseph I. Breen is the director, and the personnel will be amplified. Any appeal from the decision of the Production Code Administration rests only with the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in New York, which assumes final responsibility for the character of the pictures to be made.

"There is but one answer and one answer only to reasonable objections to pictures, and that is the pictures themselves. It is recognized that the solution of the problem of the right kind of screen entertainment rests solely with the quality of the product and these strengthened arrangements are directed to discharging that responsibility more effectively."

Mr. Breen ends his eastern sojourn this weekend and will be in Hollywood by July 1 to set the revised machinery of control in operation.

Civic Union Asks Control

The Civic Union of St. Louis has decided to extend its campaign against indecent films to many parts of the country.

Decency Campaign Watched Overseas

Echoes of the Catholic Bishops' meeting last week in Cincinnati in connection with the "Legion of Decency" motion picture campaign were heard over the week end in the principal capitals of Europe, with opinion reported divided on the Continent as to the possibilities of the movement being extended to European centers.

In London the Daily Express claimed to have obtained from "a high Vatican source" an outline of instructions reputedly sent by Pope Pius to Roman Catholic clergymen all over the world, urging:

1. Formation of local "Leagues of Decency."
2. Organization of protest meetings against films held by vote to be objectionable.
3. Utilization of the power of boycott.
4. Publication in the whole Catholic press of lists of films under ban.

A subsequent dispatch, from Rome, indicated that the "clean pictures" campaign of the American bishops was not the result of specific instructions from the Pope, but was undertaken on the initiative of the bishops themselves.

Meanwhile, Motion Picture Herald was authoritatively informed that despite published reports to the contrary, the motion picture campaign of protest originated by a committee of Catholic bishops is an independent American effort which was not directed and has not thus far been recognized by the Vatican, although the purposes of the campaign are understood to be favorably regarded at Rome.

That the organized church campaign is in line with the Vatican's policy, was further verified in Osservatore Romano, Vatican newspaper, which editorially praised the American movement and stated that the crusade was being taken up in Europe.

"We are in full accord with the idea," said Leopoldo Zuelo, head of the Italian censorship board. "We are doing our best and will continue to do so to censor immoral films coming from Hollywood. Our percentage of rejection is fifty," he added.

A spokesman for the British Board of Censors, at London, said that rigid censorship of every film shown in Great Britain is accomplishing a "cleaning up" which makes it unlikely that any private action will be taken.

However, the Vatican source mentioned by the Daily Express declared that "Leagues of Decency" would be formed throughout Great Britain.

In Paris the chief censor of the French government and Catholic Church officials, too, were reported to have given "hearty approval" to the American drive.

"Indecency is not needed in the movies," declared Edmund See, head of the French censor board. At the same time M. See gave America a clean bill of health so far as France is concerned, adding that Germany and Italy are worse offenders. However, he continued, "so far as the movement to keep indecency out of the movies is concerned, we are for it."

Hope for an international movement was expressed in Paris at the headquarters of the Catholic Society, according to the press cables.

WARNER TO GET $4,000,000 FROM ERPI AS SEVEN-YEAR FIGHT ENDS

Sound Royalties Settlement. Calls for Payment by Erpi of $2,500,000 in Cash; Warner Books Gain by $2,000,000

Warner Brothers Pictures and Electrical Research Products, of the American Telephone structure, finally signed a peace agreement last week, thereby ending a controversy over sound royalties which for seven years had engaged star legal talent in combat in arbitration chamber and federal court.

Legal Actions Dissolved

Variously reported to have involved some $50,000,000, claimed by the Warners as their share in additional sound recording royalties, the dispute has been the most outstanding since sound started in 1926. Its settlement was effected privately without a court decision and automatically dissolves the various legal actions sponsored by the Warner interests against Erpi and also settles various claims which each held against the other. The Warners will receive from Electrical Research some $4,000,000, and, in addition the books and profits of Warner will benefit by some $2,000,000 as a result of the settlement of Erpi claims against the Warner company. Warner will remain a Western Electric licensee. The following statement was released in New York jointly by the managements of both corporations:

Announces Settlement

"A settlement has been reached of the long-standing controversy between Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc. This controversy began early in 1928 when arbitration proceedings were initiated, relating primarily to the amount of participation of Warner Bros. Pictures' subsidiary, the Vitaphone Corporation, in the royalties received by Electrical Research Products from its motion picture licensees. The controversy has continued in various forms ever since and has resulted in extensive court proceedings.

"The settlement clears accounts of the parties outstanding at various dates and in addition provides for the surrender by the Vitaphone Corporation to Electrical Research of Vitaphone's right to participation in future royalties. In addition to clearing the accounts, Electrical Research pays Warner Brothers $2,500,000 in cash, $1,300,000 in negotiable promissory notes and an amount not to exceed $200,000 payable on certain contingencies.

"The agreement disposes of the arbitration and all litigation between the parties and provides that Warner Brothers Pictures shall remain a licensee of Electrical Research Products."

Warner Brothers later in the week explained to its stockholders that actual decision to effect the settlement came at a special meeting of the board in New York on June 1. The company, in a letter to all stockholders, itemized the $1,500,000 in promissory notes received from Erpi—in addition to $2,500,000 in cash—as a $500,000 note payable April 26, 1935, a similar $500,000 note payable April 26, 1936, and a $300,000 note payable April 26, 1937. All three were signed by Erpi and indorsed by Western Electric.

The $200,000 sum included in the settlement, payment of which depends upon certain contingencies, will not be definitely determined until April 26, 1937.

Warner Books Benefit

"In addition to the above sums" (totaling $4,200,000), the company stated that "the books and records of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and subsidiaries, show a net financial benefit from exchange of mutual releases, amounting to approximately $2,100,000, before provision for federal and state taxes (not yet ascertainable), legal fees and minor adjustments."

By the exchange of mutual releases between the parties, all claims for indebtedness and damages to Warner and its subsidiaries against Electrical Research, Western Electric and American Telephone have been discharged. Likewise claims of Erpi against Warner and subsidiaries are discharged, except that as to certain claims the release runs to Jan. 1, 1934, and as to other claims, to April 1, 1934. "All litigation between the parties has been terminated," the Warner statement added.

Carried to Federal Courts

After some four years of conflict, waged principally behind locked doors of arbitration chambers before noted legal talent acting as arbitrators, and costing both corporations $1,000 a day, the dispute, late in 1931, finally was shaped to revolve around the specific charge that Erpi, Western Electric's sale subsidiary, had not paid Warner-Vitaphone all the royalties due on disc recording by Western Electric's system, in accordance with the agreement entered into when Warner-Vitaphone undertook in 1926 the commercialization of Erpi's then new talking picture device.

The battle for a time tended to repeat in pattern the early history of the great patents battle which tore the industry apart when the litigation reached the courts. Determined at the start not to try the case in the newspapers, guards were placed about the arbitration chambers in the elaborate executive offices of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, at 195 Broadway, New York, to prevent any reportorial activities by the press. The arbitrators met intermittently variously during 1931 and 1932, when Warner suddenly abandoned arbitration and took the fight into the federal courts at Wilmington, Delaware.

The contract under which the Warner claim was based is one of April, 1927. The Warner claim originally was centered in the contention that Erpi's method of licensing other producing companies and associated practices were contrary to the intent of the contract. To this Erpi entered a blanket denial, and offered at the same time to show that Warner failed to be always actuated by the clauses and spirit of this now historical document. Contrary to the general belief, Warner has been receiving royalty payments from Erpi at the end of each year, and is said to have approximated $900,000 for a recent year. Warner, however, has claimed that the payments were not sufficient.

Warner Will Continue as Erpi Licensee; All Litigation Is Disposed of by Agreement Reached Outside of Court

Other Companies Had Rejected Sound

Specifically, the contract provided in substance that in return for the production, theatrical and exploitation facilities of Warner-Vitaphone, Western Electric, later acting through Electrical Research Products, would pay Warner 37 1-2 per cent of eight per cent of Erpi's gross receipts on disc recording. This method of recording long since has been abandoned in favor of all-film recording.

At the time the agreement was entered into in 1927, "The Jazz Singer" had not yet demonstrated what the talking picture was to become. That achievement revolutionized motion picture entertainment in the fall of 1927. It was in the spring of 1926 that Warner Brothers agreed with Western to be the means by which the invention should be brought before the public.

Other companies already had rejected this new child of science. Ultimately approached by Walter J. Rich, Wall Street envoy, whom Western Electric had engaged, the Warner brothers deemed themselves in a position to gamble on the outcome.

Studio Made Laboratory

The Vitagraph studio of Warner Brothers was turned into a practical laboratory for the actual application of what Western Electric—more specifically, its parent company's Bell Laboratories—had contrived theoretically. In addition, Warners rented Hammerstein's Manhattan theatre in New York for further production of pictures with sound, and by the middle of the summer of 1926, a full-length dramatic film, "Don Juan," was ready to be run through projectors in synchronization with a highly amplified phonographic reproduction of interpretative orchestral music.

Then Came "The Jazz Singer"

Shown to the public in New York on August 6, along with a promising short in which the operatic tenor, Martinelli, was heard as well as seen singing, "Don Juan" failed to convince film leaders.

Nevertheless, production continued throughout 1926 and into the next year, realizing some encouragement in a peculiar

UNION OFFICES RAIDED IN GRAND JURY INQUIRY

Projectionists Local 306 and Empire Group Are Visited by Police Seeking Evidence in Sabotage of Independents

The intricate affairs of projectionists' Local 306, New York, of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators' were brought once more into the limelight of public print this week after a sensational raid by detectives, made at the instigation of assistant district attorney William E. Kleinman of Brooklyn, on the two New York offices of the local and on the office of the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union in Brooklyn.

Three separate squads of detectives descended simultaneously on the offices, armed with "forthwith subpoenas" and orders from Mr. Kleinman to bring back evidence for the Brooklyn grand jury's inquiry into bombing and sabotage of independently operated theatres.

The raids Monday were staged after several months of exhaustive inquiry by the district attorney's office into disorders growing out of labor disputes between exhibitors and projectionists, and Mr. Kleinman said Monday that the action taken by his office was only the "beginning of a thorough inquiry into union activities."

On Tuesday supreme court Justice Peter B. Smith in Brooklyn signed an order directing district attorney Kleinman to show cause why the books, papers and documents seized in the raid should not be returned to the offices of Local 306.

For several months past there has been widespread agitation and general dissension in the ranks of the membership of Local 306 over the administration of Harry Sherman, president and "chief organizer." More than a year ago Mr. Sherman succeeded Sam Kaplan, who was ousted from the presidency of 306, and is currently serving a prison term on charges of coercion.

Dissatisfaction with Sherman

Dissatisfaction with Mr. Sherman's handling of the local's affairs appears to revolve chiefly around his inability to satisfactorily explain the disposition of approximately $1,000,000 of the local's funds. Added to that, Mr. Sherman, until the past week, was receiving a salary of something like $20,000 annually. This the courts reduced last week to $1,800.

The district attorney's office on Tuesday declined to reveal the specific causes for its descent on 306 headquarters, other than to state that it was a part of the investigation.

This stage of the investigation apparently has borne considerable fruit, as the various raiding parties arrested more than 30 officials and employees and departed with a police van loaded with books and records, inviting the persons subpoenaed to accompany them to the grand jury room in the Brooklyn Central Courts Building.

The three separate groups from the different offices all met in the jury rooms and as books and records were being unloaded, witnesses signed waivers of immunity or indicated their refusal. Among those refusing were Joseph Blatt, business agent of Empire State Union; Charles Beckman, financial secretary of Local 306, and Arthur Farkash, Empire State's president.

Once Cleared in Homicide Case

Last year Mr. Farkash, together with James Adesso, vice-president of Empire State, and Mr. Blatt, were exonerated in magistrate's court on homicide charges in connection with the death of James McArthur, a night watchman in a Brooklyn theatre. McArthur was fatally beaten by a group of men who demolished the theatre's furnishings. Labor difficulties had been current at the theatre after the management had employed operators who were members of the Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union. Previously their operators had been members of Local 306 and Empire State.

The district attorney's office submitted testimony to the grand jury regarding purported transactions between the union and gangsters. The name of Dutch Schultz, notorious New York racketeer and former beer baron, appears with that of other wellknown underworld characters. Last year the names of Frank Spitale and Irving Bitz, go-betweens in the Lindbergh kidnapping case, were linked with 306 on somewhat similar charges. Currently, it is alleged, an underworld chieftain received $7,500 from one of the unions. Also, it is stipulated by persons "unknown" in the membership of the unions, a detective agency was given $25,000 for purposes "unknown," while lawyers, too, received exorbitant fees. More than $200,000 has been spent by Local 306 during the past year on what Mr. Sherman has explained to those who sought to question him was "rehabilitation" work.

Efforts on Tuesday to reach anyone of the principals involved proved unavailing. At Mr. Sherman's office all questions were referred to Mr. James Finn, publisher and editor of the International Projectionist, who, he himself explained, always acts as spokesman for Mr. Sherman. Said Mr. Finn:

"Mr. Sherman's attitude is that it's a deliberate frameup between the Kaplan faction in the union, the district attorney and the theatre owners. They had no right to break in on the unions' offices with machine guns, no warrants and no subpoenas. Why, they didn't even give a receipt for the records."

Mr. Sherman on Monday night had described the incident as "a lot of baloney,"

"Another One of Those Things"

"Just another one of those things which was tried in Washington," declared Mr. Sherman. "The story has been on the ice the last two weeks. The district attorney had no complaint or warrant and the papers he took amounted to nothing."

A protest is to be made by Sherman's attornies against the district attorney for forcibly entering the union's office without a warrant.

"The whole thing has been inspired by exhibitors at odds with the union," said Mr. Sherman.

Attempts to reach Mr. Farkash at the headquarters of the Empire State union met with the reply, "There's no one around here and I don't think there will be for a few days."

Studios Act to Revise Product

Paramount, Warner, Goldwyn, MGM and Radio Tuesday announced plans to revise certain pictures currently either in production or, in one instance, completed. The move was stated to have been made as a direct result of the religious agitation throughout the country against films.

In the case of Mr. Goldwyn, "The Barbary Coast," starring Anna Sten and Gary Cooper, was put on the "shelf," and while the picture had not actually gone into production several months had been spent on preparation. Paramount announced that, after a preview of the new Mae West film, "It Ain't No Sin," by the New York State Censor Board, the picture would be revised.

MGM abandoned "The Postman Rings Twice" and "Professional Correspondent," screen name for the novel, "Man and Wife." MGM also pulled back Jean Harlow's "Born to Be Kissed" for "laundering." Similar treatment was given "The Green Hat," and Greta Garbo's next, "The Painted Veil," is being carefully surveyed.

Radio is revising "The Fountain" script. Warner is remaking two reels of "Madame Du Barry."

Changes from original screen treatments are being made at virtually all studios.

Four Hal Roach Features Added to 32 Short Subjects

Hal Roach returned to Culver City Wednesday after conferring in New York with MGM distribution executives on his schedule for 1934-35. In addition to 32 two-reel comedies, Mr. Roach's feature program will be increased to four, two starring Laurel and Hardy and two to be known as "Marquee Pictures." In one of the Marquee features will be featured Charley Chase, Buster Keaton, Our Gang, Irvin S. Cobb and other comedians.

In keeping with the reputed trend away from double features in some sections, Mr. Roach, like the Educational interests, has decided to increase his short subject negative costs by 20 per cent.

Warns of "Boycott"

Producers cannot afford to offend 20,000,000 American motion picture goers, the Rev. Russell Sullivan, S.P., warned in a stormy session of the House of Representatives in Boston last week. Rev. Sullivan, appearing before the legislature at the request of Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, said a boycott of two feature films a month would almost bankrupt "even the great picture companies."

'GRINDS' IN SHADOW OF PARAMOUNT

Dozen Theatres Where Bernhardts and Irvings Once Trod Now Play Double Features at Dime a Throw

Beneath the towering structures of New York's Empire State and Chrysler buildings and directly within the shadows of the mighty Paramount Building—which houses the spacious Paramount theatre in Times Square—a dozen "grind" houses ply their double and, sometimes, triple bill trade. The majority of these once were legitimate theatres, boasting proud names in the world of the drama, houses where stepped the Bernhardts, Terrys and Irvings of the earlier day, over whose stages now flit the ghostly figures of the motion picture screen.

The New 42nd Street

Further, these theatres supplied the backbone for that institution once famed for its glittering lights, its brilliant "first nights," with their attendant sartorial splendor and dignity—42nd Street. During the depression, the magic aura surrounding the "street" faded perceptibly and strange things happened: individuals with apparently but little appreciation of "art," "background," "tradition" or "culture," overnight turned 42nd Street into a gaudy hurly-burly of tinsel.

Unshaven barkers in remnants of what once were brilliant commissionaires' uniforms shout their wares—"Come on in, folks, and see a three-hour show for 10 cents! Only a dime, folks, only a dime!"

Cautious inquiry last week revealed that most of these "grinds" have regular patrons —chiefly among the unemployed—who stand in line as early as 9 A. M., waiting for the box-offices to open. Then they go in, as one barker said, sit down, manage to stay awake during the first show and spend the rest of the day asleep. Periodically, it may be noted, those patrons who prefer to sleep are prodded into comparative wakefulness by ushers apparently appointed for that sole purpose.

"After spending five or six hours in the show," the barker continued, "the guys go home an' curse the employment situation, the administration down at Washin'ton an' capitalism. Poisonally, I don't hold much wid capitalism, but dese guys ain't really got no kick comin'."

Eight Once Stages of Stars

Seven of the theatres are on 42nd Street itself, between Seventh avenue, and Eighth, with the remainder scattered, some on Eighth, one on Seventh and one on the corner of 42nd and Broadway. Eight of them were once legitimate theatres.

Prices at the majority of the houses vary according to the time of day, but all have a 10-cent admission up to 1 P.M. After that, it may be 15 cents until six o'clock and 20 cents thereafter, with the scale sometimes going as high as 25 cents, but a dyed-in-the-wool bargain hunter need pay "only one thin dime,' if he gets there early enough.

Morning prices, as checked last week, reveal the following illuminating statistics:

Sam H. Harris	10 cents
Liberty	10 "
Selwyn	10 "
Times Square	10 "
*Eltinge	25 "
*Minsky's	25 "
Ideal	10 "
Times	10 "
Stanley	15 "
Geo. M. Cohan	10 "
Wallack's	10 "

Burlesque. The Eltinge varies between burlesque and double features.*

Of these, the Sam H. Harris, Liberty, Selwyn, Times Square, Eltinge, Times, Wallack's and Geo. M. Cohan theatres all were once legitimate houses. Wallack's currently is dark.

In Times Square itself during the past few months have been two theatres—the Gaiety and the Globe—which have maintained dual bill policies at prices ranging from 10 cents early in the morning to 25 and 35 cents after 6 P.M. These two, however, are now showing first run pictures. The Gaiety was the theatre in which the Fox film, "Cavalcade," had its world premiere.

The New "Tin Can Alley"

A few samples of the product being offered one week at some of the theatres in question, will give an idea of what the new "tin can alley" may be like.

At one theatre, on the same bill, were playing "Hell's Highway" and "Sailor's Holiday." The former was generally released in the summer of 1932, while there are no records available on the release date of "Sailor's Holiday.'

Another house was playing "No More Women" and "The Worst Woman in Paris." At a third were "Come on Marines" and "Spitfire," both comparatively recent releases, but the admission price for this bill was only 15 cents, as for the majority of the theatres in that vicinity.

It's the 1934 sound version of the street of bright lights, where the Barrymores thrilled countless audiences in "The Jest," where Sir Henry Irving played "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," and where countless legendaries of a moribund legitimate theatre were looked upon as gods and played in a regal setting.

CODE 'PLAINTS FILED BUT NO ONE ANSWERS

Compliance Officer Calhoun, of the Los Angeles area for the NRA, was asked recently if the studios were complying with all requirements of the Motion Picture Code.

"Some complaints for violation have been filed against the studios," said the officer.

"Have any hearings been held about these complaints," some one asked the Compliance Officer.

"No," said the deputy, "the studios have been advised and notified to appear here, but to date no one has shown up."

French Increase Duty on Imports

The French government on Tuesday extended its quota decree to December 31, 1934, allowing 94 "dubbed" versions to be imported during the second half of the year. This number is one more than the total allowed for the first six months to June 30.

At the same time, the import duty on negatives was increased from three to five francs per metre. Extension of the existing quota for the second half of 1934 is considered sufficiently liberal to meet the requirements of the American industry in point of dubbed versions, which failed to consume the 93 allowed up to June 30.

Among the provisions of the new decree is a clause which exempts all animated cartoons from restrictions.

Allied Owners Company Seeks a Reorganization

Francis T. Pender, president of Allied Owners Corporation, bankrupt subsidiary of New York Investors, Inc., has filed in the New York federal court a petition for reorganization of the company under the new bankruptcy law.

The petition indicates the cash position of the firm as having increased to $601,708, a gain of $260,940. The major assets are set forth as Loew's King, the Pitkin and Paramount, all Brooklyn theatres; Loew's Valencia, Jamaica; one theatre in Birmingham, Ala., one in Fremont, O., and one in Glens Falls, N. Y. No adjudication has yet been made, according to the petition, of a claim of $23,364,726 against the Paramount Corporation, also in bankruptcy.

Rian James Promoted

Rian James, writer, has been promoted to associate producer at Universal. Russ Columbo has been signed to a new starring contract.

Firm Changes Name

Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation, a Delaware corporation, has changed its name at Dover, Del., to Theatre Equipment Contracts Corporation, New York.

FEATURES PLANNED EXCEED 600 MARK

26 Independents Announce 243, Seven Major Companies 350, With Columbia Still to Report; More Color in Short Product

With but one of the larger companies—Columbia—yet to have its 1934-35 sales convention, the motion picture industry this week laid its final plans for the business of selling and buying motion pictures for the new season. Seven major companies to date have promised 350 features for the approaching cycle and have detailed the title, story and cast leaders for 277 of them.

At the same time, 26 independent producers and distributors have announced 243 features for 1934-35, giving exhibitors thus far a total of 593 pictures, or with Columbia's expected 40 a grand total of 633, from which to chose for new season playing time. However, Columbia has made no official announcement and several independents also have issued no definite programs for 1934-35.

Higher Admission Drives Awaited

Small exhibitors this week were awaiting the outcome of three movements having a direct bearing on buying and selling for the 1934-35 schedules. One of these is the Warner campaign for a nationwide scaling up of admission prices and a drive to eliminate duals; second, MGM's indications that new season contracts may carry a clause stipulating a 15-cent minimum admission, and the third is Educational's declaration that duals are on the wane and, therefore, Educational's 1934-35 budget will be increased 20 per cent.

Protests against new zoning schedules in the Los Angeles territory were voiced at a meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association on Monday night in Hollywood. The schedule, as drawn, penalizes the showing of double features, and Ken Goldsmith, speaking for the association, said exhibitors should be allowed to operate their businesses "without the influence of monopolistic bodies." The association will launch a nationwide campaign in opposition to that of Warner to sustain double bills, he said.

Warner has openly declared for a drive to raise admission scales, and, as soon as the necessary organization is possible, will launch it. Coincidentally, the company will seek elimination of double featuring by withholding product from houses charging less than 15 cents for matinees and 20 cents in the evening.

MGM's new season contracts may stipulate a 15-cent minimum admission in most territories, it was said this week, despite the fact that Felix F. Feist, general sales manager, does not regard 10-cent houses as "any special problem for the future."

Cites Business Improvement

In Chicago this week, Mr. Feist predicted that a 15-cent minimum for the 1934-35 season would be entirely justified by continued business improvement the next six months, and that the same factor automatically will eliminate 10-cent houses in most localities. He pointed out that the Administration still is committed to public works projects and relief programs which will put $1,500,000,000 more into general circulation before the end of the year, and as a result, stimulated public spending will make it possible for the exhibitors themselves to initiate the movement away from 10-cent admissions.

Mr. Feist indicated that double billing is purely an admission of weakness on the part of the exhibitor and is "ruinous to business."

In the short subject field, plans indicated that color will be used more than ever before. More than double the number of shorts made in Technicolor for 1933-34 will be in the new season schedules, Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, Technicolor president, said last week before leaving New York for Hollywood. Aside from this color process as it is to be used in 1934-35 feature pictures, five cartoon makers have contracted for the use of the process and two others currently are negotiating. United Artists, Columbia, Universal, Warner and MGM have signed contracts for Technicolor in short product, Dr. Kalmus said.

Additional Product Details

Further product announcements were made known during the week:

Beacon Productions plans to make six melodramas on the Coast for 1934-35 release, with Syndicate Exchanges handling distribution in the New York territory.

Columbia was considering holding its second regional sales convention in Chicago, July 7-9, at the Drake, the first being set for July 2-4 in Atlantic City. Edward G. Robinson has been given a contract for one feature, as yet untitled, to be directed by Howard Hawks. A new starring combination will have Jack Holt and Edmund Lowe teamed. Claudette Colbert will be presented again by Columbia, following her success opposite Clark Gable in "It Happened One Night."

Three pictures to be announced in Atlantic City and Chicago are "Feather in Her Hat," "Party Wire" and "The Girl Friend," the last named being a musical to star Lupe Velez.

Columbia will sponsor Tim McCoy in another series of outdoor feature dramas. Four comedy players signed in two-reel subjects are Leon Errol, Walter Catlett, Harry Langdon and Andy Clyde.

Fox Release Schedule for Quarter

Fox Film Corporation announced its tentative release schedule for the first quarter, as follows: August: "Grand Canary," "Wanted," "The Cat's-Paw" (Harold Lloyd), and "The World Moves On"; September: 'The Dude Ranger," "Servants' Entrance," "Charlie Chan in London," "Serenade" and "Marie Galante"; October: "Judge Priest," "Life Begins at Forty," "Caravan" and "State versus Elinor Norton." Four of the pictures in this group already have been completed, four are in production and the remainder are being prepared for early shooting.

Freuler Film Associates plans production of 16 features, including eight westerns and eight melodramas.

Gaumont-British made known its plans for American distribution of 12 specially selected films designed for the American market, with an abundance of American and British star names. First is "Along Came Sally," starring Cicely Courtneidge, wellknown both here and abroad, and supported by the American seriocomic, Sam Hardy. Next is "Channel Crossing," starring Constance Cummings, with Nigel Bruce, Anthony Bushell and Matheson Lang in support. James Gleason, Charlotte Greenwood and Cyril Maude will be starred in "Orders Is Orders," a comedy satirizing an American motion picture company. "The Murder Party," a comedy-thriller, will star Leslie Banks, while "Friday the 13th" will have Frank Lawton, Ursula Jeans—the boy and girl of "Cavalcade"—Gordon Harker and Jessie Matthews. In "Dick Turpin, Outlaw," Victor McLaglen will re-enact the career of the famous highwayman, while in support of him will be Jane Carr, Frank Vosper and Jimmy Finlayson, an American comedy favorite. "Strike," a drama, will star Leslie Banks and Carol Goodner, with Donald Calthrop and Frank Vosper in support. Cicely Courtneidge will appear also in "The Woman in Command," with Edward Everett Horton co-featured. "Sleeping Car" will star Madeleine Carroll and Ivor Novello; "Just Smith," Tom Walls and Carol Goodner; "It's a Boy," Edward Everett Horton and Leslie Henson, and "The Arson Ring" will feature Leslie Banks, Carol Goodner and Frank Cellier.

181 MGM Short Features

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's short subject program for 1934-35, supplementing its group of 52 feature releases, will consist of 181 one and two-reel subjects. These will be produced at the Hal Roach studio and the MGM Culver City studios, and include 104 issues of Hearst Metrotone News and FitzPatrick Traveltalks. Approximately 35 per cent of all short subject product will be made in Technicolor. Eight FitzPatrick Traveltalks will be made in color, an innovation, as will six MGM musical revues and 13 musical cartoons.

The entire list of MGM short product for 1934-35 comprises three Laurel and Hardy two-reel comedies, in addition to their full-length features; eight Charley Chase comedies of two reels each; seven special two-reel comedy subjects starring Irvin S. Cobb, from material prepared by himself; eight Thelma Todd-Patsy Kelly co-starring comedies; six "Our Gang" two-reelers; six two-reel musical revues and 13 one-reel MGM musical cartoons, both in Technicolor; 12 Pete Smith Oddities and six Pete Smith Goofy Movies; eight FitzPatrick Traveltalks, and biweekly issues of Hearst Metrotone News, with Edwin C. Hill as the explanatory Globe-Trotter. Mr. Hill's broadcasts on "The Human Side of the News" have proved one of the most popular of all radio features. During the coming season Hearst Metrotone will operate independently of its previous association with Fox Movietone News.

Eight from Pinnacle

Pinnacle Productions will handle eight features, to be produced on the Coast, Jack Trop, president, announced.

RKO Radio Pictures has started work on two features on its 1934-35 program and expects to put five more into work before July 16. The two currently underway are "The Fountain" and "The Age of Innocence." Those scheduled for an early start are "The Gay Divorce," "Wednesday's Child," "Richest Girl" and "Anne of Green Gables." "To the Victor," a story based on the life of Sir Basil Zaharoff, has been added for the new season.

An augmented 1934-35 program was made public last week by Harry Goetz, president of Reliance Pictures, releasing through United Artists. The company will make three in addition to "The Count of Monte Cristo," "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" and "Catalina." One of the additional features may be made in New York. "The Count of Monte Cristo," starring Robert Donat and Elissa Landi, has been completed.

Universal has bought the Homer Croy story, "Lady Tubbs," for the 1934-35 program, to be produced by Lou Ostrow.

Using New Camera Device

Mascot Pictures is using a newly purchased camera device, called the "velocitator," in its production of "Young and Beautiful." The device is a development of the camera "dolly," and is electrically controlled.

Fund Proposed To Retire Paramount Bank Obligations

Holders of the 3,380,121 shares of Paramount Publix Corporation stock outstanding, under a proposal said to be incorporated in the plan of reorganization of the company now being worked out, may be assessed on the basis of $2 a share to create a fund for retirement of the company's bank obligations in the reorganization.

Such a proposal would provide a cash fund from which $5,000,000 would be paid, pro rata, to the 12 banks which provided Paramount, through its subsidiary, Film Productions Corp., with a $13,000,000 credit fund in 1932. This transaction currently is in litigation.

Current valuation of Paramount's assets shows approximately $100,000,000, a markdown of $50,000,000 from the $150,000,000 estimated at the time of the receivership in January, 1933. Liabilities are reported at an estimated $60,000,000, of which $25,000,000 is owed to bondholders, $13,000,000 to banks and $22,000,000 to general creditors.

In expectation that Paramount will be reorganized by autumn or early winter at the latest, deals with the theatre operating partners are being renewed by the trustees for terms of less than one year. This policy will permit the heads of the reorganized company to make their own permanent operating deals or to operate theatres themselves.

Paramount expects to gross $20,000,000 abroad the coming season, George J. Schaefer, general manager, told the sales convention.

In New York, reports were published to the effect that Charles E. Richardson, one of the three trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount, had resigned. Mr. Richardson on Wednesday explained the reports as follows:

"After serving for nearly 14 months as a trustee of Paramount Publix, a number of purely personal reasons have made it necessary for me to consider whether it will be possible for me to remain in the situation for the additional time which will be required to conclude the matter. A definite conclusion will be reached by July 10, however."

Stockholders and creditors of Paramount will meet the morning of July 10 before U. S. district judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York to determine whether the appointment of Mr. Richardson, Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake as temporary trustees will be made permanent, the move coming under the provisions of the new bankruptcy act.

Circuit Office Moved

The Paramount theatre district of Upper New York State will have headquarters in Poughkeepsie, under supervision of George Walsh, operating partner, and Harold Greenberg, booker. Headquarters were formerly maintained in New York City.

Sells Distribution Interest

E. L. Walton has sold an interest in Majestic Pictures distribution for the Northwest to Art Adamson, former Portland salesman for Universal, who will be a partner in the Portland district only.

PLAQUE IS PRESENTED BY MONTREAL MAYOR

Government and Civic Leaders Participate at Ceremonies Honoring Winners of Round Table Plaque for Exploitation

Noticeable improvement in both the caliber and activity in theatre merchandising in Montreal was cited at the presentation to Manager Gene Curtis and advertising Manager Ken Finlay of the Palace Theatre, of the Martin Quigley Awards for May, sponsored by the Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Mayor Camillien Houde, who combines a forceful leadership with ready wit to make him one of Canada's most colorful personalities, made the presentation.

It was the first time that a Montreal mayor had appeared in person at a theatrical gathering, and the conservative Gazette made a radical departure from precedent when it printed a picture as well as an eight-inch news story of the event, participated in by government and civic leaders of Canada, including a number of consuls.

W. J. C. Sutton, president of the Advertising Club of Montreal, presided, with more than 250 present at the Mount Royal hotel for the event. Colonel John Cooper, head of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, was present from Toronto to introduce Mayor Houde.

The entire proceedings were broadcast over a network from Station CKAC, operated by La Presse, leading newspaper of Montreal. Newsreel men from the Associated Screen News "covered" the event pictorially.

Musicians Favor Clean Films Drive

The American Federation of Musicians, in annual convention in Cleveland last week, went on record as favoring the move for clean pictures, and advocated the combination policy of pictures and stage presentations at motion picture theatres.

Attending the 39th annual meeting at the Hotel Hollenden were 351 delegates from every state. There was one woman delegate, Mrs. Fanny Benson of Marion, Ohio, secretary to the business manager of the Marion local.

This year's officers and board of directors were reelected as follows: president, Joseph N. Webber, New York; vice-president, C. L. Bagley, Los Angeles; secretary, William J. Kerngood, Newark, N. J.; treasurer, H. E. Brenton, Boston. On the executive committee are: C. A. Weaver, Des Moines; A. C. Hayden, Washington, D. C.; A. A. Greenbaum, San Francisco; James C. Petrillo, Chicago; and J. E. Jarrett, Toronto.

Delegates selected to attend the American Federation of Labor convention in San Francisco are: Edward Carnavan, New York; Charles L. Bagley, Los Angeles; C. A. Weaver, Des Moines; Otto Kapl, Cleveland, and Vincent Castronovo, Providence. Selection of a city for next year's convention has been left in the hands of the executive committee for later decision.

U. S. Studying Fox Theatre Deal

Investigation of possible anti-trust law violations in the proposed acquisition of the Fox Metropolitan circuit by Loew and Warner was launched Tuesday by the department of justice when Albert J. Law, special investigator for the department in New York, was assigned to the case.

If the proposed acquisition is effected, Skouras Brothers would lose operating control of 44 of the 87 theatres in the circuit, if the $4,000,000-bid of the two companies is accepted. Counsel for Skouras raised the question of possible anti-trust law violation during a hearing last week before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack when the joint bid was made. A meeting of Fox Metropolitan noteholders was postponed for the third successive time this week.

MGM Launches New Advertising Campaign

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is planning to launch an extensive advertising campaign in general magazines having national circulation, according to Donahue & Co., agency

The campaign will have an annual budget of $1,000,000, and will run in full-page space in five general weekly and 10 general and women's monthly magazines. The campaign will start in August.

French Propaganda Film Would Restore Confidence

A three-minute French film appearing in the theatres of France recently is seen in Paris as an ingenious effort to restore confidence of the people in their government and the nation. In various sections the propaganda subject, in subtitle, indicates that "France gave liberty to the world"; that "France is in the forefront of progress"; that "France fought for civilization," in each case the subtitle followed by appropriate scenes of the French Revolution, scientific effort, the World War.

Disney Goes Satirical

Walt Disney, cartoon producer, has turned from comedy to satire in his latest Silly Symphony production in color, "Who Killed Cock Robin," to be released by United Artists.

SELZNICK FINDS NEW SPIRIT AMONG BRITISH

Budgets Increased as Productions That Never Saw America Gross from $500,000 to $700,000, Producer Discovers

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

Producers in England, with grosses between $500,000 and $700,000 on some of their pictures which never were shown in America, are expanding their production budgets and at the same time building star personalities, David Selznick said on his return to Hollywood from London.

The young producer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was abroad two months looking for local color, fact and fancy, anent "David Copperfield," but also took time to study studio conditions, dip into theatre grosses and sign talent. He brought back a tale over which American producers, smug in their concept of dominance, might well ponder.

Spending "Real Money"

" 'Catherine the Great' and 'The Private Life of Henry the Eighth' are just forerunners of what we can expect of England," said Mr. Selznick.

"Alexander Korda is now engaged in launching a twelve picture program for United Artists, each picture of which will be geared for the American market with American appeal and produced according to the best standards of American methods and technology.

"England, for the first time in her film history, is spending real money on production. The reason is twofold.

"In the first place, some of her own pictures which never even saw the light of day in America, have grossed and are grossing between $500,000 and $700,000, American money, in the British Isles, exclusive of Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

"In the second place, Britain is wisely building star personalities. Why, some of her pictures, with her own big names, gross more in England than some of our biggest American star pictures, and our big stars are very popular abroad. Furthermore, America never even heard of some of these new English stars who are the lead attractions there.

Producers Taking New Life

"The whole picture, as I saw it, was a revelation. The spirit of the industry is different now. Producers have shaken off their lethargy. They can afford to gamble. If they hit, they hit big. If they miss, they can make it up on a succeeding hit. That's what made the American business great.

"Actors and actresses, writing talent and technicians are being paid as much in England as they are here.

"Believe it or not, one popular feminine star gets about $100,000 a picture, American money, even at this rate of exchange.

"Even the English press have made a right-about face in writing about British-produced pictures. Heretofore, the critics wrote caustically, unmercifully kidding about the superiority of American-made films. The critics today are constructive, giving more space to film activities and in many instances waxing enthusiastic about the new spirit sparking from British productions.

"The producers," he said, "may be a bit behind us in the refinements of technique, but the real heart of the picture, the people, the stories, the writing, each is being given profound attention.

"Metro will endeavor to meet this friendly competition by engaging in production in England in the near future."

Finds Theatres Crowded

Mr. Selznick found that London "has put the depression behind it." He said, "The town is gay, crowds jam the theatres and night clubs. The legitimate theatre is having its best season in years. Film houses are getting over a dollar for orchestra seats at the West End, and lines again circle picture houses.

"Britishers, because of the influence of American films, are using our vernacular. In fact, Americans are part and parcel of the present day London scene.

"Nor does a picture need an English background to succeed in England.

"One phase of our product disconcerts the British. That's our crime pictures. Crime films are considered sort of primitive by the English. But when you realize that an English Bobby doesn't even carry a gun, that may explain something."

While abroad, Mr. Selznick signed up Hugh Walpole to work on the script of "David Copperfield," Fritz Lang and Leontine Sagan, directors, and Peter Trent, English boy, as a possible choice for "David Copperfield." He also persuaded Lloyd George to permit the adaptation of his war memoirs.

Private Coast Pools Seen Spreading Paralysis Grip

With the infection of Harold Rosson, Hollywood cameraman, and Ida Lupino, player, with mild cases of infantile paralysis, an epidemic of which is currently sweeping the section, it is believed the use of private swimming pools has something to do with the spread of the infection. The health department warned that water entering the nasal passages interferes with protective membranes, thus making the swimmer susceptible to the infection. Many stars have ceased using their private pools.

Capital Exchanges Merge

The Capital Film Exchanges in Denver and Salt Lake City have merged, and will handle independent product. Harry N. Kerer will be president and manage the Salt Lake branch, and his brother, George, as vice-president, will manage the Denver branch. Abel Davis will be sales manager and secretary-treasurer.

41 Films Will Regale President On Vacation Trip

When President Roosevelt, aboard the U.S.S. Houston, sails south on a vacation voyage which will carry him through the Caribbean to Porto Rico and Hawaii, he will not find the facilities of the great battleship lacking in means for his entertainment. In addition to a vacation library of 300 books, the ship's motion picture library will carry 41 feature pictures and 35 or 40 short subjects, some of them not yet generally released.

The films were supplied by United Artists, Warner, Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO Radio, Universal, Paramount and Columbia. Each film aboard has been checked against a list of more than 300 features Mr. Roosevelt has seen during the past year. Ten of the films carried have been seen by the President, but are to be shown for the special benefit of the ship's crew.

The features aboard the Houston are as follows:

"The Last Gentleman"
"Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back"
"The Affairs of Cellini"
"The Personality Kid"
"Doctor Monica"
"Fog Over Frisco"
"Return of the Terror"
"House on Fifty-sixth Street"
"Baby Take a Bow"
"Handy Andy"
"Spitfire"
"Tarzan and His Mate"
"Twenty Million Sweethearts"
"Nana"
"Manhattan Love Song"
"Melody in Spring"
"Speedwings"
"Half a Sinner"
"Little Miss Marker"
"The World Moves On"
"Murder on the Blackboard"
"Cockeyed Cavaliers"
"Crime Doctor"
"Gambling Lady"
"Mystery of Mr. X"
"Viva Villa"
"Operator 13"
"I'll Tell the World"
"Counsellor at Law"
"Scarlet Empress"
"Most Precious Thing in Life"
"Twentieth Century"
"The Party's Over"
"Murder at the Vanities"
"Many Happy Returns"
"Looking for Trouble"
"The Key"
"Now I'll Tell"
"Sadie McKee"
"Thirty Day Princess"

A special portable loud speaker has been added to the Houston's regular sound equipment, in the event the President experiences any difficulty hearing from his box high above the well deck, where the rest of the audience is seated. The screen, a 9 x 11 foot sail cloth, will be 45 feet from the President's box.

BRITISH USE OF OWN PRODUCT INCREASES

Twice as Much Footage Shown In English Theatres as Quota Requires and From Only Half of Product Available

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

If American production executives study official British film statistics with an appreciation of their inner meaning they must be doing a lot of hard thinking just now.

The Board of Trade returns showing the British production footage actually exhibited here in the year ended Sept. 30, 1933, reveal that British exhibitors have been devoting 23.7 per cent of their programs to native-made film.

The percentage is highly significant, to New York and Hollywood as well as to London, for this reason: the 23.7 quota of British films shown compares with an obligatory quota of only 12½ per cent. Exhibitors are showing very nearly twice as many British films as the law compels them to show.

British films are of two classes: films made for exhibition and films made to comply with the renters' quota (15 per cent for the year in question) and destined for the distributors' back shelves. It's hard to arrive at an exact percentage here, but a commonly accepted estimate is that half the British negative footage is "Quota rubbish," made as cheaply as possible to the order of American distributors and deliberately carried by them as a trading loss.

Twice as Many as Required

Accepting this figure, the exhibition statistics become even more striking. The theatres are running nearly twice the number of British films stipulated by the Films Act, and they are finding them from an effective output of British films which is only half of the product intended to be available.

If one assumes that the one quota was designed to balance with the other, the result can be stated in yet another way; those concerns which have taken British production seriously and tried to produce entertainment value are selling, in footage, four times as much as the Films Act promised them. Translate footage into rentals and the figures are very much more in their favor.

What is the answer, in American terms? It can't be that it is either good business or good tactics to make British films for the ash-can. The distributors' quota this year is 17½ per cent; in 1936 it will be 20 per cent—one film in five must be British. A "quota quicky" costs £5,000-£6,000. On a 30-picture output (American) that will let the producer in for £30,000-£36,000 as a minimum annual expenditure on British production. If you make the sort of film turned out so far, the takings per picture are going to be from £600-£1,000, with annual receipts £3,000-£5,000, or a yearly loss, as the result of trying to beat the quota, of £27,000 to £30,000 a year, or £1,000 per picture of the American program! That's without counting handling costs.

British Enterprise Progresses

While American distributors make, or have made for them, films that are entertainment material in a technical sense only, real British studio enterprise goes from better to better. It has produced "Henry VIII" and it will produce many "Henry VIII's"—and invade America with them. The young apprentice is making better films, in England, than the old master will condescend to make, in England—and is invading the old fellow's home town.

If Hollywood, or New York, thinks it clever to follow a policy which inevitably leads to this sort of result, British producers will be delighted to leave America to its self congratulations.

FROM OFFICE BOY TO DIRECTORSHIP

From waste basket to megaphone, or from rags to riches, might be the subtitle on this little story of the films. Back in 1923 Charles Barton was an office boy in the Paramount studio. In the course of 11 years in the same general location he functioned as prop boy, film cutter, assistant director and dialogue writer.

This week Mr. Barton was informed he has been raised to the status of a director in his own right. His first assignment will be as co-director of "Wagon Wheels" with Arthur Jacobson, another assistant also promoted to the directorial ranks.

New Hearst Reel Starts Lineup of News Gatherers

Mike Clofine, editor of the new Hearst Metrotone News, which will go into action in October, has begun to line up a staff of cameramen and others who will work under his direction. The policy of the reel will remain virtually as it is now, it is understood.

When the new reel begins in the fall, there will be no break in the regular release schedule, the Hearst reel continuing where the combined Hearst-Fox product terminates. E. B. Hatrick, in charge of Hearst film interests, has closed a deal with Gaumont Newsreel in England for an exchange of clips. Mr. Hatrick is now in Europe, where he plans to conclude other deals which are designed to give the reel complete international coverage.

Carr Recovering

Trem Carr, in charge of Monogram production on the Coast, is gaining strength rapidly in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Hollywood, after a minor operation.

MODIFIED CLAUSES IN CODE AWAITED

Every Labor Case Successfully Arbitrated, Says NRA Organ; Ten Committees to Speed Decisions of Code Authority

Possibility of appreciable modification of some parts of the NRA code appeared imminent this week as a result of announced plans of the National Recovery Administration to revise codes to "eliminate unworkable provisions, clauses which involve radical prohibitions on respectable sections of industries, or conscript unwilling groups," and any other sections requiring the strong arm of Government for enforcement.

Await Third Darrow Report

The industry was awaiting the third and final report of the Clarence A. Darrow National Recovery Review Board, for an attack more far-reaching in respect to some of those connected with the code's administration than the first report incorporated, had been threatened at the time the first report was made public. The final report was to be laid before President Roosevelt this week.

Every labor controversy that has arisen under the code has been successfully arbitrated, the Administration announced, and in most cases, it was said, the arbitration settlements resulted in increased wages or employment.

"The motion picture code is the only one in which every employer and every union organization of workers in an industry has signed an agreement to arbitrate before resorting to lockouts or strikes," The Blue Eagle, official organ of the NRA, said.

At the same time it was indicated in Washington that cases involving violations of the code may be brought before the Federal Trade Commission under an arrangement worked out for the handling of unfair trade practice charges under the codes.

It is understood a business man will be able to carry his case to the commission, which will cite the code authority in question to appear before it. On the other hand, a code authority might lodge a complaint, in which event the individual would be cited. The commission, it was indicated, will sit as a judicial body.

Plan to Speed Decisions

In New York, the Code Authority approved a plan for the setting up of ten committees to hear all appeals and recommend decisions in order to prevent the body's activities from becoming hopelessly clogged. The Authority will have a panel of approximately 50 persons to draw from and names of exhibitors, exchange men and other personnel from all sections will be on the list. Each committee will have one Code Authority member as chairman, and every committee will have one distributor and an affiliated and unaffiliated exhibitor. Under the plan, decisions by the Code Authority will be made within 15 days after hearings by committees.

The total of assessments paid to the Code Authority as of June 20 was $68,040, of which 6,259 assentors to the code paid $67,161.

The Code Authority this week named 103 impartial alternates on the local code boards of 29 cities. The New York and Dallas recommendations have not yet been approved by Mr. Rosenblatt. The list of appointees follows:

ALBANY: S. Aronowitz, attorney; David C. Lithgow, artist; Eugene J. Steiner, attorney; Townsend R. Morey, insurance agent and business man; George Myers, counsel.

Appealed Cases Settled

The Code Authority announced the following appeals from Grievance and Clearance and Zoning Board decisions had been disposed of:

GWYNN THEATRE CO., Baltimore, complainant, versus FOREST THEATRE CORP., Baltimore, respondent: determination of Washington Grievance Board on complaint of Gwynn Theatre Co., under Article VI, Part 3, Section 1, of the code against the Forest Theatre Corp., unanimously affirmed.

DICK GASTON, IOWA THEATRE, Ft. Madison, Ia., complainant, versus FOX WEST COAST, STRAND & ORPHEUM theatres, Ft. Madison: decision of Des Moines Grievance Board in dismissing complaint brought by Iowa Theatre under Article VI, Part 2, Section 1 of the code, unanimously affirmed.

PACIFIC NATIONAL THEATRE, complainant, versus JAY-BEN CORP., respondent, both of Los Angeles: Jay-Ben Corp. appealed from decision of Los Angeles Grievance Board, upon complaint of the Pacific National Theatre, that Jay-Ben has violated provision of Article V-E, Part 3, Sections 1, 2 and 3, dealing with premiums, giveaways, et al, Local board order Jay-Ben to "cease and desist." Code Authority upheld their decision on the appeal.

C. V. CRAWFORD, MAGEE THEATRE, Magee, Miss., complainant, versus SANATORIUM THEATRE, Sanatorium, Miss., respondent: this theatre is operated on premises of a state hospital for prevention and cure of tuberculosis; complaint of Crawford charged exhibition of motion pictures to general public by the Sanatorium was unfair to his theatre, and the board upheld him, as did the code authority.

LANGHEINRICH BROS., complainants, versus SAXE AMUSEMENT MANAGEMENT, INC., respondents, both of Milwaukee; respondent charged with holding, at matinee performances, demonstrations of cooking by electricity and giving away prizes. Milwaukee board upheld complainant and Saxe appealed decision. Code Authority, however, upheld Milwaukee board.

New Theatre Case

E. T. LANDIS, PRINCESS THEATRE, Monticello, Ia., complainant, versus R. C. LAMBERT, MRS. SOPHIE LAMBERT and FLOYD CARTER, all of Monticello, respondents: Des Moines Grievance Board, on complaint of Landis, ruled that in view of the small (2,200) population of Monticello, the respondents, who are proceeding with the opening of a new theatre in the town, should not be allowed the clearance of films from distributors to "an additional theatre in Monticello." The Code Authority unanimously reversed this decision on appeal of the respondents, and directed the complaint to be dismissed.

G. G. MITCHELL, IMPERIAL THEATRE, Newton, N. C.—protest to the Charlotte Clearance and Zoning Board: Imperial Theatre, having appealed from the determination made May 11 by the Charlotte Clearance and Zoning Board on protest of Imperial against existing clearance and zoning, and the appeal having been duly heard by the Code Authority, the Code Authority unanimously affirmed de-

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The problems of corporate reorganization are not the sole cause of the occasional headaches of the Paramount Picture management. Mae West's kisses are another source.

It seems that the recording technicians at the studio in Hollywood who were putting Mae's dialogue onto film during the production of "It Ain't No Sin," had found the blonde "siren's" voice a "cinch" to handle, until Mae started a love scene with Roger Pryor, her young leading man. Then the trouble started.

"Smack!" went the first kiss, and E. L. Kerr, technician in charge, asked for another "take" so that he could pull the microphone back a bit and diminish the intensity of Mae's osculation.

"Smack!" went the second, and Harry Mills, the sound mixer, reported too much volume sizzling through the wires into his sound booth.

Director Leo McCarey cautioned Mae to take it easy, and she agreed. But a third attempt shocked the recording apparatus again.

Mae, a bit nonplussed over the reactionary effects of her love making on science, informed all present that if she kissed her leading man at all, she would have to do it roundly—let the sound tracks fall where they might.

And, so, the Paramount Pictures Corporation wrapped a piece of silk around the microphone to dampen the vibrations.

Loaded on to the carefully scrubbed decks of the battleship Houston, commissioned to take President Roosevelt on a vacation through the Canal to the Pacific will be his private 30-foot launch, a complete library of nautical works and mystery novels, fishing tackle aplenty, two powerful radios, a band selected from both fleets and 40 of the newest motion pictures—all intended for Mr. Roosevelt's personal enjoyment while sailing the deep briny blue. Any Republican faction in the industry could inject a bit of campaign politics into the situation by complaining that free shows are a violation of the motion picture code.

Eddie Cantor, writing in the Saturday Evening Post, says he never really knew how many relatives he had until he made a success. "When I earned my first $2, one amateur night at the old Miner's theatre on the Bowery, I was alone in the world, an orphan," sighed Eddie. "By the time Ziegfeld starred me in 'Kid Boots,' I had a tidy little family of 14 relatives. My first talking picture 'Whoopee,' brought me 32 pairs of uncles and aunts, 212 cousins and a brand-new grandfather as a bonus," he added.

Eddie didn't start to have second cousins until he went on the air, and when he made personal appearances, he picked up two nephews and five third cousins once removed from his aunt's side in each town visited. None of Eddie's relatives wanted anything from him, except the rent, some assorted suburban homes, trips to the Coast, weekly checks of any amount of $60 and up, or volunteered to move in with him—he could take his choice.

Benito Mussolini from time to time has expressed his views none too delicately on the moral merits of American motion pictures. Influences disturbing to Italian home life too often creep into the American motion picture, Mussolini frequently has said, and often he has urged his blackshirts to refrain from visually participating in the showing of our productions.

However, it was learned last week at first hand, through undeniably authoritative channels, that, contrary to his public expressions in this connection, Il Duce spends many an evening privately viewing with much satisfaction those same American films.

Probably influenced by the impressiveness of the many weighty decisions made during the week for the new season by managing studio and corporate officers who are intent upon bringing order in 1934-35 out of the last of the business chaos of 1933-34, the corporals in charge of the MGM studio commissary in California assembled the other day in special executive session in the back kitchen and decided that henceforth all of the company's actresses wearing hoopskirts during production shall be barred from eating in the studio restaurant. This unprecedented action was taken on the grounds that such expansive apparel extends from the pivotal point too far into the aisles, thereby impeding traffic, and, furthermore, because it covers up too many vacant chairs, thereby increasing the hunger pangs of the Garbos, the Barrymores, Laurel and Hardy and other Hamlets of the lot.

It appears, then, that in the future hoopskirt wearers will be compelled to effect a change of wardrobe on their lunch hour, unless, of course, they decide to dine off the lot, or Mr. Mayer calls off all hoopskirt production.

Paramount has engaged one "Duke" Yorke to appear in "Elmer and Elsie." Duke travels the continents offering a cash prize to anyone who can make him smile. So far, he has not paid out a dime. After a few days in Hollywood he will be laughing right out loud.

THE members of a Fox company on location at Bridgeport, California, were quite surprised the other day when Jack Frier, an electrician, boldly interrupted the filming of a scene, and begged Doris Lloyd not to smash a picture frame which Miss Lloyd had just taken from a wall, as prescribed in the script. It appears that the frame held the picture of Fanny Midgley, who died in 1932. She on many occasions had played mother roles for Wallace Reid, Charlie Ray and others, and before her death she had been under contract to Fox for quite some time. Preparing the company for its location trip, a property man at the studio happened to pick up Miss Midgley's picture from the storeroom, not knowing, of course, that she had been the wife of Electrician Frier.

Read Kendall, in California, passes along the story about a group of extras, hired to play Russian soldiers for Warners' "British Agent," who delayed production because they were unable to understand the operation of some obsolete rifles used in Russia during the last war. His colleagues knew him as Boris Carli, but they did not know that in more palmy days Mr. Carli was the manufacturer of those guns.

From Hollywood, via Johnny Chapman, comes the yarn about the movie "big shot" who had just put an important actor under contract and was at a party given in honor of his new star.

The producer attached himself to the star's wife and gabbed: "I've got the most marvelous story for your husband."

"What is it?" inquired the star's wife, politely.

"It's called 'Loss Miserabuls.'"

"What's it about?"

"Well, it's—it's about a fellow who spends 20 years on the gallows. It's a sort of 'I'm a Fugitive from a Chain Gang' in costume."

Hi-hattin' Hollywoodians might take a lesson from little Mary Brian.

Passing through Memphis via plane, the other day, she alighted for the usual re-fueling period of 15 minutes. Newspaper men, informed in advance that she would be on the westbound plane, did not arrive in time since she actually was on the ship headed east, which got in hours earlier.

When an airline official told Miss Brian of the mistake, she went to a telephone, called the city desk at the Commercial Appeal, and was briefly and graciously interviewed over the wire. One of the pilots took her picture with a pocket camera; the paper blew it up to two columns and placed over it this caption: "Mary Brian No High Hat Film Star."

In sharp contrast to Miss Brian's sociability was the behavior of Kay Francis, Warner star, when she arrived at Newark Airport from Hollywood, last week, en route to Europe. Miss Francis flew in a rage at a newspaper photographer who had snapped her picture. She abandoned the chase and managed a smile for a photographer sent to the airport by the Warner executive offices in nearby New York. If news cameramen had not been on hand to snap the dainty lady, she probably would have charged Publicity Director Einfeld's forces with neglect of duty.

mination of the Charlotte board, to take effect with releases of the 1934-35 season.

Sawpits Theatre Corp., Embassy Theatre, Port Chester, N. Pictures Corp. (Vitagraph, Inc.), respondents. The Code Authority modified the ruling of the New York Grievance Board to this effect: Skouras Theatres shall prepare a list of 44 features from all the pictures remaining to be played at the Capitol theatre under contract for the 1933-34 season and shall divide the 44 into two groups of 22 each, and shall submit both groups to the complainant, and the complainant shall choose one of the two groups, and Skouras Theatres is directed to release the pictures in that group under license agreements with the distributors, and the respondent distributors are directed to make those pictures available to the complainant under terms and conditions which "shall be no less favorable to each distributor concerned than those contained in the license agreement with the Skouras Theatre Corporation."

In the field, local boards made these decisions:

Albany

Clearance and Zoning Board in matter of Crandell Theatre, Chatham, vs. Playhouse and Park theatres at Hudson, unreasonable clearance cited, rendered decision giving 14 days' clearance for the Playhouse over the Crandell and open booking for Park and Crandell theatres.

Buffalo

Exchanges were ordered not to supply film to Nathan Bornkessel, non-theatrical account, on complaint that Bornkessel was showing pictures free on a screen placed on an extension out over Lake Ontario to attract attention to a concession.

Chicago

Ten-cent theatres were seeking adjustments in new clearance and zoning schedules which will give them a better break in earlier films.

Cleveland

First "cease and desist" decision rendered by grievance board was in the case of P. R. Touney, Princess Theatre, Wasseon, against Guy Johnson, operating free shows in Lyons, Metamora and Otrakee, and against M. E. and Lou Hensler, operating free shows in Brailey, Liberty Centre and adjacent towns.

The free shows were designated by the board as non-theatrical and distributors were ordered to cease service to them.

Pittsburgh

Grievance board ordered J. Richman, Pearl Theatre, to stop admitting children for five cents on the ground that it is below the scales specified in his contracts.

St. Louis

Clearance and Zoning Board denied the request of Publix Great State Theatres, Inc., that its first runs in Quincy, Ill., be granted 14 days' clearance over theatres in Palmyra, Mo., and Barry, Mo.

Washington, D. C.

Film deliveries to Moe Kohn, Leader Theatre, Baltimore, Md., have been ordered stopped by the Grievance Board on the ground that he failed to obey the board's order to stop issuing advertising passes.

Allied Meets in New York; Wisconsin Group Convenes

Two state affiliates of Allied were in convention during the week. The New York group met at Buffalo on Wednesday, President Sidney Samuelson being the principal speaker. At Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, the state association convened Thursday morning, with some 200 in attendance to discuss the "clean film" crusade, percentage, preferred playing time, unfair clearance and other trade problems. F. J. MacWilliams is president of Allied of Wisconsin.

Irving Trust Is Named Permanent Trustee of RKO

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., in equity receivership since January 27, 1933, is now in a position to proceed with reorganization under the new provisions of the federal bankruptcy law. The company was the first large corporation in the country to file application to take advantage of the new bankruptcy law. The move resulted on Tuesday in the appointment by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe of the Irving Trust Company as permanent trustee of RKO, under the provisions of the newly enacted law. All objections to the appointment of Irving Trust were over-ruled by Judge Coxe.

In Hollywood, B. B. Kahane this week took over active production supervision of RKO Radio Pictures, with his associate producers consisting of Pandro Berman, scheduled to make 13 features for the new season; Kenneth MacGowan, six; Lou Brock, four; Merian C. Cooper, a minimum of two, with the balance of the program divided between Richard A. Rowland, B. H. Fineman, Cliff Reid, H. N. Swanson and Glendon Allvine.

Alfred Savoir, Playwright, Dies in Paris at Age of 51

Alfred Savoir, noted French playwright, died at his home in Paris on Tuesday. He was 51 years of age.

M. Savoir, who in 1927 came to New York to write scenarios at the Paramount studios in Astoria, L. I., was known the world over as an author of typical French comedies, although he was a Pole by birth. Among his best known plays were "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," "Bellboy," "La Petite Catherine," "He," "Cocktail" and many others. The playwright also wrote the original story for the Maurice Chevalier picture, "Love Me Tonight."

Supply Dealers Move

Headquarters of the Independent Supply Dealers' Association have been moved from Baltimore to the Paramount Building, New York. J. E. Robin is president, and Joe Hornstein vice-president.

Joe Kane with Mascot

Joe Kane, for three years associated with Charles R. Rogers at Paramount, has joined Mascot Pictures as a production supervisor. His first will be "Waterfront Lady."

Warner and Erpi Settle Royalties

efficacy of sound to short subjects, permitting vaudeville acts and playlets.

Still there was no "Jazz Singer" when the contract of 1927 was drawn up, giving Warner Brothers a substantial share in Western Electric's income from sound, as Western's co-worker in its commercial development. At that time Western took over the activities of the Fox-Case laboratory in developing sound-on-film. Participating only in the financial benefits accruing to Western from sound-on-disc, Warner interests lay in the retention and fostering of that method, which situation, however, failed to deter Western Electric scientists from pursuing the perfection of sound-on-film.

Then, in the fall of 1927, came "The Jazz Singer." Western Electric (now more immediately, Erpi) and Warner Brothers, in contractual cooperation, had put the thing over. In Europe, as well as America, reproducing equipments other than Western Electric were brought forward.

In the United States one heard these others (except Photophone) called "bootleg" equipment, and one of the first was the Pacent Reproducer. It is now an Erpi contention that Warner broke faith by backing this competitive apparatus. In 1931, in an injunction suit brought by Western against Sol Wallerstein, Buffalo exhibitor, charging patent violations in his Pacent equipment, Warner Brothers took over the defense.

Nathan Miller, former governor of the State of New York, was one of the members of the Warner-Erpi arbitration board. So were Frank Hogan, of Washington, D. C., and Judge Hiscock, of the New York court of appeals. Judge Hiscock succeeded Samuel Untermyer, New York corporation attorney, who resigned in 1930 upon associating himself with Fox Film Corporation during reorganization of that company.

Prominently associated with the Warner legal talent during the controversy were George E. Quigley, president of Vitaphone Corporation; Abel Cary Thomas, Warner's general counsel, and Senator Pepper, of Pennsylvania. Representing Erpi's interests were Green and Hurd, New York legal firm; J. E. Otterson, head of Electrical Research, and Whitford Drake, vice-president.

Included among the suits filed by Warner interests against A. T. and T., Western Electric and Erpi, in addition to the proceedings involving the royalties claimed by Warner, was one charging the telephone-sound group with violating the federal anti-trust statutes.

Schulberg in New York; May Work Independently

B. P. Schulberg arrived unexpectedly in New York on Tuesday, from the Paramount coast studio, where he is an independent producer. Dispatches received in New York from Hollywood preceding Mr. Schulberg's arrival indicated that he is considering production under his own banner, possibly under a deal with Erpi.

FLIRTATION WALK

Warner

With this picture, Warner Brothers picks up again the music, song-dance, girl-glamour spectacles of a year ago. However, moving in an atmosphere of youth, glory and hurrah, its romance tinged with contrasting comedy and drama, the locales being an Hawaiian Army Post and West Point Military Academy, it's an entirely different kind of musical.

The yarn is an original by Delmar Daves and Lou Edelman. Music and lyrics, several of the songs sounding like potential hits, are by Mort Dixon and Allie Wrubel. Dances were directed by Bobby Connolly, New York stage dance director. Direction is by Frank Borzage, whose most recent credits are "No Greater Glory" and "Little Man, What Now?"

Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler ("20,000,000 Sweethearts") have the leading roles. Pat O'Brien, currently in "The Personality Kid," Ross Alexander, Guinn Williams, Henry O'Neil and John Arledge are included among the more familiar names in the supporting cast. A new personality, Glenn Boles, recruited from the New York stage, makes his screen debut.

Scores of girls, beautiful costumes and colorful production settings insure the eye-spectacle accompanying the musical background. Opening in Honolulu, where Private Powell and the General's daughter, Ruby Keeler, witnessing an exotic native festival, fall in love, the story runs the gamut of eye and ear entertainment until it is climaxed in West Point. There, with all the glamour, always patriotically thrilling, that accrues to the Cadets, the two lovers are leads in a student play that counterparts the event that first brought them together.

It looks like a vehicle calling for all the colorful hullabaloo that was used in exploiting the previous Warner "42nd Street," "Footlight Parade," and so on, with colorful West Point thrown in for good measure as smash showmanship.

CARAVAN

Fox

A mere listing of the production values of "Caravan" indicates its entertainment potentialities. The title is short, quick and alluring. The production is based on the novel "Gypsy Melody" (explanatory of its atmosphere) by Melchior Lengyel. It's a colorful, lilting, musical romance. The screen play is by Samson Raphaelson, scenarist of "Trouble in Paradise," "One Hour With You" and the forthcoming "Merry Widow." Eric Charell, known to American exhibitors for his work on "Congress Dances," is the director. The music is by Werner Richard Hermann. Lyrics are by Gus Kahn. Three of the numbers, the theme song, "The Caravan Song," "The Wine Song" and "Ha Cha Cha," have that rhythmic swing that presages popularity. Not to be overlooked are the artistic settings, designed by William Darling, who made the sets for "Cavalcade."

The cast is exceptional. It stars Charles Boyer, previously seen in minor roles in "The Magnificent Lie" (Ruth Chatterton) and "Red Headed Woman." He is a noted continental actor. It teams Loretta Young, now in "Rothschild" and "Born to Be Bad," with him. In support it has Jean Parker, recently in "Little Women," "Lazy River" and "Operator 13"; Phillips Holmes, in a romantic role similar to that of "Nana"; Louise Fazenda, Eugene Pallette, C. Aubrey Smith, currently in "Rothschild," "Scarlet Empress" and "Cleopatra," and in minor roles, Charley Grapewin, Noah Beery, Dudley Digges, Lionel Belmore, Billy Bevan, Armand Kaliz and Harry Bradley.

Essentially a musical, semi-operetta, the picture is being produced on an extensive scope, insuring spectacular color, grouping and action. Basically, the motivating story is romantic, dealing with a girl who married by contract because she didn't know the man her uncle had picked out for her. It appears to be the kind of musical at which Fox has been aiming—different yet cleverly attuned to a popular pitch, that makes interest creation an easy job.

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE

Radio

A romantic drama, this story is adapted from a novel by Edith Wharton, widely read author of short stories and books, and the stage play by Margaret Ayer Barnes. The screen play is by Sarah Y. Mason, who adapted "Little Women," and Victor Heerman, who collaborated with Miss Mason on that success. Direction is by Philip Moeller.

The cast is headed by Irene Dunne, currently in "Stingaree," and John Boles now appearing in "The Life of Vergie Winters." The supporting cast includes Julie Haydon, long absent from the screen but who appeared in "Golden Harvest" and "Song of the Eagle"; Lionel Atwill, Laura Hope Crews, Herbert Yost and Helen Westley among the better known names, listing also the comparatively new Theresa Connover, Edith Van Cleve and Leonard Carey.

Very much in the nature of a problem play, the yarn has its locale in New York and is timed to the late Victorian era, about 1875. Motivated by the intense anti-divorce feelings of the upper social strata, it presents Helen Westley as the social and ethical dictator of the day. Her granddaughter, Julie Haydon, is about to marry Boles, when Miss Dunne, also a granddaughter, separated from her titled European husband, comes home to be divorced. She and Boles had been childhood sweethearts. As a lawyer he handles her case and the old love is reawakened. However, as position, prestige and future depend upon keeping his word, Boles weds Miss Hayden. The association with Miss Dunne is kept up, however, threatening any moment to explode its dynamite but in the end being worked out so that Miss Dunne returns to Europe and husband and wife are left together.

The background of the story, illustrating the strict social-moral thought of the time, establishes a modern parallel, suggests a type of showmanship, which combined with name values should be conducive to timely interest.

SHE WAS A LADY

Fox

This is an unusual modern romance drama. Written by a woman, focusing all its action and activity on a woman, it should have strong woman appeal. The original story by Elizabeth Cobb (daughter of Irvin Cobb) appeared serially in McCalls Magazine. The screen play is by Gertrude Purcell, adapter of "Another Language" and "Palooka." The director, Hamilton McFadden, did "Stand Up and Cheer," "As Husbands Go" and "The Man Who Dared."

The cast is composed entirely of well known screen names. Helen Twelvetrees is the lady. Her most recent pictures are "All Men Are Enemies" and "Now I'll Tell." In support are Donald Woods, seen in "The Earth Turns," "The Merry Wives of Reno" and currently "Charlie Chan's Courage"; Ralph Morgan, recently in "The Power and the Glory," Monroe Owsley, whose first success was with Ann Harding in "Holiday" and recently in many pictures; Doris Lloyd, Barbara Weeks, a promising newcomer; Jackie Searl and Karol Kay.

Human interest motivates the story. It tells of a girl, daughter of a British remittance man, who upon his death sought her rightful place only to be rebuffed. Narrating technique, while preserving some of the color of sophisticated drawing room stuff, has seen to it that an element of adventure is maintained. The locales are colorful and exciting—a western ranch, a small-time traveling circus, an aristocratic old English manor house, the pretentious home of showy American wealth, a New York gambling night club. As it relates the girl's efforts to win her rightful place, it plumbs those elements that usually can be counted upon to stir the most sympathetic feminine emotions, it promises powerful drama and touching romance. Both elements have demonstrated their entertainment appeal too many times to need any further detailing as to how they should be called to popular attention.

THE KANSAS CITY PRINCESS

Warner

This can be described most adequately as a farcical, hectic, action-packed comedy with a laugh in almost every situation and line of dialogue. The story is an original by Sy Bartlett, author of "The Big Brain." The screen play is by Bartlett and Manual Seff, who worked on "Footlight Parade," "The College Coach," "Bedside" and "Fur Coats." William Keighley, who is directing, is previously credited with "Easy to Love," "Journal of Crime" and "Dr. Monica."

The cast lists many familiar Warner names. Joan Blondell has the lead. Glenda Farrell is teamed with her. Regulars listed include Hugh Herbert, Gordon Westcott, Hobart Cavanaugh and Renee Whitney. Osgood Perkins, recently on the New York stage, makes his screen debut. Name values are strengthened by Robert Armstrong, Vince Barnett, Ivan Lebedeff and T. Roy Barnes.

Essentially it's a story of mugs and molls. Starting as a pair of Kansas City manicurists, production coloring being in keeping with the story intent, the misses Blondell and Farrell proceed to get themselves into no end of exciting and amusing trouble. Given a "sparkler" by Gangster Armstrong, Joan quickly loses it to glib Wescott, a super-romantic crook. Deciding to beat it, they have Armstrong on their heels, when they become embroiled with Cavanaugh and Barnett en route to New York and Paris. There, after Armstrong has forced himself on Herbert as a bodyguard aboard ship, the whole pack become embroiled in a prospective divorce case that promises to be a classic of foolish hilarity, in which knock-'em-round action plays an effective part.

Directed straight at the masses, with rapid-fire action provoking any number of surprises, this show apparently calls for colorful, all-laugh suggesting showmanship which effectively combines the appeal of personnel, story and production values.

SELECTED MOTION PICTURES

Following is a listing of "Leading Motion Pictures," for the period April 15 to May 15, as complied in the office of Mrs. T. G. Winter, Public Relations Department, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Hollywood office.

Best of the Month

THE LAST GENTLEMAN. United Artists. Director: Sidney Lanfield. Story by Katherine Clugston. Cast: George Arliss, Janet Beecher, Edna May Oliver, Ralph Morgan. George Arliss again plays the role of a crotchety, lovable old gentleman who cunningly uses his wits to set a few things right before he dies. Adults and young people. Too mature for children.

Social Drama

HALF A SINNER. Universal. Director: Kurt Neumann. From the play, "Alias the Deacon," by Leroy Clemen and John B. Hymer. Cast: Berton Churchill, Sally Blane, Joel McCrea, Russell Hopton, Mickey Rooney. A fair piece of ordinary program material. Adults and young people.

HELL CAT. Columbia. Director: Al Rogell. Cast: Robert Armstrong, Ann Sothern, Minna Gombell, Benny Baker. Some good acting and comedy, lovely clothes and variety of background. Family.

ISLE OF FURY. Warner Brothers. Director: Michael Curtiz. Based on the play by Robert Gore-Browne and J. L. Hardy. Cast: William Powell, Edna Best, Colin Clive. The love story has a certain charm, as it unfolds a young wife's realization that her husband is to her the great reality. Adults and young people.

MERRY ANDREW. Fox. Based on the play by Lewis Beach. Director: David Butler. Cast: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood, Mary Carlisle, Paul Harvey. Will Rogers in the amusing and somewhat pathetic role of a small town business man forced by his wife to sell out his beloved little drug store to a "chain," and thereafter making himself and everyone else miserable inventing ways to spend his time. Family.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE. Columbia. Based on the story, "Biddy," by Travis Ingham. Director: Lambert Hillyer. Cast: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell, Anita Louise. The fine human story of a frail little "Biddy" in a college dormitory who finds her long lost son occupying one of the rooms she cleans. Family.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS. Fox. Director: James Flood. From the story, "Odd Thursday," by Vera Caspary. Cast: Warner Baxter, Rochelle Hudson, Herbert Mundin, Rosemary Ames, Henrietta Crosman. A pleasant, clean and charming little romantic social drama of today. Family.

WHIRLPOOL. Columbia. Original story by Howard Emmet Rogers. Director: Roy Wm. Neill. Cast: Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Allen Jenkins, Rita LaRoy. A grim whirlpool which guards escape from a penitentiary symbolizes the dangerous eddies of life outside to a man who is released after serving a sentence of twenty years. Adult and young people.

THE WITCHING HOUR. Paramount. From the stage play by Augustus Thomas. Director: Henry Hathaway. Cast: Sir Guy Standing, John Halliday, Judith Allen, Tom Brown, Olive Tell, Wm. Frawley. The swing from the older generation to the younger is well done, and the common human characteristics of both generations are preserved. Adults and family.

Light Romance

CHANGE OF HEART. Fox. Director: John Blystone. Story by Kathleen Norris. Cast: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Sally Eilers, James Dunn, Beryl Mercer. A sweet romantic story which is happily suited to the reunion of Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell as screen lovers. Family.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS. Warner Brothers. Director: Ray Enright. Cast: Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell. A clean and entertaining revue of radio studios and favorites. Family.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS. Paramount. Director: Marion Gering. Original story by Clarence Buddington Kelland. Cast: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant, Edward Arnold, Vince Barnett, Ray Walker. The princess of a mythical kingdom is set down in America instead of in her land of romance, and when she has the mumps, high international finance demands that a double shall take her place. Family.

Humor

CALL IT LUCK. Fox. Director: James Tinling. From a story by Dudley Nicholls and Lamar Trotti. Cast: Herbert Mundin, Pat Patterson, Charles Starrett. When a London "cabby" wins a small fortune as a sweepstake prize, he brings his lovely young niece to New York, is quite completely "fleeced" by confidence men, but finds a way to get even. Family.

THE CIRCUS CLOWN. Warner Brothers. (Formerly called "Sawdust.") Based on a story by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby. Director: Ray Enright.. Cast: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis, Dorothy Burgess. The glamour of life under the "big tent" is seen through the eyes of a wide-mouthed country boy. Adults and young people.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS. Universal. Director: Edward Laemmle. Original by Wm. Anthony McGuire. Cast: Chester Morris, Marion Nixon, Walter Woolf, Alan Mowbray, Henry Armetta, John Wray. Chester Morris, as an inveterate practical joker, makes life miserable for all his friends and acquaintances. Adults and young people.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY. Warner Brothers. Director: Edward Ludwig. Novel by Elmer Davis. Cast: Charlie Ruggles, Ann Dvorak. The subtle and chuckley kind of comedy of which Charlie Ruggles is capable is given ample opportunity in the first part of the picture in which he is seen as a down-trodden little worm of an editor who dares not call his soul his own and has almost forgotten his early prowess as a college football hero. Adults.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY. M. G. M. Director: Alan Dwan. Cast: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Jack Pearl, Laurel and Hardy, Polly Moran, Charles Butterworth. Hodgepodge raised to the highest power with much wisecracking and the Durante style of humor running over and around everyone else who comes to his party. Adults and young people.

PRIVATE SCANDAL. Paramount. Director: Harry Joe Brown. Cast: Zasu Pitts, Helen Mack, John Halliday, Phillips Holmes, Ned Sparks. Murder mystery comedy with particular emphasis upon the comedy as may be judged from the cast. Adults.

High Comedy

TWENTIETH CENTURY. Columbia. Director: Howard Hawks. Cast: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard, Roscoe Karns, George E. Stone, Walter Connolly. A tumultuous and noisy picture telling a story of backstage life. Adults.

Mystery, Melodrama and Crime

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK. Twentieth Century-U. A. Director: Roy del Ruth. Original story by H. C. McNeille. Cast: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Warner Oland, Charles Butterworth, Billie Burke. The inimitable Drummond in a picture that adds to its highlights of dectective pursuit such clever comedy that Butterworth almost "steals the picture" from Colman. Adults.

CRIMINAL AT LARGE. Helber Pictures. A Gainborough Production (English). Director: T. Hayes Hunter. Cast: Emlyn Williams, Cathleen Nesbett, Norman McKinnel. An interesting mystery tale, with some good backgrounds and bits of acting. Adults and young people.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA. M. G. M. Director: W. S. Van Dyke. Original story by Arthur Caesar. Cast: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy, Nat Pendleton. The story centers around the lives of two men, orphaned in boyhood, who are raised as brothers and continue their devotion through life although their paths lie far apart. Adults.

MAN WITH TWO FACES. Warner Brothers. (Formerly "The Dark Tower.") From the play by George S. Kaufman and Alexander Woollcott. Director: Archie Mayo. Cast: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez. A brilliant cast in a backstage melodramatic mystery story. Adults and young people.

RETURN OF THE TERROR. Warner Brothers. Suggested by a story written by Edgar Wallace. Director: Howard Bretherton. Cast: Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot, Frank McHugh, John Halliday, Irving Pichel, George E. Stone. A deep-laid plot to throw suspicion of murder and insanity upon a fine doctor who heads a sanitarium leads to many mysterious doings, thrills and chills. Adults and young people.

Worldly Wise

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI. Twentieth Century-U. A. Based on the stage play by Edwin Justus Mayer. Director: Gregory LaCava. Cast: Constance Bennett, Fredric March, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray. It is all highly sophisticated, colorful entertainment which will be a matter of taste.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN. Columbia. Original story by S. K. Lauren. Director: David Burton. Cast: Elissa Landi, Joseph Schildkraut, Frank Morgan, Doris Lloyd. Skillfully played and directed, with the actors behaving like real people for the most part.

WHERE SINNERS MEET. R. K. O. Based on the A. A. Milne play, "The Dover Road." Director: J. Walter Buben. Cast: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard, Billie Burke, Alan Mowbray. What happens on the Dover Road, where runaway couples are detained as house guests of a suave, erratic Englishman, long enough for them to take stock of themselves and each other's idiosyncrasies, before setting out on a new matrimonial venture, provides a gaily imaginative comedy of manners.

Travel

SWEDEN, LAND OF THE VIKINGS. Produced and photographed in Sweden by John W. Boyle. In natural color. Narrative by Wilfred Lucas. Released in the east by Associated Cinemas of America and in the west by Mr. Boyle. A delightful introduction to an interesting people, this feature length picture, in unusually satisfactory color, should find a warm reception among audiences of all ages who enjoy travel pictures. Family.

Short Subjects

GULLIVER MICKEY. Mickey Mouse cartoon. United Artists-Walt Disney. Mickey has a dream of high adventure among many Lilliputs.

FUNNY LITTLE BUNNIES. Silly Symphony cartoon. United Artists-Walt Disney. A charming view of how the bunnies make easter eggs, getting their color from the rainbow.

FOLLOWING THE HORSES. Fox. Extraordinary and perilous riding with armies and steeplechasing in many lands. Very beautiful photography.

(A) Messrs. Rau and Evans answer correctly thus:

"The usual procedure in matching lenses is to try them out until two are found that give exactly the same image dimensions at equal projection distance and projection angle."

Dale Danielson says:

"Lenses usually are matched by trial and elimination; that is to say, until two are found that will project the same size image using the same aperture, projection distance, etc."

G. E. Doe says:

"Because of the fact that lens manufacturers allow a small tolerance of error in marking their lenses, which means that they find it impractical to mark projection lenses with the exactly correct E. F., if a precise match is wanted for a projection lens, the only sure way is to have the lens it is desired to match project an aperture image to a screen and superimpose on that image others by different lenses until one is found that matches exactly."

(B) Nic Granby says:

"I would order a new lens for the reason that while by sending the whole damaged lens, including the broken element, to its maker it would be quite possible to replace the assemblage in its former state, it would in all probability cost almost if not fully as much as would a complete new lens. Moreover, if it be a lens that is matched with another, the repaired lens might not match the other lens exactly.

"My answer, therefore, would be that I would get a new lens, forwarding the other (if a matched set) for matching, meanwhile securing the loan of two lenses for use during the time my own were absent. The loan can be had either from the manufacturer or dealer."

Every one else advised sending in the whole assemblage, including the broken lens, to its maker, which is correct, but has the objections named by Brother Granby. I am not demeriting any one on this, since the procedure (sending the lens and broken element back) is suggested by the Bluebook. However, we have later concluded that because of its high cost and the present day demand for exact matching, it is not advisable to have such damage repaired.

(C) Practically every one suggests sending the entire lens, including broken lens element, to the manufacturer who originally made the lens, which is quite correct if such a repair is decided upon.

(D) Messrs. Rau and Evans say:

"It is necessary to send the broken lens so that the manufacturer can measure the curvature of the surfaces and be able to exactly duplicate them."

I am continually receiving letters asking how their writers may join the Bluebook School. I therefore again say there are absolutely no requirements except (a) Answer the questions as best you may, not getting immediately discouraged if your answers are not judged correct. Absolutely no one will know that but me. The answers, except those published, are shown to absolutely no one, and are burned immediately they are found to be incorrect. They are all burned as soon as the answer has been prepared for publication. (b) Write your name, your address and the number of the question you are answering at the top of the first page. (c) Write as plainly as you can. Typewritten answers are of course preferred, but good handwriting will serve. (d) Write on one side of the paper only. It also is better to write on separate pages the answers to each question (not section of a question, but question as a whole), so that no part of two questions appears on the same sheet. It facilitates their handling.

Intercity Radio Links Group Of Cities in New RCA System

The first steps of a new intercity radio telegraph system of RCA Communications, Inc., which may later be extended over the country, began operation last week in cooperation with Western Union. New York has been linked by radio with Boston, Washington and San Francisco, and applications have been filed for construction permits to similarly join Seattle, Los Angeles and Detroit. Very shortly it is expected New Orleans and Chicago will be part of the radio system. Collection and delivery service for messages will be through Western Union offices in the cities named. The arrangement is said to in no way impair the independence of either company.

The New York Times.

[Which is a pretty fair newspaper]

Editorially lists the Most Awaited Films of the New Season

Patrons of the movie theatres will not at once be freed from a good deal that is cheap and silly, but they may at least look forward to the filming of a few good plays, a number of books of stirring adventure, and such works as "The Forsyte Saga," "The Little Minister," "The Age of Innocence," "The Last Days of Pompeii," RIDER HAGGARD'S "She," and others and they forgot to mention

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES" "ALIEN CORN" "ROBERTA" "THE FOUNTAIN" "THE GAY DIVORCE" FRANK BUCK'S "JUNGLE" "LADDIE" "FRECKLES" AND MANY OTHERS . . . . .

AND DON'T FORGET..

it was RKO-RADIO that delivered on its 33-34 Program these outstanding pictures.

Morning Glory, One Man's Journey, Ann Vickers, Little Women, Flying Down to Rio, The Lost Patrol, Spitfire, Wild Cargo, This Man is Mine, The Crime Doctor, Stingaree, Of Human Bondage, We're Rich Again, Cockeyed Cavaliers, The Life of Vergie Winters, Down to their Last Yacht.

AND NOW, HO FOR THE PIRATE CYCLE
CLEAN PICTURES HARDER TO MAKE
BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS AT $100,000
12 PICTURES START, SIX COMPLETED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

PSYCHOLOGISTS and students of the drama have oft said, "Remove some desire from the realm of human instinct and nature sublimates that wish in some other form of activity."

In the case of gang pictures, they being "Verboten," producers met the public's want by making murder-mystery-melodrama.

With some of them coming under the ban, because of undue emphasis on the crime element, Hollywood is now turning to the "Yo Ho, and a Bottle of Rum" cycle of pirate pictures.

To date, the following pirate pictures have been announced by the various companies, with more in the offing:

"Treasure Island," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.
"Black Ivory," Warner Bros.
"Captain Blood," Warner Bros.
"Captain LaFitte," RKO Radio.
"Captain Kidd," Sol Lesser.
"Buccaneer," Paramount (Cecil B. DeMille).

Paramount Digs In

Field men of Paramount have a wider concept of the studio problems and objectives following the addresses of Emanuel Cohen, Adolph Zukor and George J. Schaefer at the convention which closed Thursday night.

As Mr. Cohen said, the making of pictures has ceased to be a one-man task; all elements from the purchase of a story to the paying patron must coordinate for success.

George Schaefer declared: "I am proud to say Paramount will not have to borrow a red cent to meet its production costs for the next year."

In announcing a production policy of "good taste," evidencing again that he would have a hand in production, Mr. Zukor said, "Our picture schedule will parallel the first 15 years of Paramount's existence, in which films avoided salaciousness."

"Clean" Films Harder to Make

Amid the silence that reigns in Hollywood, while bombs burst in air, the voice of one producer was raised recently, neither in sorrow nor in anger, that he, for one, had no need of reforming his product.

Sol Lesser told representatives of women's organizations, who called upon him to inquire about his present program of films, that "The only thing that's ever been 'bad' in any production I've ever been connected with is the adjective in 'Peck's Bad Boy.'

"It's more difficult to make a clean picture than a salacious one," Mr. Lesser told the women, "for a socalled 'dirty' picture need not be intelligent in order to win a certain kind of patronage; but a clean picture has got to be clever."

The Goldwyns Entertain

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn digressed somewhat from the usual caliber of the typical filmdom frolic as host and hostess at the opening of an exhibit of Paintings of the American Scene by Cergei Soudeikin at the Stendahl Galleries. Dinner jackets and white carnations were replaced by tails and gardenias. Chamber music by Vladimir Bakaleinikoff and Alexander Nilsberg gently filled the halls and garden patio, where Rupert Hughes made an elaborate introduction.

The formal invitations issued by the Goldwyns carried a red bar diagonally across the "time and place."

Concurrent with this exhibit, Mr. Goldwyn happens to be producing the film of Russian origin adapted from Tolstoy's "Resurrection," now titled "We Live Again" and starring the Soviet Siren, Anna Sten.

As one wag put it, "it's Goldwyn's Last Sten."

Champions at $100,000 Cost

On the selfsame day that congratulations poured in on Stanley Bergerman when it was announced that three out of five pictures produced by him last year were rated Box-Office Champions in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD check-up, Carl Laemmle's son-in-law was cudgeling his mind about "wary and shy" bankers.

"Today," he said, "with American distribution geared the way it is, plus the revenue from other English-speaking countries, the returns on a moderate investment through established channels are fairly well assured."

Mr. Bergerman's three Box Office Champions are "Moonlight and Pretzels," "Out All Night" and "The Countess of Monte Cristo," produced at an average cost of $100,000, which is something of a record.

Speaking of bankers, and in Hollywood every one does of "Doc" Giannini, it is to him the statement is credited that over a period of 10 or 15 years he has loaned film producers more than fifty million dollars, at the legal rate of interest, and never lost a penny in his transactions.

Another fact, which the Doctor never has revealed, is that in no film financing deal the Doctor ever made did his bank charge over the legal rate of interest, share in profits, or exact any kind of bonus.

Two lusty hopefuls, both on vacations from college and both sons of two eminent producers, embarked on film careers this week for the summer.

Buddy Schulberg, son of Ben and a student editor at Dartmouth, sails next week for U. S. S. R. to explore the curriculum of the Russian school where he understands young men of any nation may come to study films, including courses in raw stock, camera, laboratory work, optics, set designing, costume design, philosophy, psychology, pantomime, budget, direction, cutting and exhibition.

Buddy Lesser, son of Sol, on vacation from Stanford University, starts as publicity assistant at his dad's production headquarters at the Pathe Studio in Culver City.

Twelve Pictures Started

Twelve pictures were placed before the cameras in the past week. Six were finished. Currently 36 pictures are in actual production—an increase of six over the corresponding week of a year ago.

Universal has two new ones. "The Human Side" features Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon, Dickie Moore and Reginald Owen. "Million Dollar Ransom" will present Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes, Marjorie Gateson and Mary Carlisle.

Warner started two also. "The Case of the Howling Dog," mystery melodrama, has Warren William and Helen Trenholme, with Mary Astor. "Big Hearted Herbert," comedy romance, will present Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis and Phillip Reed.

Fox began work on "Serenade," in which Pat Patterson, Nils Asther and James Burke have the important roles.

With Jean Parker, Una Merkel, Stuart Erwin and James Dunn in the leads, MGM started "Have a Heart."

Teaming Irene Dunne and John Boles, Radio launched "Age of Innocence," casting Wesley Barry and Laura Hope Crews in supporting roles.

Columbia finally put "The Captain Hates the Sea" before the cameras. The cast lists Victor McLaglen, John Boles, Wynne Gibson, Leon Errol and Florence Rice.

Paramount started "Pursuit of Happiness," starring Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer and Grace Bradley.

Principal Pictures moved to location the "Peck's Bad Boy" company, including Jackie Cooper, Jackie Searl, Thomas Meighan and Dorothy Peterson.

Majestic started "She Had to Choose," in which Isabel Jewell, Buster Crabbe, Reginald Toomey and Sally Blane are the important players.

Supreme started "Demon for Trouble," starring Bob Steele with Gloria Shea, Don Alvarado and Nick Stuart in support.

Of the six finished pictures, Paramount accounts for two. They are "The Notorious Sophie Lang," Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanaugh, Arthur Byron and Alison Skipworth, and "Elmer and Elsie" with George Bancroft, Frances Fuller and Roscoe Karns.

Columbia completed "Girl in Danger," formerly titled "By Persons Unknown," in which Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey, Charles Sabin and Arthur Hohl are featured.

"Caravan," with Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker and Phillips Holmes heading a large cast, was moved to the cutting room by Fox.

Warner wound up active shooting on "The Dragon Murder Case." Warren William, Margaret Lindsay, Lyle Talbot and Robert Barrat have the leading parts.

Monogram completed "Moonstone" in which David Manners, Phyllis Barry and Jameson Thomas are featured.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

No. 50—ADDRESS OF LOCAL BOARD IN THE FIELD

QUESTION—Please give me the address of the Code Authority for the St. Louis district. I have a protest I wish to file.—ILLINOIS.

ANSWER—There are two code boards in each key city, a Local Grievance Board to hear complaints of unfair trade practice or unfair competition, and a Local Clearance and Zoning Board to establish fair clearance schedules and to hear and adjust complaints of unfair clearance. The boards in St. Louis are located in Suite 815, Ambassador Building. The telephone number is Central 8354. Miss Lila Schofield is the secretary.

No. 51—DISPUTE OVER WAGES FOR PROJECTIONIST

QUESTION—Would you kindly put me right regarding the following wage dispute? The theatre I worked at as a projectionist for three years was run by a circuit up to June of 1933, and my salary was $25 for a 32-hour week. The theatre was returned by the circuit to its original owner on July 1, 1933. I continued to work at this theatre when it was reopened on August 27, 1933, for the same salary, but the hours were increased to 36 and 38. Then the manager reduced my salary to 45 cents an hour, with my hours varying from 32 to 36. He said that because the theatre wasn't open on August 23, 1933—the date specified in the code upon which wage and hour schedules are computed—he had a right to cut wages to 40 cents an hour under the code. I claim that he is in error, and I want to know if I am right and can I demand the salary that has been paid up to last week, which was $25 for 36 to 38 hours.—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The motion picture code specifically says (Article I-V, Part 1, Section 6-A) that motion picture projectionists shall receive not less than the minimum wage and work no more than the maximum number of hours per week which were in force in a locality as of August 23, 1933.

The code states further that in the event that there did not exist a prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours for a projectionist, or if there is a dispute over such wage scales and hour schedules, then the matter shall be arbitrated. It is assumed that the matter described above is a non-union situation, and where a non-union operator is involved, the code says that the manner of arbitration shall be as follows:

The non-union employees shall appoint one representative and the local IATSE union shall appoint one representative, and the exhibitor shall appoint one. This committee of three shall constitute an arbitration board for the specific purpose of settling the single dispute. The committee shall examine the facts and shall unanimously determine the existing scale of wages and the maximum number of hours for the operators involved. In the event that they cannot unanimously agree, then they shall mutually designate an impartial person who shall be empowered to sit with the board, review the facts and officially determine the dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event the three representatives cannot agree upon an impartial person, then the Division Administrator (Sol A. Rosenblatt), or the NRA Administrator (General Hugh S. Johnson), shall designate such impartial person.

Pending the determination of such dispute, the rate of wages then paid by the exhibitor and the maximum number of hours then in force (but such hours shall not exceed 40 weekly), shall not be changed so as to decrease wages or increase hours. In order to effectuate the foregoing provisions and pending the determination of the dispute, the employer agrees that he shall not lock out his employees, and the employees agree that they shall not strike, according to the code.

If no arrangements have been effected by the projectionist for arbitration, the projectionist may present his problem for possible adjustment to the Regional Labor Board in his territory. The location of this Regional Labor Board in any territory may be obtained from the National Labor Board of the NRA at Washington, D. C.

No. 52—CODE ASSESSMENT CHARGED AGAINST NON-SIGNER

QUESTION—The Code Authority sent me a bill for a six-months' code assessment, and although I did not sign the motion picture code, they claim I have received benefits from it under the 10 per cent cancellation privilege clause, and, therefore, I must pay the assessment.

I did sign the President's blanket code of last year, however, but do not feel the film code is aimed at "small town" theatres, so I did not sign it. I have never bought as high as 90 per cent of any group of features, with the exception of one group, and I had that much of a cancellation privilege (10 per cent) from that distributor before the code went into effect.

It is tough enough to keep open without any added expense. However, I am all for the code in places where the small theatre owner can be benefited.

Do I have to pay this assessment, and, if so, can I still sign the code and get what little protection it might give me at some future time?—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The Code Authority has ruled that even though an exhibitor has not signed the code, he must pay the code assessment levied against him by the Code Authority if he has accepted any benefits of the code, such as the 10 per cent cancellation privilege.

However, because this exhibitor had a 10 per cent cancellation clause in one contract signed before the code became effective, on December 7, it appears that he may have grounds for complaint against the assessment in view of the fact that such cancellation privilege had been previously granted and was not a direct result of the enactment of the code by the industry. The Local Grievance Board in the exchange city in the territory where the exhibitor operates, or the Code Authority itself, located in the RKO Building, 50th Street and Sixth Avenue, New York, will entertain complaints against code assessments.

Exhibitors who have not signed the motion picture code will, it is expected, be given the opportunity again to sign under a decision due shortly from the Code Authority.

Warner Plans Navy Film Premiere at Norfolk, Va.

Warner will hold the world premiere of "Here Comes the Navy" at the Loew's State theatre, Norfolk, Va., on July 6 in honor of the arrival at that naval base of the United States fleet, which cooperated in the making of the film recently on the Coast. The home office advertising department, under S. Charles Einfeld, director, has made elaborate plans for the premiere. The release date on the film has been advanced to the last week in July. James Cagney is starred.

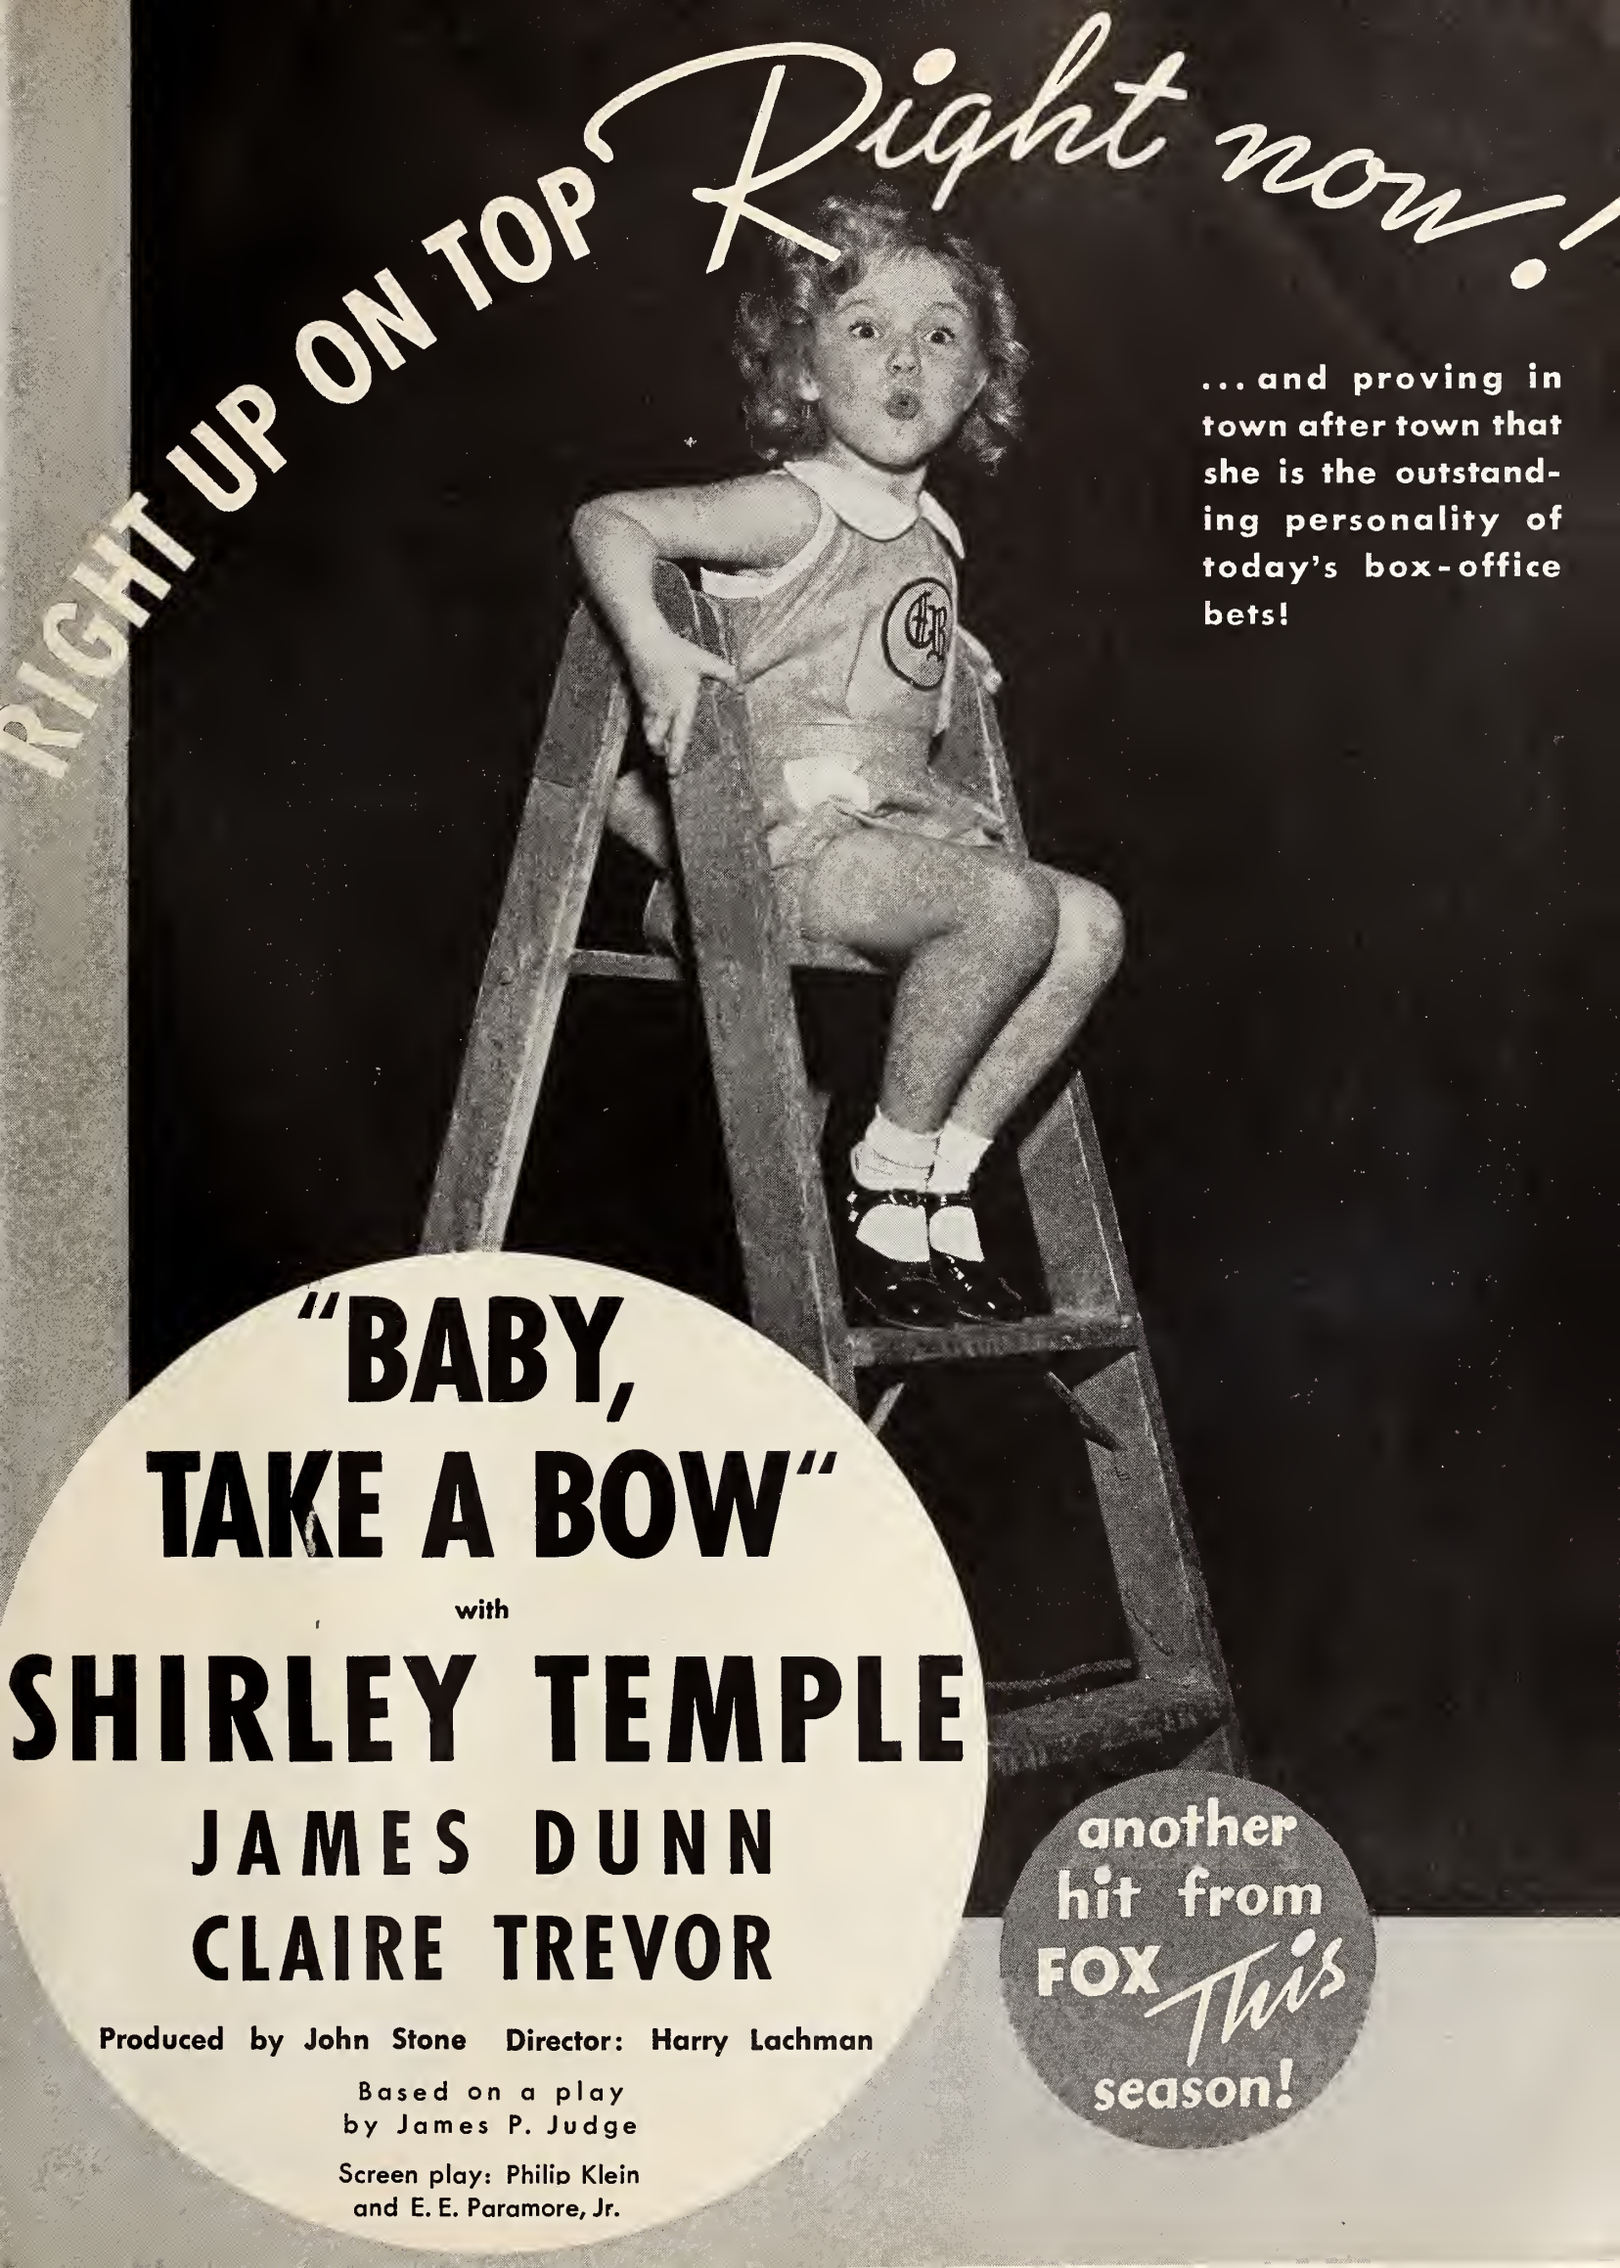
Academy May Change Sound Award Method

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast has appointed a committee of technicians to work out changes in next year's award for achievement in sound recording. Deficiencies in the present system of nominating and voting led to the decision to change. It was suggested the jury system in use for the scientific and technical awards be utilized for sound also. The committee is considering the suggestion.

Landow To Be Dined

Mike Landow, recently resigned as Philadelphia Universal manager, will be tendered a dinner July 9 by local exhibitors and distributor representatives. On the committee are Jay Emanuel, I. Epstein, Harry Weiner, James Clarke and Joe Leon.

Named Branch Manager



Joe Engel, former assistant manager and city salesman for Universal in Philadelphia, has been named local branch manager, succeeding M. S. Landow, resigned.

Jaffe Leaves Columbia

Sam Jaffe has resigned as associate producer at Columbia, effective Thursday. He plans a trip to Europe, during which he may produce a picture in England, and will return in about three months.

Shoot the Works

(Paramount)

Romantic Comedy

This is a showman's show and an audience picture. Just plain amusement is its keynote. It's an exploitation feature, because, centering upon a supershowman, it's loaded with easily adaptable effective business stimulating features. As it runs its scale it's an object lesson in the art of ballyhoo. It's audience because it sparkles with breezy and refreshing comedy. Its romantic twist is tinged with charming human interest. This element takes on an added importance due to the tragic misfortune of the leading lady, which, without undue publicity, should have an unusual effect upon audiences. It's clean and wholesome. On its personnel, story and production values, it's a big theatre attraction. The manner in which it mixes its hokum-slapstick comedy with sympathy stimulating dramatic romance, its color and the significance of its theme song and one or two other musical numbers, makes it an all-family attraction.

Well acted, with Jack Oakie, Dorothy Dell, Roscoe Karns, Arline Judge and Alison Skipworth turning in capital performances and Ben Bernie proving a pleasing surprise and intelligently directed, the show is a story of common folks presented in a way that common folks understand. There's no sophisticated drawing room stuff about it; no sex—only amusement that takes good advantage of the theatric elements of which it is built.

Full of color, it's the story of a cocky, superegotist, Nicky Nelson, and the Nicky Nelson Enterprises. They're honky-tonky store show people; flag-pole sitters, dead whale exhibitors, two-bit orchestras and flea-circus impresarios. Nicky has millions of million dollar ideas, but somehow or other they never turn into cash. The group breaks up; led by Joe Davis, Jackie and Sailor secede, Nicky starts to slip. Then he meets Lily. Realizing that his big talk is so much wind, she falls in love with him. Fun and human interest romance drama counterbalancing, the yarn builds until Joe Davis has attained the fame that is Ben Bernie's. Then Lily is loved by the radio magnate and even though Nicky has gambled away her ring and songs and played every other dirty trick on her, she still has a real affection for him, Learning that he is still barking his dead whale, that the Countess is still sticking to him, she invites him to Joe's Russian Night Club. There, paraphrasing the Winchell-Jolson publicity feud, he socks the keyhole peeking columnist who threatens to scandalize Lily. Even though the old gang knows that Nicky can't buy coffee and cakes, they sop up all his big-money bombastic rantings, until the finale uncovers Nicky as a sensational radio master of ceremonies and, of course, Lily's husband.

This show demands flamboyant carnival exploitation, even to atmospherically turning your theatre, no matter how dignified a civic asset it is, into a bannered, lithographed store sideshow. For exploitation, flag-pole sitters, a whale exhibit gag, peephole windows, a flee circus, if possible, may be bromides, but tied up with this picture they have a new curiosity-arousing interest. Printed advertising should accentuate the gaudy comedy to the limit. Then there is the natural Ben Bernie inspired radio tieup possibilities for those who must have modern dignity.

Put your shoulder to the wheel on this one; utilize every medium possible to let your patrons know all about all the entertainment values it contains.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

One Night of Love

(Columbia)

Music, Romance, Comedy

There is a real thrill in this picture—the thrill of classical operatic music, wonderfully sung by Grace Moore—that is the show's outstanding entertainment and showmanship value. It's novel quality entertainment, refined and wholesome. It carries undeniable appeal for the intelligentsia, those demanding better pictures, that calls for their support in bringing it to the attention of the rank and file. At the same time, because of story content, its temperamental human interest romantic motivation, its natural comedy contrasts, but mainly because of its uniquely popular musical quality, it's mass entertainment of high caliber. The preview audience, once in the spirit of the picture, broke into applause time after time.

Actually the show, well acted and intelligently directed, is a series of opportunities for Grace Moore's singing. The principal locale is Milan, Italy, although it covers many European capitals and New York for the finale. The setup is simple. Monteverdi, great teacher, first discovers Mary and loves her for her voice alone. The years of preliminary training, difficult enough, are complicated by Bill's romantic intrusions, welcome to Mary because they afford her relief from the rigid discipline. As a Parisian triumph comes, temperaments clash. Against Monteverdi's advice, Mary accepts a Metropolitan Opera engagement. Her debut seems a hopeless tragedy until Monteverdi appears in the prompter's box to inspire her to a great triumph and understanding of his love.

The story is the background for the singing of first, "Ah For E Lui" from Traviata, then "Ciri-Biri-Bin," to be followed by "Habanara" from Carmen, climaxed in the finale by "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly." Connecting all is Schertzinger's theme song accompaniment, "One Night of Love."

It's an unusual picture. It requires unusual selling methods. The title is good. Grace Moore hasn't been on the screen since "New Moon." Tullio Carminati appeared in "Gallant Lady" and "Moulin Rouge." The balance of the cast represents but little name draw. Consequently the attraction itself is the most saleable element. Ordinary methods won't do the entire job. Something new should be utilized. With an aim of packing the house for first performances and placing of dependence on word-of-mouth advertising, strong efforts should be exerted toward obtaining the cooperation of the influential elements. Because of events of the past few days, the time is phychologically ripe to call upon those who have been yelling for better pictures to be just as active in bringing patrons into the theatres as they have been in urging them to stay away.

In any analysis, however, whether this picture gets the financial box office support which its merits entitle is a matter resting almost wholly in the business and opinion-creating ability of those who play it. In this connection, it might be well to remember "Be Mine Tonight" and its phenomenal popular success. Because of the stirring quality of the music, there is a direct parallel between the two pictures.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Murder in the Private Car

(MGM)

Melodramatic Comedy

As hokum melodramatic thrill comedy, this show socks the entertainment ball right on the stitches. It's the kind of picture that makes 'em laugh while they blanch in terror. New and novel, despite its age, the story, because of good acting and smart direction, takes fine advantage of a weird variety of tried and proved amusement elements. Thus if there is potential money-producing showmanship in farcically treated comedy, romance, mystery, melodrama, thrill, spectacular action and suspense, "Murder in the Private Car" dishes them up for cinch selling.

Bizarre and ridiculous, from beginning to end, the show is motivated by a foolish dignity. The major locale is the rear car of a transcontinental train. To give reason for the burlesque, Ruth is made a fabulous heiress. Her fortune and life menaced, she, together with Georgia and Scott, a nutty detective who tabs himself a "crime deflector," board the train and then the real menace to Ruth and the audience's sense of humor gets underway. Murders, vanishings, to the tune of sliding doors, lights going out, and a gorilla, all play heck with Scott's crime prevention theories. Then, when all the standby exciters have been worked to the limit, the car breaks loose from the train and rolls down the Great Divide right in the path of another onrushing limited. Of course, everything is unraveled in the end. The gorilla isn't a gorilla, and the crime deflector isn't such a balmy guy after all.

This picture is all-laugh entertainment. There's fun in action dialogue and situations. Being burlesque hokum, it comes denitely within the entire family classification. There are so many varied exploitation possibilities that picking the most powerful seems the most difficult job. As there is much interest for women in story, production and cast values, more than usual attention should be paid to arousing their interest. For the same reasons, special efforts should be directed at the men. Naturally appealing to fun-loving adults, the show is also an outstanding juvenile attraction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Distributed by MGM. A Lucien Hubbard production. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Based on the play, "The Rear Car," by Edward E. Rose. Adaptation by Harvey Thew. Screen play by Ralph Spence, Edgar Allan Woolf and Al Boasberg. Photographed by James Van Trees and Leonard Smith. Running time, 70 minutes, as seen on the coast. Release date, June 29, 1934.

Comedy-Drama

Comedy-drama, with the greater accent on the comedy, as indicated by the leading player in the cast, this picture presents no extraordinary material for exploitation. It is, in reality, a by-play on the inevitable and frequent marital complication situation, with the comic element of such a situation carried out to its logical conclusion.

That being the case, the film might well be sold to the adult patronage of the married variety, selling it with emphasis on the amusing side of the story. It presents something in the nature of variety in that it makes comedy for the most part out of what is in general heavy drama of the problem play type.

The audience will be familiar with the popular comedian, Edward Everett Horton, who is supported by Genevieve Tobin, Paul Cavanagh and Renee Gadd in particular. The fact that Miss Tobin is an "emancipated" woman, who is the head of a mattress company, should offer the possibility of store tieups of that nature in the community. The emphasis in the selling will be on the comedy element, making the most of Horton's name and the idea that the picture actually is "kidding" the usual marriage tangle. The fact that the wife, asked for a divorce, indicates to her husband and the woman in the case that she will grant him a divorce if they will produce for her as good a husband as the one she is about to lose, presents an idea which should be effective copy in a selling campaign.

Miss Tobin is greeted in her busy office by Horton, her husband, and Miss Gadd, a flighty sort of woman with whom he thinks himself head over heels in love. They ask for a divorce, and Miss Tobin makes her suggestion that they find for her another husband to her liking. Seeking to comply, they bring to her weekend house party Meeker, completely wrapped up in his lecture on biology at the next college class, and Donald Reed, Spaniard who loses no opportunity to practice the art of love making. Meeker remains enraptured and Reed gets along well with a visiting novelist friend of Miss Tobin.

Desiring to arouse her husband's sense of jealousy, Miss Tobin secretly invites Cavanagh, a personable and extremely wealthy ship line owner. Cavanagh arrives and proceeds to make open and ardent love to her, but Horton is not only oblivious but glad, since he sees it bringing him nearer to the divorce he seeks. But when Miss Gadd discovers Cavanagh is worth millions, she becomes annoyed at the attention he is paying to Miss Tobin, and, forgetting Horton, goes after him herself. Through trickery, she succeeds in making Cavanagh believe Horton and Miss Tobin have become reconciled, and leaves with her, going aboard his ship, about to sail. Miss Tobin goes after him, Horton after her, but Horton gets there first, and not knowing Cavanagh has quietly left Miss Gadd aboard, he goes into the cabin. The boat pulls out, with Horton and Miss Gadd aboard, while Cavanagh and Miss Tobin are left, happy, on shore.

Adult material, it will be most adaptable to a midweek position.—Aaronson, New York.

Laughing Boy

(MGM)

Drama

A romantic, dramatic, finally tragic story of the Navajo Indians, and particularly of a young man, wholly Indian, and a young girl, who has taken upon herself numerous ways of the white man, this production develops into the type of triangular drama which, under a different set of circumstances, with different persons involved, might have happened anywhere.

The film is from the novel "Laughing Boy," which, in the year it was published, was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for the novel. That fact might be of real value in selling the picture in certain situations, depending, of course, on the type of audience. Set in the beautiful scenic background of the western country, the film is under no condition to be construed as a western picture. It has a small touch of comedy, but for the rest, with the rather unfamiliar circumstances of the characters involved, is romance and drama of a weighty nature.

Heading the cast are Ramon Novarro in the title role, while opposite is Lupe Velez. With the exception of William Davidson, in the heavy role, there are no other familiar players, the others all being Indians. Novarro, in the Indian role, sings a number or two in fairly effective fashion, but his rendition is hardly of such a nature or quality as to make that a selling point in the campaign. The fact that the situation which develops might have taken place anywhere, anytime, with any individuals, offers some opportunity for copy lines which may prove effective in attracting a certain amount of feminine patronage.

Laughing Boy and the others of the Navajo tribe attend the great annual singing and dancing festival. There also comes Miss Velez, known as Slim Girl, who lives part of the time in the town, and is virtually an outcast among her tribespeople. She is attracted to the handsome Laughing Boy, but he steadfastly refuses to dance with her, or even talk to her. She finally entices him into a dance, but her movements are those of the white folk and not in accordance with the ancient manner of the Indians. Annoyed, he leaves her, but she follows him to the edge of a cliff, and there he discovers that she is not exactly unattractive.

They fall in love, and against the judgment of his elders, he determines to marry her. They spend one night under the stars, but next morning she discovers he has left her. She returns to her small house in town, where Davidson is waiting for her. Miserable, she leaves him to return to the mountains and Laughing Boy, and he, equally forlorn, meets her. They are married, and she divides her hime between their tribal home and the town, where she is supposed to be trading. Actually she is meeting Davidson at intervals, for the purpose of extracting as much money from him as possible, which she brings to Laughing Boy, that he may buy more and more sheep and horses.

One day, in holiday spirit, Laughing Boy finds someone to guard his sheep and goes to town himself. Accidentally he comes across Slim Girl's home and finds her in the arms of Davidson. Misconstruing the scene, Novarro draws his bow and kills her with the arrow intended for Davidson. Sadly he buries her in the mountains.—Aaronson, New York.

Let's Try Again

(RKO Radio)

Drama

A marital drama of complication, which develops a triangular, or quadrangular aspect, and works itself out in time-honored fashion, this picture has all the earmarks of the stage play transplanted to the screen, almost bodily. Being in the nature of a problem play, and dealing as it does with the near breakup of a marriage on the rocks of a love which has grown careless and unenthusiastic, the film probably will have its greatest appeal to the feminine contingent of the patronage. It is to them that the exhibitor might well direct the greater part of his selling effor.

The "Let's Try Again," which points the keynote of the theme of the story, as the 10-year-married wealthy couple, drifting apart, find they cannot do without each other, and agree to "try again," offers a good opportunity for appeal to women. The divorce question, and the ways and means looked for as alternative to that drastic action, are of considerable currence in the newspapers and the home today.

Timed in the present, and localed in the suburban New York home of the couple, the film combines romance and drama of the marital complication variety, with a small touch of comedy, which is humor of an indirect nature, rather than of the slapstick kind. The dialogue is smart and imparts a certain measure of amusement on its own account. On the whole, the film is definitely a motion picture of the sophisticated type, which should be some sort of clue to the exhibitor as to what he may do with the film and what he may expect from it. It is true that the story is chiefly reliant upon dialogue for its development, which results in a comparative lack of fast moving action.

Clive Brook is the successful and wealthy physician, Diana Wynyard his wife. Helen Vinson, dancer, who has been cured by a serious leg ailment by Brook, is in love with him. Brook and his wife find themselves, after 10 years of married life, getting on each other's nerves, continually quarreling. Irene Hervey, Brook's niece, is engaged to Theodore Newton. On the night of the tenth anniversary of their wedding, planning to attend a fancy dress party, Brook and Miss Wynyard quarrel again, and she goes alone. Returning, she sits in the moonlit garden, and Newton, after leaving Miss Hervey at the door, sees, falls in love with and expresses his feelings for Miss Wynyard. Miss Hervey is a witness from the window, and next morning, denouncing the two, precipitates an open break and a calm separation between Miss Wynyard and Brook.

Brook makes two attempts to leave the house, but each time is drawn back by something apparently stronger than himself. Newton pursues his love for Miss Wynyard, but then he discovers that Miss Hervey needs him more than does Miss Wynyard and decides to go to her, and from Brook's wife, finally. Brook makes another attempt to seek reconciliation and eventually, realizing that they cannot do without one another when it comes to the showdown, they go off to the country club arm in arm, determined to recapture their love.

White Heat

(J. D. Trop)

Drama

Set in the Hawaiian Islands, this picture, directed by Lois Weber and produced independently, seems to lack the finish which would have enhanced its production value considerably, and consequently makes the best method of handling by the exhibitor an open question.

Scenically, the film has considerable merit, all but one sequence taking place in the islands. A raging fire in the sugar cane which spreads completely over a large part of the island, and a rescue from that fire impart virtually the only punch in the picture. The superimposition of a red tint over the fire scene, intended to increase the effect, serves rather to develop a sense of artificiality in the scene.

The cast is made up partly of native Hawaiians, while the major roles are taken by David Newell, Mona Maris, Virginia Cherrill and Hardie Albright. The selling should be directed along lines of a drama in a tropical setting, with suggestion of the faithfulness and devotion of the native girl for her man, as contrasted to the inability of the white girl from the States to stick it out with the man she married.

Newell, head of a large sugar plantation, is wrapped up in his wearing work to the exclusion of all else. Eventually, however, he becomes attached to a native girl, played well by Mona Maris, and takes her into his home. Her constant fear is that she will one day lose the man to whom she is so devoted. He is called away to the States and the home of his employer, where he meets the employer's attractive daughter, Miss Cherrill. He falls in love with her, they marry, and he returns to the islands with her, Miss Maris leaving.

The boredom tells on Miss Cherrill. She is unable to carry on without the excitement and the luxurious appurtenances to living to which she had been accustomed. When Albright, former fiance, arrives on his yacht, she welcomes him literally with open arms, and when he and Newell fight over his too conspicuous attentions to Miss Cherrill, she sets fire to the sugar cane to save Albright. The entire population turns out to fight the dreaded fire. Newell, directing the firefighters, is thrown from his horse, in the center of the fire, while Miss Cherrill and Albright make good their escape to the yacht. Miss Maris plunges into the flaming cane to rescue Newell, and the two are left together again.

Set in the midweek position, the picture may be sold with emphasis on the setting of the story.—Aaronson, New York.

How's Chances?

(Fox-British)

Musical

Modest but entertaining in the musical comedy vein, this production has one or two good song numbers and a well maintained air of burlesque, plus a reasonable amount of girl glamour, backing a story ingenious of its type. It is light stuff, but there is reason for rejoicing that an independent British studio can turn out comedy as good as this, which is well above quota level.

A German story, "Der Frauen Diplomat," by B. E. Lvethge and Kurt I. Braun, has provided the plot. The Duke of Norrington is a young British peer with an attraction to, and for, the other sex which makes his continued presence in England, as an officer of a crack regiment, inconvenient. He is given a post as attache in the British Embassy in one of those useful Ruritarian countries with a constitution adapted from the libretto of light opera. His reputation has preceded him and the Ambassador, who is trying to negotiate a treaty favorable to Britain, is anxious that there shall not be complications with the Prime Minister, who is trying to divorce his wife, and wants a co-respondent, or the Foreign Minister, who is a devoted but very jealous husband.

In order that Norrington shall be kept on the rails it is arranged that a bar of his old regimental march shall be played whenever he seems to be getting too friendly, at official balls and such celebrations, with either of the ladies. Helen, a ballet dancer, complicates matters. She has seen Norrington's pictures in the paper and has boastfully and untruthfully stated to her cronies that he is her "boy friend" and has to try to make good when the crowd encounter the British hero in a cafe. Of course she wins out, but first there is an ingenious mixup in Norrington's flat, where he is visited by both the ministers' ladies, followed by their spouses. Searching the beedroom, the Ministers find Helen in bed—"planted" by Norrington, who, by threatening them with an action for invading his "wife's" room, coerces them into signing the desired treaty. He, of course, makes Helen's status official.

This is a Continental musical farce in Anglo-Saxon terms and should be sold as such. The story detail provides some useful exploitation hints and it is safe to emphasize a very good comedy study by Morton Selton as the Ambassador.—Allen, London.

Produced by Norman Loudon at Sound City and distributed by Fox. Directed by Anthony Kimmins. Photography by G. Dudgeon Stretton. Sound by J. K. Byers. Art director, D. W. L. Daniels. Music arranged by Hans May. Lyrics and dialogue by Ivar Campbell and Harry Graham.

The Tell-Tale Heart

(DuWorld Pictures)

Drama

As his initial venture in independent production in England, Desmond Hurst has produced an adaptation of the famous story, "The Tell-Tale Heart," of Edgar Allan Poe, and made of it a motion picture of unusual interest and high technical value. It is highly tragic, in the fearsome revelation of the torture wrought by his imagination on the mind of a very young man. For the more or less discriminating audience, especially in the larger metropolitan centers, "The Tell-Tale Heart" offers an opportunity for the exhibitor to present to his patrons the unusual and the excellent.

The fact that the film was made in England need not be stressed by the exhibitor. There are no names with which the exhibitor may entice patronage, the players being all English and all quite unknown to the regular run of American audiences. In the difficult lead is a young player, Norman Dryden, in his initial screen appearance of any sort. His performance reflects favorably. The film has been likened to "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," of important memory on the screen. That likeness may be utilized effectively by the exhibitor in selling this film.

The story, done in the flashback manner, is simplicity itself, and that very simplicity adds greatly to the startling effectiveness of the picture. Technical values are of the highest order throughout. Perhaps women's clubs and previewing groups could be attracted to the film, and their endorsement obtained. It is material strictly for adults. The origin of the story is of definite importance in the selling.

Young Dryden, brought to the office of the superintendent of the insane asylum in which he is incarcerated, and in whose cell are wall drawings of a single eye, declares that he is not insane, as they claim, and proceeds to recount what caused him to be brought to the asylum. The screen tells the story. Dryden is living with an elderly man, whose miserly ways do not disturb him nearly as much as does one of his eyes, which, horribly distorted, lingers continuously in his mind, plays upon his imagination, and seems to follow him wherever he goes. The boy's supersensitive hearing makes a ticking clock sound like hammering on a wall, and enables him to detect the beat of a person's heart.

Driven finally completely distracted by the eye of his friend, and unable to rest his mind even after wandering in the woods with his sweetheart, the boy steals down one night, attacks and kills the old man, and stuffs his body beneath the floor boards. Two investigators, answering the report of some one who had heard a scream, are shown over the house by the boy. They are satisfied, but the boy insists on giving them wine, and as they drink, he imagines he hears the beating of the dead heart beneath the floor. Now completely insane with the pressing weight of his misdeed and the ever present eye and heart, the boy bursts out in a wild confession.—Aaronson, New York.

A Clifton-Hurst production. Distributed in the United States by Du World Pictures, Inc. Directed by Desmond Hurst. From the story by Edgar Allan Poe. Story adaptation and art direction by David Plunkett Greene. Release date, June 5, 1934. Running time, 55 minutes.

Interesting

There is interesting material, partially caught by the cameras of an earlier day, in this latest number in the March of the Years series. The evolution of steam-driven transportation, terminating in the new streamlined trains; the manner in which "Teddy" Roosevelt, when President, stormed through the country, halting the panic of 1907, as paralleling the New Deal recovery from depression of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, highlight a subject of real interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Amusing

Amusing and cleverly handled is this newest Celebrity ComiColor cartoon, produced by U. B. Iwerks, telling the story of the tarts which the queen has made for the king, and their theft by the knave. Soap powder has accidentally gone into them instead of sugar and the tricky knave blows bubbles as he attempts to eat the stolen tarts. Then the figures rush back to their playing card homes. Youngsters especially should be amused by the subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

HOLQUIST

United States Supplied Half of Hungarian Films

Nearly half of all films shown in Hungary during 1933 came from the United States, according to figures recently released in Washington by the department of commerce. The falling off in German imports accounts for a marked increase over the previous year. The drop in the American dollar, making the American film cheaper than before, is also held partially responsible for the increase.

Further importance attaches to the figures when it is understood that fully 38 per cent of the Hungarian population speaks German, whereas less than two per cent understands English. Local product supplied 11 per cent of the total films shown during 1933.

Cantor Scenes at Fair

The opening scenes of the Eddie Cantor musical, "The Treasure Hunt," produced by Samuel Goldwyn for United Artists release, will be filmed at the World's Fair in Chicago. An invitation was extended by Rufus Dawes, president of the Fair.

Denies Trend Is To Neighborhood

To the Editor of the Herald:

In your June 16 issue of the Herald you have a long article to the effect that the outlying theatres are doing a much better business than other theatres and that they have shown substantial gain in business. We do not know who made your reports, but it seemed to be by a reporter who had determined in advance to make a report of this kind or who is either working for the benefit of the producers or the exchanges who will soon present new contracts and will use your articles to try to get higher film rental or larger percentage.

The city of Louisville is no different than any other city in the United States and we know what is true in one large city is true of all the rest. We operate the seven largest motion picture outlying or neighborhood theatres in the city of Louisville and they are located in all sections of the city as follows:

Mr. Sylvester Grove also operates two large outlying theatres in the city, the Capitol and the Shelby. None of these theatres seat less than seven hundred and are equipped with Western Electric equipment. We receive our films generally second, third and fourth run after they are shown in the downtown district.

We wish to state that the motion picture business is worse than it has been in 10 years, that our receipts are smaller and that our nets are less or in the red. Our film rental is higher than it has been at any time of our existence, which dates back to 1908. In addition to lower gross and net receipts, the Kentucky legislature this week passed a three per cent sales tax on gross receipts. That means that we must pay three per cent of the gross business we do, although we show a loss in our net receipts.

In our opinion, the outlying theatres of Kentucky are in a deplorable state and we do not believe that under the present condition of high film rental and taxes, any outlying theatre can survive very much longer. As you have published the article showing a great increase in some cities of neighborhood business, we now request that you publish this item showing the bad state of affairs in Louisville and also in the State of Kentucky.—Louis F. Steuerle, 402 Alamo Theatre Building, Louisville, Ky.

Fanchon & Marco To Get St. Louis Houses in Fall

Fanchon & Marco are expected to take over the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres in St. Louis in September, while confirmation of the sale of the houses to the bondholders' protective committee for $2,000,000 is scheduled July 3.

Sixty days after the present receivership expires, Fanchon & Marco will get the theatres. The expiration is anticipated shortly after the confirmation of sale.

Shirley Temple Shorts

Smart showmen are cashing in on the sky-rocketting popularity of little Shirley Temple, the wonder girl of the screen, who has swept the country by her remarkable performance in several recent features.

Several good short subjects were made under the Educational banner before she went into featured roles and should be played, regardless of whether you have played them before.

Book them in and give them a good play in all your advertising, lobby, trailers, etc. It will get you dough especially now while everyone is talking about her. Take this tip, Mr. Theatreman, and contact your Fox-Educational exchange right away.

Shirley Temple short subjects are exploitation specials in leading New York theatres.

DEAR HERALD:

We have received two or three letters from "Gertrude" in the Round Table Club department of the Herald. If Gertrude is married and has seven or eight children who refer to her as "The Old Woman," it is no wonder that she called us "A sly old fox," but we have written her and informed her that out here we are being referred to by our golf associates and the jawbone poker club as "the wolf" and that there isn't a drop of fox blood in us.

She writes us that she has found a new way of making biscuits, that instead of using soda in them she uses cement, and that A-Mike Vogel uses them for killing wild elephants and other predatory animals in the jungles on Broadway. We hope A-Mike will be careful; he might hit a producer. If Gertrude has not made the mistake that hundreds of other New York girls have made, and she is being addressed as "Miss Gertrude," it is no wonder that she is considered the belle of that cross-roads village. Out here she would look like a crocus in a snowdrift.

Dempsey in Films—Once

Last night we saw George White's "Scandals," and, as you probably already know, this is a musical show, and if your audience likes musicals they will undoubtedly like this one, for it has an usual bunch of well dressed (?) dancing girls and George White, and George White is a good one and played an excellent part with what he was given to play. Besides that it had Rudy Vallee and Jimmy Durante, and what more could you ask for?

There was a time when Jack Dempsey was the champion boxer of the Ozarks and part of Hollywood, and they put him in pictures (once).

Jack Pearl is undoubtedly a fine gentleman. We don't know, but as a liar Baron Munchausen almost took the belt away from Nicky Goldheimer of Minneapolis. They put Jack in pictures (once).

As a crooner of love songs on the radio Rudy Vallee crushes the hearts and ambitions of thousands of young and giddy girls. They put him in "The Scandals."

Jimmy Durante might have been raised and educated on the "east side, west side, all around the town"; we don't know; it might have been the Bowery. Anyhow, if the critics for the various fan magazines have some stars that are not working they might use some of them to decorate their reports on this one.

Sooner Catch One Trout

As we said before if your customers like musicals with plenty of dancing girls, we think they will like "The Scandals," but when it comes to fishing we'd sooner catch one trout than a dozen carp, and "David Harum" is the trout, but maybe that's because there were no crooners in it and Will Rogers is a favorite of ours.

A few days ago we called on A. F. Jenkins of David City, Neb., and we found him in bed at about 4 P. M. and when you find a Jenkins in bed at 4 P. M. you may know that he has had something stronger than 3.2. Well, A. F. had something stronger than 3.2. He had had a cleaver used on him twice by a big, stout surgeon who was able to kill an ox, but he couldn't kill A. F. Notwithstanding he cut some holes in him like he was chopping out a skunk from a hollow tree. A. F. says that if the doctors don't need any more money he thinks he will get well. Mrs. Jenkins runs the theatre while A. F. is convalescing and cussing. Both of 'em are doing a good job of it. We hope they both succeed.

We just got a nice, long letter from Jeannette Meehan, but maybe you don't know who Jeannette is. Jeannette, with the assistance of Mildred Early, is the girl who furnishes a lot of the brains around the Herald office in Hollywood, and they've got a lot of brains around there. Just because we mentioned something about Gertrude in one of our former colyums it blew up the whole works out in the Hollywood office and Jeannette writes to remind us not to allow our shape to go to our head and make us think that the girls lay awake nights to dream about us, for she compares our shape to that of a bullfrog. If Jeannette wasn't a grand-daughter of Jean Stratton Porter she might be a grand-daughter of Roosevelt, who knows? Darned if she isn't nice enough to be grand-daughter of anybody, even our own.

Choice of Two Rivers

Billy Youngclaus has sold his theatre in Madison to John Neffsinger and he is now the owner and operator of the Swan theatre in Columbus. Columbus is a good town (and so is Billy) and if he doesn't make the show business pay there the rest of them better stay out. Columbus has about nine thousand able-bodied citizens and they are so situated that they can go fishing either in the Platte or Loupe rivers, as they like, but they better fish in the Loupe, for the Platte was drier than a congressman when we crossed it. They had taken the water all out for irrigation.

We had a fine visit with Mr. and Mrs. Neffsinger at Madison. We met Mr. Neffsinger in a town in Iowa last season and sold him the Herald. He and his wife scrap for it every time the postman brings it. That's the objection of having such a good magazine. It has separated some mighty good families on that account.

Mr. and Mrs. Cool still operate the theatre at Seward. When we called on them recently Mr. Cool was down on the bank of the Blue River finishing up a cabin they expect to occupy the balance of the summer. Mr. Cool wants us to come down there and show him how to catch catfish. It must be that the boys think we are posted along that line. The crops around Seward are much like they are over the balance of the state. The small grain is practically gone and the pastures look like they do in January. The corn looks good except that the stand is poor in many cases on account of the dry weather and much of it didn't sprout, but since the Government is paying the farmers to let portions of their land lie idle, what's the difference?

Cosmetics Plus Films

Ole Bennett has a beauty parlor in connection with his theatre at Auburn. We doubt if Ole frizzes the hair or spreads on the cosmetics (or other injurious substances), but he wants 'em to look pretty so that if they don't like the picture they can look at one another, and this will pass away the evening.

Bob Booth has the other theatre in Auburn and he and Ole get along fine, and that's the way for them to get along. Bob knows how to drive a ball off the tee as well as how to run a theatre, and they both dovetail together, which makes a good combination. You can put Auburn on the map as having two good theatremen.

We had a good visit with Mr. and Mrs. John J. Metzger, who operate the theatre at Syracuse. J. J. is always doing something around his theatre to make it more attractive every time we call. When we called this time he was at the theatre doing something and he had worked up a sweat, so we took him over where there was a Neon sign which read "3.2" and we cooled him off. After that he took us up to his house where we met Mrs. Metzger and where we had a fine visit, as we always do when we go there.

Roy Small operates the theatre at Wymore, and Wymore is a good town or else Roy wouldn't be there. They have to be good if Roy stays in 'em, and the theatre has to be a good one if Roy has anything to do with it, and that being the case Ernie thinks it is about time we brought this to a close, and Ernie knows.

Ross Federal Service Transfers Two Managers

W. O. Redden, Des Moines manager of the Ross Federal Service, Inc., has been transferred to the Albany office, and Harry Schriffin has moved from the Albany office to Des Moines. The transfers were made by Harry A. Ross, president. Mr. Ross has been conferring with officials of the Ford exposition at the World's Fair, Chicago, for whom he has been engaged in traffic checks.

Sax Challenges Any Dancers to Outdo His

Sam Sax, in charge of production at the Vitaphone short subject studio in Brooklyn, N. Y., has issued a challenge to all motion picture producers and dance directors to present a group of dancers who will outdance his corps of 16 stock dancers at the studio, used in musical numbers, and in whom he seems to have considerable confidence.

EDWIN CAREWE'S ARE WE CIVILIZED?

THE PRESS! THE RADIO! THE PUBLIC! THE PULPIT!

LEADERS IN ALL WALKS OF LIFE ACCLAIM THIS MIGHTY EPIC!

WALTER WINCHEL on national coast-to-coast radio hook-up said: "'ARE WE CIVILIZED' MAKES THE MOST STIRRING PLEA FOR PEACE, HEARD AND SEEN, YET."

"If I were President of these United States I would endeavor to have a law passed compelling every man, woman and child to see 'ARE WE CIVILIZED.'"
—Ed Wynn

"I congratulate you and regard 'ARE WE CIVILIZED' as one of the most outstanding pictures I have ever seen."
—J. F. T. O'Connor, Controller U. S. Currency.

"VOICE OF EXPERIENCE" over national radio hook-up said: "I watched my old friend William Farnum enact the greatest characterization of his entire career . . . I hope you will see this picture for yourselves."

"I saw, and I hope many of you will see, the movie entitled 'ARE WE CIVILIZED' —excerpt from sermon in St. Bartholomew's Church, New York by Rev. Geo. Paul T. Sargent, D. D.

"May I recommend 'ARE WE CIVILIZED' to every father, mother, yes, to every teacher and to every pupil of our vast school system."— Maxwell Ross, Chairman, Allied Local School Boards, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Has great mass appeal . . . fine direction . . . the film is going to be eaten up in the small towns."—Chick Lewis, Showmen's Round Table.

"Timely appeal to reason . . . it is skillfully made, powerfully acted by William Farnum and it features some stunning, spectacular scenes — New York Mirror

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Robert Armstrong—This is a good Saturday bill, plenty of action and thrills. Business off a little due to hot weather and local competition. Played June 1-2.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones—Average western that seemed to please the action fans. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 6.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong, Ann Sothern—No objectionable features, plenty of action. Good program picture for one day. Played June 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Very good western. Lots of action. Made more money than most of the big specials. Running time, 63 minutes. Played June 5-6.—H. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young—This might have been a swell picture, but they spoiled it by injecting a lot of unnecessary rough stuff. Very poor business on this. Played May 29-30.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—An excellent picture well produced with a splendid cast of well known featured players with excellent direction and an unusual and interesting story, all taking place in a hospital. Columbia should be proud of this one. Played June 5-6.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE: Tim McCoy, Barbara Weeks—Waited a long time to play this one and got stung. Recording poor and Tim can't talk. Poses too much. Getting too old to always get the young girls. Pass it up, unless you just have to have a western, as I did.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SONG YOU GAVE ME, THE: Bebe Daniels, Victor Varconi—An English made picture. The worst Columbia has done since "The Dreyfus Case." Bebe Daniels is all right but she can't do it all with the role she has. Anyway, patrons did not like it. Some walked out on it. Running time, 64 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—Good picture for Friday and Saturday. Plenty of action. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard—A few more nitwit reviews from "Liberty" like this one and we will all be broke. How they gave this four stars, I will wonder until I die. If you haven't dated this, don't do it. Go somewhere and see it and then let them sue you, take your theatre, or anything they want to do, but don't play "20th Century." We never would have known what the story was had we not read the brief in the press book. It had more walkouts than I have ever had on a picture since I got into the show business. If I read one good report in this column about this picture, the writer can be assured that he will hear from me. This production is an insult to the American theatre patron. The acting is good but that is all that can be said of it. After reading all the reviews on this picture, I have decided that I am crazy and shouldn't have commented on this picture. Running time, nine reels. Played June 15-16.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—A good Saturday show, lots of action. Played June 9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee—Very acceptable program picture. Holds interest. No objectionable features. Played June 2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Joe is grand in this excellent picture. It will please anywhere and anyone. Good clean fun that is typical of Joe's pictures. Make every effort to get your patrons in to see it, it will help your theatre. Joe gives his best work so far. Running time, 68 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Very good. Will please any audience anywhere. It did not do any extra business, but those who saw it were well pleased.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis—Very satisfactory picture. Nothing big but nevertheless good entertainment. Powell's lightning "high pressure" action and salesmanship character is very interesting throughout and Frank McHugh brings in several good laughs too. Business was way below average for the title killed it. Personally, I think the public are just about fed up on musicals. If you get them in to see it, they will go out satisfied, but the title will keep the men away. An average business is all you can get out of it for it does not seem to have that "little drawing power touch." Played June 10-12.—R. H. Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brookesville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess—A good picture that pleased. It did not do any business for me but that was through no fault of the picture. Nothing pulls them in these days.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown, Jean Muir—A laugh from beginning to end and I think that is what everyone is looking for, or the majority at least. It certainly is one good picture and seemed to please everyone. This with a Warner musical, what else could one wish. Played June 8-9.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—This is a very amusing and entertaining picture and did a nice Saturday business. Played June 8-9.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Mighty pleasing Saturday night picture for us. Running time, 73 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—This nice picture will please everyone. We had only fair business. Don't know why it did not draw more, as it is one of Warner's best. The three leading characters are excellent. The rest of the cast are also good. Running time, 88 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

Fox

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—Too much talking about nothing. Baxter tries hard to put it over, but nothing to the story. Our few walked and squawked. Wish I had refused it. Just the kind that drives the men to ball games and the ladies to bridge. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 12-13.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—Here's one sweet picture at the box-office, well received and liked by one and all. Personally don't like Gaynor in anything, but old Barrymore is the screen's best. The negro, Stepin Fetchit, is very good and undoubtedly the laziest one on record. He's almost too lazy to talk. Played May 21-22.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—One sweet picture. Janet Gaynor may be getting old to some in this type role, but to our way of thinking it's the kind that made her famous and it's the kind that will keep her that way. Played June 10-11.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Ran this on a double bill with "I Believed In You" and got by. Personally, I don't think this is a very bad picture. It seemed to please. It is by no means anything extra but just an everyday program picture. Business below average. Played June 13-14.—R. H. Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brookesville, Fla. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—This one is okay from every angle you can figure. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 25-26.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Positively the most pleasing picture since talking pictures came along. The best business since hot weather. Now who will say clean pictures don't draw? More like it, Mr. Rogers, please. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 3-4.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

DEVIL TIGER: Kane Richmond—A full length traveltalk feature, story only incidental. This subject failed to arouse much interest. However, it has animals and animal fights never before filmed. Did extra advertising with special matinee which was a flop. Don't do any out of the ordinary stunts, as they won't help. Just play it. Played May 25-26.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien—A mighty pleasing picture. Clean and our patrons said "cute." Good any day in our town. Title attracted the ladies, George O'Brien the men and boys, who wanted a western. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 5-6.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—An all around good show for Saturday. It will satisfy your western fans and any others that you can get in to see it. Played June 16.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye—One swell show that failed to make expenses during good weather and with no opposition. Just can't decide why I didn't take care of my overdraft on this one. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—A fair program picture that will get by. A little slow and draggy in spots. Played June 8-9.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey—This is a very nicely mounted picture, but the puppet stuff was greatly overdone. It became boresome and on this account wasn't liked by my patrons. Played June 4-5.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

I BELIEVED IN YOU: John Boles, Rosemary Ames—Nothing. Just a great big waste of good film. A picture like this is the reason why we should continue to run double bills all over the country, for it gives us a chance to run this sort of stuff first and wind up the show with a second good feature, thereby not making the patrons feel as if they want their money back. We're taking a beating with Fox this year. Played June 13-14.—R. H. Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brookesville, Fla. Small town patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Only a fair program picture. Fox seems to think since their success with "Bad Girl" two or three years ago, that every picture of that type should be a success, but they are not. Played June 12-13.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—A very good picture with plenty of action. However, it was very difficult to understand. Played June 1-2.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye—Just a little under average program fare. Good acting but a poor story. Business about average. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 1-2.—Charles

S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—Very, very good for a horse picture. Played June 2-3.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY: Otto Kruger, Nancy Carroll—Another, old boy, old topper, English. I thought the exchange was doing me a favor by booking this early. Eight reels of cheese as far as the small town goes. Either see this before you book or leave the house dark. Played June 8-9-10.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Nebr. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter—Not a special as Fox claims. Business below average. Shirley Temple the hit of the picture. Except for her number, the picture is only so-so.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—Fair program picture that showed a nice loss. Would have taken a lot of "Life Buoy" soap to cure our "bo" on this one. Running time, 95 minutes. Played June 8-9.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General.

Invincible

MGM

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeannette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—A nice picture, interesting story, beautiful settings and entrancing music, but Novarro just seems to be poison to the box-office here and MacDonald doesn't mean a thing as far as drawing power is concerned. Poorest weekend business since "Laughing Boy." Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—I would not call this a good picture to draw in a small town but the cash customers came in. Poor sound on this one. Played June 5-6.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: All Star—Well, the great event has come and gone, the playing of "Dinner at Eight." As a flop it was a proud success. It did no business, and worse, did not please the few that did come to see it. Pulled it on second day. It's just a waste of stars. Harlow and Beery whole picture.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—Wonderful scenes of the Arctic but did not appeal to many. Business fair first day, second and third day nothing.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies, Bing Crosby—Good. Worth two of your "Dinner at Eight" specials. Pleased them all.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—This picture has no drawing power due to lack of any star names but is a dandy little picture and will please those who you can get in. Did fairly good here. Played June 13.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—This is good for your best nights and will please all classes. Outstanding performance by the three stars. Played June 10-11. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—One of the best in a long, long time. Drew fairly well. Good story. Is everything the name implies. Played June 14-15-16. —R. E. Wanamaker, Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ohio. General patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo—Some wonderful acting and handsome costumes, that's all. It's another choice bit of meat for the League of Decency. One of my Catholic patrons remarked to my wife, "such a loose woman." When will the producers wake up? When it's too late? Boys, pass this one up. It does not mean a thing at the box-office but a headache.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—A good Crawford picture that pleased. Above average business in spite of the heat.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy, Madge Evans —This is fair entertainment of the comedy-drama variety. Spencer Tracy as the smart aleck with beautiful Madge Evans as his wife put the romantic touch into this. This seemed to appeal to the masses and my patrons thought it very good. However, it is only a one-day picture and will not stand more than that. We ran this one day, Bargain Day, to a good business and pleased all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller —About the same sort and quality of picture as the original "Tarzan of the Apes." The kids think it's great. Played here to very good weekend business. Running time, 104 minutes. Played June 15.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THREE ADDED TO REORTER LISTS

Entering the ranks of the reportorial corps of the "What the Picture Did for Me" department, this week have come three new members, representing the Midwest and Northwest. Their reports appearing in this issue, they are:

John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Neb.

H. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash.

R. E. Wanamaker, Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ohio.

Monogram

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—Just the kind of a western our Saturday crowd likes. Possibly not enough cowboy singing, but he does talk plain and doesn't stall around. Running time, 55 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Paramount

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard—I call this a good picture and it ought to go big with the ladies, but hot weather or something knocked it way down here. Played June 3-4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen, Grace Bradley, Ida Lupino, Roscoe Karns—A marine comedy that has plenty of action, comedy and spicy dialogue. That fellow Roscoe Karns sure is a pip. Played May 18-19.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable—Some will like it, others will not. Holds interest, if you like it. Nothing objectionable and strictly adult entertainment. By reading synopsis you will probably know whether it will go over in your town. It's well acted. Played June 7-8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable—This is a very unusual and different picture from anything ever presented before. It deals with that dreaded subject—death. It is not gruesome, but a beautiful romantic love story with sparkling dialogue. March turns in the best acting of his entire career and the rest of the cast are wonderful in their roles. We played this only one day to a fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Miriam Hopkins, Fredric March, Gary Cooper—A very high class sophisticated comedy that did nice business and pleased the majority. A little too much chatter and not enough action. Played May 28-29.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE DOOR: Kent Taylor, Mary Morris—Here is another poor picture from Paramount. It is of the mystery type and presents a light, romantic drama that is free of action and comedy. This is just the type of picture that is ruining the theatres and here's hoping the producers will soon learn that the public does not want them. We played this on Saturday to only a fair business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott, Barbara Fritchie—Just the kind of western the fans seem to like. Business better than for some weeks. Played May 19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Charlie Ruggles—This is a very good little picture. It is a comedy with music. Lanny Ross sings a few vocal selections and the comedy is furnished by Charlie Ruggles. Ross has an excellent voice and was well received here. Don't overlook this point in your advertising as your patrons have heard Ross over the radio many times. This is good entertainment and we played it one day to good business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Paramount is to be commended for giving us this picture. It's clean and Lanny Ross has a wonderful voice and Ruggles and Boland deliver their usual performance. The milking in the pasture scene is excellent. We consider it excellent entertainment, good for your best days. Played June 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Jack Oakie, Victor McLaglen—A well produced, very elaborate musical that did a fair business. There are some awfully good tunes in this picture and they are presented in extravagant style that is typical of Carroll's stage shows. Brisson was liked by some. Jack Oakie and Victor McLaglen pleased with their work; they make a good team. This would have been beautiful in color. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 5-6.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

PRIVATE SCANDAL: Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes—A fair picture that is saved by Ned Sparks. Some comedy and some mystery. The usual dumb detective puzzling out whether it was suicide or murder. Will make a Friday-Saturday picture if you get it to them that it is mostly comedy.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Buster Crabbe, Ida Lupino—Some of my patrons liked this, others said it was poor. Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—A fairly well liked program subject. Arlen and Eilers are always good and Grace Bradley is plenty hot as usual. Arlen's baby is the cutest baby every seen in the movies, I do believe. Played June 1-2.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—This did not go over for us. No drawing power to any of the stars in this picture. Paramount pictures just don't click for us. This lost money. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—An excellent production. Each actor a "card." Unfortunately, whether the heat or some other reason, the attendance was the lowest in months. Played June 2.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—This is a crazy farce comedy. Good entertainment. Just got by on Sunday. Played June 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney—Nice entertainment. Better than expected. Business average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—I can't give this much. Did not please here.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft, Adolphe Menjou, Frances Drake—Paramount evidently thinks they have another Valentino in this Raft person but they have not. This picture is on the order of "Blood and Sand" that Valentino made. This star does not pull for us and this picture has not helped any. They dragged in botherly love and a lot more things that were not logical. Not much good in a small town. They don't give a hoot to see a bullfight in the small towns and the picture flopped, that is what the picture is built around. Something missing somewhere, whether it was direction or story, I can't say, but they did not like it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—This picture pleased everyone. Fields is excellent and in this he gives one of his best performances. Only fair Monday business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 4.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—A good clean show that will keep them in good humor. By far Field's best picture. Drew fair business in spite of carnival and swimming pool. Played June 11-12.—W. F. (Bill) Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

RKO

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett—This is a well made picture with a rather familiar story. Business just so-so. Played May 27-28.—Roy W. Adams,

You will want these air conditioning charts to aid you this summer!

AIR CONDITIONING CHARTS

that represent standard practice in air conditioning engineering, adapted for the first time to motion picture theatre use. Originally published in Better Theatres, these charts and their explanations are now made available to theatre managers and technicians in a durable form suited to ready reference. Each chart is readily accessible by itself, while each is accompanied by an explanation that also gives practical advice on how to attain the best atmospheric conditions for any season. These chart sheets therefore apply to operating routine for any time of year, winter or summer. They are contained in a single sheet of cardweight paper measuring 22 inches wide and 17 inches high, so folded according to chart divisions that each readily fits the pocket. Unfolded, the sheet may be tacked on the wall. The folders may be had until the supply is exhausted at 25 cents each. Send payment with order. Use the coupon below.

Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DELUGE, THE: Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson—Good picture of its kind. Did not draw very good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—I signed my name to our ad on this one. I have to feel it is good to do that. It helped to draw some. Played June 10-11-12.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—The usual Wheeler and Woolsey fare. A lot of laughs and the picture is better than their last two but they remembered how raw "So This Is Africa" was and a lot stayed away on that account, I think. Then we have some patrons that do not like them and say so, but the picture is good entertainment with some few broad wisecracks. If you ask me the public wants a little spice in their pictures regardless of what the Purity League thinks. The public that goes to the movies are the best judges of what they want and not the reformers.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—It brought in a few extra people that very seldom go to the movies. Very good picture for the old timers but too slow for a steady diet. Rotten sound on this one. Did not do as good on this as we expected to.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LONG LOST FATHER: John Barrymore—This is a better picture than I expected after reading some exhibitors' blue reports on it. It seemed to please and did a fair midweek business. Played June 12-13.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A very poor picture to poor business. A typical RKO picture that has no drawing power. In spite of all of the tremendous publicity RKO has given Hepburn, she is just another flop in our town. RKO cannot very well make an interesting picture, but when they star Hepburn in it, then it is doubly boresome. 100 per cent talking. We played this one two days to poor business and many walkouts. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 11-12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—Good comedy mystery drama. Fine chance for tieups and exploitation. Played June 17-18.—R. E. Wanamaker, Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ohio. General patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding, Nils Asther—Fair but did not draw the second night. Played June 7-8.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—Fair entertainment. Business above average. Good opera singing by Irene Dunne. Locale in Australia. Played June 12-13.—R. E. Wanamaker, Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ohio. General patronage.

State Rights

ELYSIA: I played this nudist picture just to try to take care of some of my losses on the lemons I have been getting. Business was good. I showed this one to mixed audience. No one under 16 admitted. We showed it just like it came out of the can and I wouldn't be afraid of it. Though it really is in the nude, it is a lot cleaner picture than a lot of the ones I have been showing. It will get the money if you advertise it as hot and that they shouldn't see it, etc., but after they have seen it they will tell you that it wasn't so hot. However, it is well made and the sound is good. If you need some extra change, show it on a midnight show and you will get results. Running time, five reels. Played May 19.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—This excellent picture pleased everyone that saw it. It failed to do as well as we expected. Perhaps it will not prove to be a small town attraction. After seeing it you can readily understand its great popularity in the large cities. Mr. Arliss is magnificent and is wonderfully supported by the rest of the cast. This picture will please, but will they come out to see it? The color scene is very fine and everyone appreciated its beauty. I believe the producers would not be disappointed if color was used more frequently. Our patrons certainly like color product. Do your best to get everyone to see this production. Running time, 86 minutes. Played May 30-31.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Koris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Here is another disappointment from Universal. It is too highly advertised for what it presents and I advise you not to do what Universal did. It is supposed to be a thrill drama, but the thrills are missing and there is little action. With Karloff and Lugosi a splendid picture could have been made, but Universal muffed their chance. Played one day, Saturday, to only fair business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Lowest gross in six months and more walkouts than in 12 months. Notice some have made favorable reports on this. Can't see where they get it. It's silly, Paul Lukas is hard to understand, and as far as my situation is concerned, the whole thing was a pain in the neck. Played June 14-15.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi—Saturday night audiences ordinarily do not care for sophisticated movies so our attendance was not what a picture of this type should command. Most of those who attended were satisfied, however. Played June 9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—This is a clever and sophisticated comedy drama but a European locale and European cast killed it for my community. Played June 5-6.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore—We liked Barrymore better in this one than anything we have had him in. Pleased the patrons, also should draw good. Running time, 80 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore, Bebe Daniels—This is only fair entertainment. It is another special that broke all house records for poor business. As a rule the producers call their best pictures specials, but if this one is a sample of Universal's best, then we don't want any more. The entire picture was taken in one office and the recording was terrible. We had to play it two days and then didn't take in film rental. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 7-8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—Very pleasing audience picture, Clean, light and much better than expected by title. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 10-11.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—When Tracy tells the world, it is all Tracy and no mistake. Every picture that we have played of this star there might as well be no others in the cast. He is the whole show and while he is good, you can get too much of a good thing. Every shot is built around him and while he carries his role all right, it would be well if the pictures were not subordinated to him.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles—Just as good if not better than "Back Street" and "Seed." Will please the audience, especially the ladies. Would be all right if we could get them all like this one. Running time, 102 minutes.—L. D. Brown Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Ken Maynard fails to satisfy as he used to. Business not too good, either. Played May 27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir—After seeing a screening of this picture we played it on our regular Family Days and made an especial appeal to our rural patrons to come and see it and how they did turn out. Believe me, it was a pleasure to listen to the favorable comments as they left the theatre.

Played June 12-13.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson—Here is a great little picture that is fast moving and full of pep. It is a comedy that will please both young and old. It is a story of youth, filled with romance, comedy thrills and a slight musical touch. LeRoy's dance is the best scene in the show and that alone is worth the price of the picture. After seeing it you will agree that he is the world's best. Business above average. Running time, 66 minutes. Played June 13.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

World Wide - Fox

TOMBSTONE CANYON: Ken Maynard—A good story and enough action to make it as good as the average western. Running time, 58 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BILL POSTER, THE: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Pretty good cartoon comedy. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

PAPA'S BOY: Lloyd Hamilton—The best one from Educational. The two papas steal it from Hamilton. Story, slapstick comedy.—John Cosner, Sun Theatre, Sargent, Nebr.

RIP VAN WINKLE: Terry-Toons—One of the best of this series. Some good music and singing.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

FLYING HUNTERS: Oddities—Very interesting short that was appreciated here. Most of this series have been good. Running time, one reel.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

I'LL TAKE VANILLA: Charley Chase—I guess this will get by. Nothing extra. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LUNCHEON AT TWELVE: Charley Chase—Another good slapstick comedy from Chase. Will keep them laughing and should please all customers. Chase, as an interior decorator, is very funny and turns in one of the best comedies in quite a while. Come on, Charley, let's have more. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S RISE TO FAME: Betty Boop—Here is one of the best cartoons Paramount has made this season. It presents Betty at her best in a review of some of her old shorts. Good entertainment and will please both young and old. Let's have more like this one. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: This is just another waste of time and money. A one reeler showing a few scenes of some of the stars in Hollywood at work and play. Only fair entertainment and as a rule will not please. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SEASIN'S GREETINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Popeye always good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

LION TAMER, THE: Amos 'n Andy—Good for a change, little disappointed. Probably expected too much.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Universal

WHERE'S ELMER?: Vince Barnett—This is a dizzy dish of tripe without a laugh in it. Running time, two reels.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BUDDY'S TROLLEY TROUBLES: Looney Tunes—Here is a very good cartoon comedy that is interesting and also full of laughs. It is good entertainment for both young and old and will please them all. When you want good shorts, just book them from Vitaphone and rest assured of the best. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PETTIN' IN THE PARK: Merrie Melodies—A very good musical cartoon comedy of the popular song hit. This is good entertainment and pleased our entire audience. These one reelers are great and there have not been any bad ones yet. Personally I think these are as good as any on the market. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PIE A LA MODE: Broadway Brevities—Fair. These Brevities are not near as good as they used to be. It looks as if Vitaphone is slipping. Not worth the money they cost. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PUGS AND KISSES: Charles Judels—This is a good comedy of the slapstick variety but will not please as well as most of the others because Judels is not well known or very popular. He is very good and was well liked. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STORY CONFERENCE: Lillian Roth—Another good one from Warner. Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGE CEREMONIES: Musical World Journeys—Poor. These reels just don't go over. Running time, nine reels.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MYSTERY SQUADRON: Bob Steele—On the sixth chapter this is holding up fairly well. So far there hasn't been so much repetition as some of their serials have had.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

PIRATE TREASURE: Richard Talmadge, Lucille Lund—This held up fairly well throughout. It would have been better if they had let Dick Talmadge do more acrobatic stunts. A little rough and tumble fighting is all right but twelve episodes of it grows monotonous.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AND IT STILL IS

On the editorial page, issue of June 24, 1933, your Chairman in introducing himself to the membership, set forth his sentiments under the heading, "Still Your Business" regarding the manager's vital importance to the industry.

From these first words, we take the liberty of repeating the following paragraph:

"Studio executives, stars, directors, cameramen, division managers, home office advertising managers, branch sales managers, film salesmen, operators, ushers, cashiers, porters, doormen—they all wait on you. For your OK and yours only starts that precious stream of dimes and quarters into your box office that makes it possible for the industry to survive."

A year of tremendous change has since passed. The theatre map has been formed and reformed. New leaders have been appointed, new systems inaugurated. And in the face of all obstacles, the manager has marched ahead, chin up, doing a day's job and doing it well.

He has proven that what we emphasized twelve months ago is doubly true today. Yes, gentlemen—"in spite of hell and high water, this still is your business."

A FINE COMPLIMENT

Montreal still echoes to the praises of the Quigley Award winners for May and the presentation ceremonies in which over 250 representative Canadians, led by Mayor Houde, participated in honor of Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay.

According to Mr. Duncan MacInness, special correspondent, the occasion established a number of "firsts" in Canadian theatre history—for instance:

The first time any Montreal Mayor has appeared in person at a theatrical gathering; first time the ultra conservative Montreal "Gazette" has ever run pictures pertaining to theatres in any way; first time theatre managers have ever had pictures and story on front page; first time theatre managers were given testimonial luncheon and such an ovation.

Further, in presenting the plaques, His Honor said:

"The motion picture business in Montreal has needed an incentive. I know that the winning of this splendid plaque will arouse more competition, and probably out of the fight which will ensue, the plaque should come to Montreal again."

That the Quigley competition has been the means of evoking such high regard for the abilities of these Canadian theatremen should be a source of great satisfaction to all showmen, irrespective of where they may happen to be located.

And that Mayor Houde credits the Awards with being the incentive to better business is not only a compliment to the Quigley project, but also to the managers all over the world who have made its success possible.

" 'TIS AN ILL WIND"

If the depression has done nothing else to help the theatre, it has brought about a welcome change in the attitude of previously tough-to-crack newspapers toward picture tieups. With the drastic cutting down of general advertising, publishers heretofore content with boom time profits have begun to look with favor upon the dollars and cents value of cooperation with local houses. Thus, in increasing numbers, members are reporting "first time" tieups with their papers, and page one breaks to plug the hookups are far from infrequent.

The turning of many newspapers to the theatre during the lean years for further means of stimulating sales proves again: " 'Tis an ill wind that blows no one good."

The scene was the ticket booth of a Broadway first run—time about noon. Half turned from the window was the cashier bent over a magazine in which she was engrossed to the exclusion of the few seeking admission. Called back to life by one of the customers, the gal poked the ticket machine, made change, and immediately returned to the spell of her story.

The barker out front kept calling—"there are seats on all floors. A new and complete show is now about to begin."

OPTIMISTIC NOTE

The number of managers this year receiving vacations with pay shows a definite increase over the summer of 1933, judging by the numerous visits we have already enjoyed at Club headquarters this month with out-of-town members.

There are many exhibitors who are shrewd enough to grant yearly vacations with pay in good times or bad, but no doubt the general loosening this season of exhibitor purse strings denotes a definite improvement in current grosses.

Should this state of affairs continue, we may begin to look forward to increases in theatre salaries and perhaps even a day off for managers not now so singularly blessed.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Novel Trailer Gag Plugs 'Monica' Date

Starting the campaign off some five weeks ahead, with the hanging of two huge banners from the roof of the Strand Theatre building, as illustrated previously in these pages, the Warner Metropolitan Theatres' exploitation crew rounded up a raft of selling slants to publicize the opening of "Dr. Monica."

Barricades were built up for the fronts of the Warner and Hollywood Theatres carrying photo enlargements of Kay Francis, and an overhead arch was installed in the Strand lobby, color scheme, being dark blue; background was lemon yellow and white characters, all enlargements being in full color. The flash was moved out front after the opening.

Unique was the first advance trailer, also used five weeks ahead. This consisted of a series of single frames reading, "Is Dr. Monica in the house?" "Dr. Monica is wanted on the telephone" and "Will Dr. Monica please call at the manager's office?" As was to be expected, the stunt created a lot of favorable buzzing.

Special heralds adapted from the cover design of the press book were placed in key boxes of many hotels, these serving both as throwaways and programs. Special letters were sent to the first night lists of the Theatre Guild, copy calling attention to the fact that the picture had been from an outstanding foreign play.

A chain shoe store hookup netted 600 line ads in local and surrounding newspapers. Beauty shop tieups brought further newspaper display, and two line front page leaders were also planted. Advertising napkins placed in cafeterias and lunch stands in the midtown area also called attention to the date.

WHO ARE THE "BARNUMS"?

The $250 in cash prizes announced by Warner Brothers in last week's issue, for the best all-around promotion campaigns on "The Circus Clown" starring Joe E. Brown, should stir up a lot of excitement among showmen playing the picture. The Warnerites invite all the "modern Barnums"—theatre owners or managers to compete for these attractive awards, distributed as follows:

First prize, $100; second, $50; third, $25; fourth to seventh, $10 each; eighth to fourteenth, $5 each. In case of ties, duplicate awards will be given. Contest has already begun and closes at midnight, Saturday, Sept. 1. Visual evidence of everything used must accompany each entry.

This seems to be a great spot for Round Tablers to go "circus," and we look forward to a flock of prize winning entries from the members.

Agnew "Week" Put On by John Friedl

A nice gesture on the part of the Minnesota Amusement Co., toward Neil Agnew, recently appointed general sales manager of Paramount Pictures, is a "Paramount Appreciation Week" to take place early in July, in honor of that executive. The idea was conceived by general division director John J. Friedl and worked out by circuit ad chief Charlie Winchell and his staff.

Charlie has created a very complete manual that covers every possible angle of advertising and exploitation. Copies have been forwarded to every manager in the circuit and include much meat, such as broadcasts in advance by Messrs. Friedl and Ludwig, advance trailers, special lobby announcements, underlines in newspaper ads and arrangements for local publicity.

Winchell worked out a nice idea in a special scroll which was sent to Hollywood and signed by all Paramount stars. On its return, photostatic copies were made up in which names of local publishers in circuit towns were inserted and mailed to each paper. Mats on same were also forwarded to the papers and were used as opening break in campaign.

Another neat newspaper stunt was a composite picture of local mayor or other leading citizen posing with one of the Paramount stars. This was done by manager taking full length photo of local celebrity in each circuit spot and forwarding same to Charlie who worked out the rest of the gag and returned the completed picture for local publication.

Other smart stunts included selling star stills to merchants as giveaways during week, local "Appreciation Parties" given by merchants for their employees, carrying of theatre slugs in store ads and gala Hollywood openings on the first night of the "Week."

Mayer Ties In Restaurant On "Hollywood" Opening

The occasion of a new food-and-drinkery opening across the street from Arthur Mayer's New York Rialto, was hooked in effectively to the premiere of "Hollywood Party," where Billy Ferguson's staff cooperated to spread the word. The restaurant, occupying a prominent Times Square corner, was decorated for the premiere, the celebration being publicized further with giant flood and search lights playing on the theatre building and cafe front.

Added cooperation was obtained with a four-page tabloid, space divided between the picture and restaurant copy, copies of which were distributed around town. A sound truck enclosed in glass was another stopper, a balloon giveaway gathering the crowds.

LEADING CANADIANS ASSEMBLE TO HONOR CURTIS AND FINLAY

Cheer Quigley Plaque Winners at Montreal Ad Club Meeting; Mayor Does Honors as Proceedings Are Broadcast

By D. MacINNES
Special Correspondent

[Photo in Pictorial Section]

At Montreal, on June 20, Canadians and the whole world expressed their appreciation of the Quigley Awards with a rousing ovation for Gene Curtis, manager, and Ken Finlay, advertising manager, Palace Theatre, Montreal, Award winners for May. More than 250 theatre managers, distributors, prominent advertising and publicity men and representatives of foreign consulates gathered in the Mount Royal Hotel for the presentation of the Award by Mayor Camillien Houde of Montreal.

The entire proceedings were broadcast over a network of radio stations, which were fed by Station CKAC, the powerful station operated by Montreal's leading newspaper, La Presse. Phil Lalonde, station director of CKAC, was personally in charge of the broadcast. Newsreel men and photographers from the Associated Screen News were on hand to get a permanent record of the historic event of the first Quigley Award to come to Canada. Hundreds of telegrams from all over the world were received during the meeting, many of which were read over the air during the hour and a half broadcast.

Colonel Cooper Praises Martin Quigley

The presentation was presided over by W. J. C. Sutton, president of the Advertising Club of Montreal, who introduced Colonel John Cooper, the "Will Hays" of Canada, and head of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, who came down from Toronto especially for the presentation. Colonel Cooper expressed his appreciation of being able to come to Montreal for such an important event and commented on the value of the Award.

He said that he admired the determination of Gene and Ken, who had put forth such splendid effort during the year so as to be the only theatre in the world to win a Quigley Mention every month since the first of the year and then to win the coveted plaque.

"Mr. Quigley, as you know, is a great publisher," he continued. "He is enterprising, influential and conscientious. He saw that publicity is one of the greatest forces in the motion picture business, and set out to increase the interest of theatremen in better advertising and publicity. The award of the silver plaque for the most outstanding promotion campaign is an indication of that keen interest."

Colonel Cooper then introduced Mayor Houde, who expressed in his usual dynamic manner his appreciation not only on the score that the Award had come to two Montreal men, but also because their success had brought honor to the city itself. He stated that it was always a pleasure to recognize signal accomplishments.

"Then again," he continued, "the motion picture business in Montreal has needed an incentive. I know that the winning of this splendid plaque will arouse more competition, and probably out of the fight which will ensue, the plaque should soon come to Montreal again."

His Honor congratulated Gene and Ken personally for their success, and thanked them in the name of the city for having brought the Award to Montreal.

In accepting the plaque, Gene expressed his keen appreciation of the honor which has been bestowed on him and his able coworker, stating that they would try to continue to justify the distinction given to their theatre through the Quigley Award.

Ken Finlay also made a nice acceptance speech in which he said he particularly wished to express his appreciation to Gene for having shared all credits throughout the Quigley contest. "It is a pleasure to do your best when your work is so publicly acknowledged," said Ken.

All Consulates Represented

Because of the international aspect of the Quigley contest, representatives were present from all nations in the world having consulates in Montreal. Colonel Hopper, of the United States Consulate, was at the guest table, and other consuls invited were from France, Roumania, Switzerland, Portugal, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Austria, Colombia, Finland, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Mexico, Nicaraugua, Norway, Poland, Spain, Sweden, The Netherlands, Argentina, Boliva, Brazil, Monaco, Salvador, Yugoslavia and Venezuela.

Presentations of personal gifts were also made to the two men by Warner Brothers, whose picture "20 Million Sweethearts" was the one on which the Award was granted. Gene thanked Mrs. Laura Elston and Charlie Osborne, representatives of Warner's, who were present.

Congratulatory telegrams and cables came in during the luncheon from all over the world with such rapidity that two Canadian National Telegraph messengers were kept busy delivering them. These were read at the meeting and carried to the vast radio audience. At the time your correspondent had to get this report in the mail, the wires were still continuing to pour in. Noticeable was the world-wide salute with telegrams and cables from all branches of Warner Brothers—First National, headed by messages from A. W. Smith, Jr., and Charles Einfeld. Vitagraph was also represented by Harry Paynter, Canadian general sales manager, and M. Perry of Toronto, Joseph Plottel of Vancouver, Charles Osborne of Montreal, Wolfe Cohen of Winnipeg and M. J. Isman of St. John.

One of the first telegrams to arrive was that from Martin Quigley, followed by one from Tom Connors.

Industry Heads Wire Winners

From Paramount were messages from Adolph Zukor and George Schaefer, as well as general greetings from the Pacific Coast Convention and also from Boris Morros at the New York Paramount.

Tribute was paid to these showmen by Al Lichtman, Joseph Moskowitz, Harry Buckley and Hal Horne of United Artists. Speaking for Mickey Mouse, Minnie and all their friends, Walt Disney sent special greetings.

John D. Clarke, Charles E. McCarthy and Jim O'Loghlin, Canadian sales manager, conveyed greetings from Fox Films, and Ned E. Depinet, Jules Levy and Robert Sisk sent congratulations from Radio Pictures.

Universal Pictures also paid tribute with wires from J. R. Grainger, A. J. Sharick, F. J. A. McCarthy, Paul Gulick, Canadian Universal Film Company and D. Leduc.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sent greetings through H. Cass, Montreal branch manager, and from Toronto hearty congratulations were sent from Empire Films.

Other distributing companies were represented by W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, and also one of the Quigley judges for May.

From their own company, Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd., Gene and Ken received most glowing congratulations and praise over the signature of the Executive Committee, as well as individual wires from J. J. Fitzgibbons, managing director; R. W.

JUNE JUDGES AND JUNE DEADLINE

The following industry leaders have consented to determine the winner of the Quigley Award for June:

JAMES R. GRAINGER, General Manager of Distribution, Universal Pictures; SPYROS P. SKOURAS, President, Fox West Coast Theatres; MORT BLUMENSTOCK, Director of Theatre Advertising and Publicity, Warner Bros. Theatres. These gentlemen represent, respectively, the distribution, exhibition and advertising branches.

The deadline for June entries has been set for THURSDAY, midnight, JULY 5. All campaigns must be received at Quigley Committee Headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York City, by that time in order to receive consideration.

Read the rules, printed again in last week's issue, and send in that good campaign right now.

Bryant Flies Own Plane To Exploit Pictures

Round Tabler Robert Bryant dropped into headquarters out of the sky last week on an air trip from Rock Hill, S. C., where he operates the Capitol Theatre. Bob is his own pilot, with hundreds of flying hours to his credit, and has taken part in many air meets.

Besides flying strictly for pleasure, Bryant uses his ship to exploit his attractions. Every now and then, he flies over the immediate section throwing out heralds and passes, and also has towed banners to plug some big coming feature. These stunts are put on only now and then, for as Bryant says, he is taking no chances of killing the novelty of his air advertising by overdoing it.

The accompanying photo shows this member alongside of his 100 horsepower racing machine. Note the Mickey Mouse decoration over the landing wheel. It was designed especially for Bob by Walt Disney.

Among the first of the new product announcements that reach our desk is that of the Mascot Pictures executed and well devised by Al Sherman, director of advertising and publicity. The general color scheme is a tasteful red and black, illustrating the 12 pictures detailed in the book. Al wisely lays off the sensational and has turned out a very readable brochure.

Barnhart Fills In For Al Hostler

With Al Hostler, Strand Theatre manager, Altoona, Pa., taken ill suddenly with scarlet fever, exhibitor Jake Silverman called in D. B. Barnhart to stand by, this showman being known to the Silverman brothers through his connection with the State Fair Park in Wheeling, W. Va., which he had managed for many years.

Barnhart arrived in time to handle the 18th anniversary of the theatre, and as both Silvermans, Jake and Ike, are prominent and well liked citizens of Altoona, the city cooperated readily in putting over the occasion. Both newspapers broke page one stories and gave space in the editorial columns to the brothers who are known as the "fathers" of the local motion picture business, the stories going back to the old days of the penny arcade era.

Weshner Modernizes Front For Increased Receipts

Since taking over the Milwaukee and Wisconsin Theatres for Warner Brothers, zone manager Skip Weshner has been working night and day to put many of these spots in better working order. Skip is an old time believer in the value of fronts that are attractive and easy on the eye and has done a lot of fine work in this respect.

The front of the Egyptian Theatre, Milwaukee, (see photo), is a good example of Weshner's activities. Previously, it was decorated with two conventional three sheet frames and a banner strip above the doors. Skip's new front covers the masonry entirely, panelled enlargements and artistic abovedoor banners, as can be perceived, doing a dressy job of selling.

Changes in the outdoor lighting also helped to bring new attention to the theatre. Repainting of the marquee and upright, in addition to lamps of stronger wattage, added to the attractiveness of the entire front. Receipts are reported to have increased satisfactorily which may be a tip-off to other theatremen looking about for angles to increase the drawing power.

Abe Cohen Constructs Own Theatre Fronts

Abe Cohen and his sign painter take delight in turning out attractive fronts up at Schine's Massena, Massena, N. Y., as witness photo, illustrating construction of beaverboard with eight by ten insertions on "Men In White." Under the marquee an electrically lighted shadow-box with cutout letters was planted and the two large heads on either side of the box-office were obtained from local exchange.

Abe covered the surrounding towns by use of his mailing list, sending programs announcing his showing of "Men in White"; in addition to country billing, newspaper ads, etc. Four store windows were promoted and dressed with Neon displays to plug the picture.

Luckie Also Goes Jungle on "Tarzan"

An atmospheric front was constructed by D. F. Luckie at the Strand in Orange, Texas, for "Tarzan and His Mate" that drew particular attention from the kid patronage. The entire front was covered with palm leaves to give the jungle effect (see photo) and Luckie got hold of two monkeys whose antics in a cage in front of the house caused no end of amusement. We assume the gentleman at right with the monkey is Luckie.

Copy in all ads stressed the fact that the picture was one that the whole family could see, and "D. F." reports that the many families who took him at his word helped to crack a lot of attendance records.

Boucher Names Horse Race After Star

A stunt that always is good for extra publicity and is potent at this time of the year is the naming of certain races at local tracks after stars appearing in current pictures. This slant was whipped across by Frank Boucher, for his date on "Viva Villa" at the Maryland, Hagerstown, Md.

However, Frank went the gag a step better by promoting a sizeable cup for the winner, presenting it in the name of Wallace Beery, star of the picture, with which cognomen the gallop was inaugurated. The stunt broke the local dailies and was also carried by other papers reporting the results of the races at the popular Maryland track.

Lamm Promotes Sears, Roebuck for Free Ad

Louis Lamm, Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, promoted a newspaper ad for his house and a paid page spread on the back of his weekly Movie News from Sears, Roebuck for the showing of "As the Earth Turns."

Ad carried copy to the effect that all the home furnishings, farm machinery and other equipment used in the picture were purchased by Warner Brothers from the mail order house and recommended that readers see the picture of farm life and a real tribute to Sears' merchandise. Pretty neat work on Louie's part.

Soap Sculptors Model Walt Disney Characters

Walt Disney's "Three Little Pigs" and "Big Bad Wolf" carved from soap by Helen Earle, of Jacksonville, Texas, (see photo) won an honorable mention and cash prize in the senior class at the Tenth Annual Soap Sculpture competition at Rockefeller Center, New York.

Nearly 4,000 sculptures were reported to have been entered for the Procter & Gamble prizes. Contestants were listed from all parts of the country, and after the New York show, selected groups of entries are to be sent on tour to various sections.

Jungle Street Bally Plugs "Lost Jungle"

Perhaps the showmen at the State Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, raided a few merry-go-rounds to obtain jungle beasts for exploitation on "Lost Jungle," but wherever they were obtained a flash lobby was created, the animal figures planted realistically against the background of palms, grass, etc.

Two days ahead, the display was placed on a sound truck (see photo) and a boy dressed in Clyde Beatty costume put on an animal training act with chair and pop gun. An old barrel was secured with a rosined piece of rope through the center which when pulled gave forth an awe-inspiring roar. The elephant on the truck was animated by motor which caused it to move trunk, head and tail.

Other gags used were a valance that covered all sides of marquee and imprinted napkins distributed in downtown restaurants. Effective cooperation was given by S. P. Gorrel, sales manager for Mascot Pictures in that territory.

Now, Herman

Seems that Clark Gable is available for exploitation over in Glen Cove, Long Island, where Herman Starr tied in with local drug store to distribute color stills of the star on "Manhattan Melodrama," at the Cove Theatre. Copy was headed "Ladies, Clark Gable is Yours For the Asking. Free."

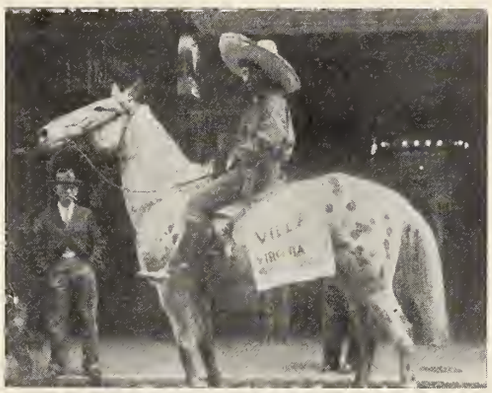
Taylor Ties In Mayor On "Hollywood Party"

Bill Taylor, Loew's State, Houston, Tex., must know his Mayor well for on "Hollywood Party" he planted a newspaper story to the effect that "Mayor Oscar Holcombe is apt to be gone again over the week-end, but do not trouble his charming secretary as to his whereabouts as the chances are one hundred to one he's gone to Loew's to see 'Hollywood Party.'" Bill reports that His Honor enjoyed the clowning. Remember the old adage "know your man" before you pull this one.



A star doubles contest was put on to find locals resembling the most prominent stars in the picture. Contestants were judged by audience applause at evening shows. All street cars were bannered, while for an extra bally six Hollywood party girls outfitted in shorts crashed the ball park, boxing show and wrestling matches, being introduced from the diamond and ring with a plug for the picture.

Shaffer's Costumed Rider

Botwick's "Vanity" Window

On "Manhattan Melodrama" Taylor effected a tie-up with Western Union whereby twenty-five telegrams were sent to most popular girls in graduating classes of each school in the city. Message was signed by Clark Gable and invited each girl to see the picture as his guest at the State. A tie-up with the classified section of one of the papers also netted Bill a thirty inch ad.

Shaffer Sells Beery As Robin Hood

Over 1,000 girls attend college in Harrisonburg, Va., and to draw from this desirable class of patronage, Manager F. K. Shaffer, of the Virginia Theatre in that spot, sold "Viva Villa" from the romance angle, decking up his ads with a lot of pretty girls and boosting Wallace Beery as Robin Hood, the poor man's friend.

To catch the attention of the farm trade, Shaffer put out a bally of a costumed rider on a horse carrying banner reading "Villa Rides Again," (see photo) and reports that this slant got him plenty in return, as it cost him little and impressed the rurals to whom it appealed.

Lou Smith Inaugurates An Aeroplane Contest

Lou Smith, New Elton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., has put over what he calls an Aeroplane Contest for his kid patronage, and says if there is anything any of you boys want to ask him about, he'll meet all-comers.

On the premise that all kids love to build aeroplanes, he offered three silver loving cups and twelve aeroplane kits for the best models turned in. Lou got six pilots from Floyd Bennett Field to select the winners and broke his newspapers with plenty of publicity. He further suggests in starting an Aeroplane Club every member be given a kit, these to be gotten from an aeroplane supply store at minimum cost with the merchant to be promoted for a few models to get the Club started.

Lou reports that he had three windows full of models and claims it is one of the greatest stunts he ever pulled at his house.

Gurley Constructs Giant Sized "Century" Display

We recently showed you Clarke Gurley's display on "Eskimo," and now he comes through with one on "20th Century" for the date at the Ritz in Bainbridge, Ga. The display with just the name of the picture ran right across the front of his house at the edge of the street, measuring 27 feet long, each letter 34 inches high and 10 inches thick. At night the display was illuminated with concealed footlights, 20 red and blue lamps. Clarke tells us that this display was constructed by Artist Ben Rivers and attracted plenty of attention.

Botwick Uses Newsreel Shot to Sell "Vanities"

Tying-in the newsreel shot of Earl Carroll arriving in Boston with the print of "Murder at the Vanities," Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Maine, used the clip with the regular newsreel on his showing of the picture. Harry had the print shipped to him by air and played this up in the papers, which gave it a good break in connection with a special story on Carroll.

A tie-up with one of the leading merchants netted him a window-display (see photo) and two free ads. Electrical transcripton, orchestrations and music were plugged over radio station for a week in advance, picture and theatre receiving credits at all times.

THE BATHING SUIT REVUE

Now that Ed Hart, City Manager, Walter Reade Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., has put on the first reported bathing suit revue, we may say the season is now officially on for this box office builder. And here are the details from Ed for the information of the interested. Ed speaking:

"As soon as the weather becomes hot enough to interfere with business, I contact department stores selling nationally known bathing suits such as Annette Kellerman, Jantzen, etc. Arrangements are made to select the prettiest girl employees to model suits and beach togs, girls given the outfit they wear by the manufacturer in payment for services. The revue is put on for three days, with store advertising ten days ahead and during the showings.

"The stunt is costless to the theatre and store, and as all store advertising includes mention of screen attractions as well, theatre may cut down the budget for this feature. The idea is valuable at this time especially in view of the usual circus and carnival opposition."

Hart sends along tear sheets of department store advertising wherein generous space is given to both the bathing suit show and screen, at the Oxford Theatre. Newspapers also carried publicity on this. Presentation was put on at 8:30 each evening.

"Beggars In Ermine" Lands Spot Windows

Colored enlargements of Betty Furness wearing the new style fashions were planted in numerous Broadway windows by Manager Leo Justin and publicity director Stockton Leigh for the date on "Beggars in Ermine" at the New York Mayfair.

Of special mention was the tieup made with Macy's Cinema Shop, wherein an entire window was given over to the plug, as well as additional showings inside the store. Crowd-stopper street ballys of characters costumed were also used effectively.

"WRINKLES"

D. E. WESHNER, Division Manager Warner Theatres, Wisconsin

Outside frosted obsolete lamps such as 10-, 15-, 25- and 40-watt colored, which have been used on marquees, etc., can be salvaged by dipping the bulbs into a strong solution of lye, thus restoring the bulbs to their original clearness. This was done by Manager Exton of the Venetian, Milwaukee, who salvaged 145 bulbs at a total cost of 30 cents for the lye. Weshner intends practicing this procedure in other theatres of his division.

WALLY CALDWELL, Manager Valentine, Toledo, Ohio

We have found that the following marquee letters may be used for substitution: X for Y, E for F, E or T for I, B for E, D for L, D for U. Due to black metal background, we use black tape for blocking out, but theatres with light colored backgrounds can use adhesive tape. Would appreciate other members sending in other alphabet combinations to be used as above.

Houses without poster artists or a cut or machine can make up attractive one, three and six sheet cutout posters. We use these weekly and make them up with aid of fret saw and a sheet of compoboard. These are embellished wherever illumination can heighten effect.

Bevel's Hollywood Beauty Contest Clicks

L. W. Bevel, Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., put on a "Hollywood Beauty Pageant" (see photo), the gentleman to the left being "L. W." himself and to the right, Philip Reye, ventriloquist and magician entertainer.

Tying in with the merchants in his town, each young lady in the pageant represented one of the stores and was introduced from the stage as "Miss (Business firm)". Bevel called on various spots for his judges, Mexico City, California, Atlanta and Birmingham visitors serving in this capacity. Girls paraded before the committee for elimination and the lucky one was awarded with a loving cup and given the title "Miss Harriman." During rehearsals pictures were taken which were later spotted in the lobby.

Bevel, who is no mean musician himself, helped entertain while the judges were out in order to avoid any dull moments. The entire show including advertising, etc., cost only $40, so "L. W." reports and played to capacity the two days it ran.

Stoflet's Candy Giveaway

When Col. C. R. Stoflet, Margie Grand Theatre, Harlan, Ky., played the serial "Pirate Treasure" cards were given away before the showing of chapter one to all kids attending, announcing a treasure hunt and informing the youngsters that the card together with their ticket of admission would entitle each of them to a free box of candy.

MORE ABOUT THE AWARD CEREMONIES

Bolstad, comptroller; J. C. Nairn, director of publicity, and others. Fellow managers in Famous Players sent wires coming from the East Coast, represented by R. J. Macadam in Halifax, F. W. Winter in Moncton, and Walter H. Golding in St. John. Skipping across Canada to the West Coast, came congratulations from L. I. Bearg, western division manager.

Even in Montreal, congratulations were showered in by wire, with messages from J. C. Adams, of Loew's Theatre, T. Cleary of the Princess Theatre, the managers of Radio Stations CRCM, CHLP, CFCF and CKAC, as well as tributes from many Canadian concerns with headquarters in Montreal, which was testimony as to the regard these concerns have for Gene and Ken in their community.

Managers Send Congratulations

An interesting sidelight was a wire from John J. Friedl in Minneapolis, as it was he who first started Gene Curtis in the motion picture business. Congratulations were also received from Ed Cuddy, division manager, and from Walter Lloyd and other managers in the Mullin-Pinanski Circuit.

Tributes also came from outside of the industry, as evidenced by messages from civic officials, newspapers and commercial concerns from coast to coast in Canada and the United States, from the mayor of Halifax to the Governor of Michigan.

Hollywood was represented by wires from many of the stars, particularly those on the Warner Brothers' lot.

Obtained Smash Publicity

Time and space do not permit listing all telegrams received, nor the messages they conveyed. But important was this world-wide tribute to these two theatremen and the recognition paid them for the winning of the coveted Quigley Plaque.

Old-timers say that they cannot recall such an ovation ever before given, which is indication of the importance Quigley Awards have in the eyes of the industry.

Noteworthy was the smash newspaper publicity obtained by these popular showmen, every daily in town carrying pictures of the winners and stories, including a three-column picture on the front page of the plaque itself.

IT'S IMPORTANT

In Better Theatres, Section Two of this issue of Motion Picture Herald, there is a raft of good stuff of interest to all theatremen. George Schutz has written another instalment of his ace series on theatre advertising in which he explains type, information of practical aid to every manager.

J. T. Knight again discusses theatre supervision, describing the ordering of the theatre's routine affairs, and Leo T. Parker speaks on the law controlling advertising. Among the other good features are actual methods in late theatre design for those contemplating building or remodeling.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified.

DISTINCTION

EASTMAN Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative has a three-fold distinction. Its introduction has led to more significant advances than any other film ...excepting only Eastman's original motion picture negative. Under the expert hands of the cameraman it has in the last three years photographed a great majority of the biggest screen hits. And...because of this record of accomplishment...it now enjoys by far the widest preference among all motion picture negative films. Eastman Kodak Co. (J. E. The PERFECT COMBINATION for PERFECT PROJECTION

DESIGNED and BUILT by C. S. ASHCRAFT

The Converter shown with the lamp above is the complete power plant. Nothing else is required except a small power line capable of carrying only 12 to 15 amperes. Generator and rheostat rooms are a thing of the past. The converter is cool and noiseless. Long life is given to the tubes by the STERLING system of forced air cooling. 12 changes of current are provided by the dial switch. Merely turn the knob.

We are represented nationally by independent theatre supply dealers in all key cities. Let your dealer tell you more about the STERLING products MADE BY ASHCRAFT.

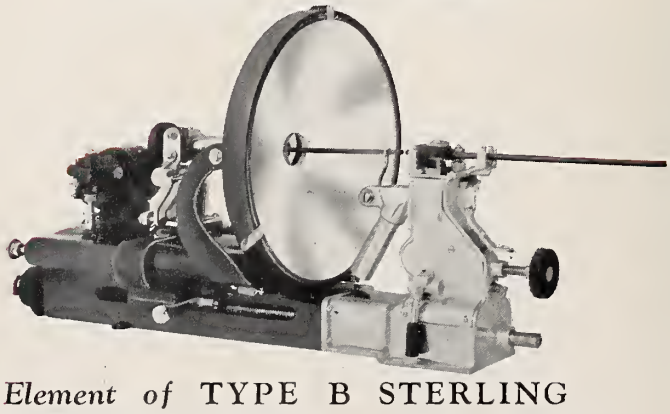
Sterling Suprex Projection Lamp



Sterling Converter

A great many theatres throughout the country are removing their high-intensity lamps, generators and rheostats and replacing them with STERLING SUPREX lamps and STERLING CONVERTERS, realizing that they have been throwing money away in high power and carbon bills.

Amply powerful for the large theatre and sufficiently economical for the small house, this combination uses only 2800 watts of power (2.8 KW) and produces a flood of brilliant, pure white light, equal or superior to high intensity at only a fraction of the cost of operion. The converter has a current output of 65 Amperes.

The Type B STERLING SUPREX lamp which is a radical improvement over our previous model which we have had on the market for over a year is equipped with a 12" Pyrex reflector and is designed to operate at a current of from 46 to 55 amperes. It is conceded to be the most modern of projection lamps.

OBSERVATIONS

¶ We are pleased to note considerable response to the two articles by J. T. Knight, Jr., on personnel problems. Considering the nature of the subject (which so far as we know has never been previously touched upon—certainly not with as much courage and constructiveness—the number of letters indicating deep interest in the matters discussed is large. One of our correspondents asked from Ireland if there were any books available on the training and supervision of theatre personnel. We observe also that at least one prominent theatre organization — Famous Players of Canada—has specifically directed attention to the articles in a communication to district and theatre managers.

That we should take a selfish pleasure in this is to be expected. Our pleasure, however, is not wholly selfish. We sincerely submit that we are glad to be thus persuaded of a serious interest among theatre operators in the development of well trained, conscientious supervisors and house staffs. Somehow the motion picture industry in general succeeded in achieving a reputation as a field in which an employe's superior required precious little more than his ability to say yes. Once true? Getting away from it now? The only one of these questions worth bothering about at this stage of affairs is the latter one, and we believe that the answer is, we are.

There are those, of course, who, having become thoroughly accustomed to a certain setup, are skeptical of the possibility of substantial change. We all are creatures of habit, some of us are temperamentally negative (pessimistic, if we dare use the word!), and most of us are too busy with our personal and occupational affairs to gather evidence beyond that which seeps into our own immediate spheres of action. Therefore we are wont to say, "It will always be this way."

Upon reflection, however, we are assured that things are never "always this way." And certainly great changes have come into the affairs of the motion picture.

Some of these are temporary changes due to sudden adversity, and their effect is adverse. We can hope they change back again, or otherwise be improved. But changes have also come which, ultimately at least, are not so much due to adversity as to evolution. Steadily through the years even preceding the depression, motion picture exhibition was being intensified, as a business and as a technology.

The demands made upon those in charge of theatre operations have accordingly become special and exact. Reversion to the old order here could come only from reversion to a motion picture of less industrial and social significance. Whether a theatre is supervised by its owner or an employed manager, it must have immediate proprietorship capable of directing effectively a highly important community enterprise that functions through commercial and technical processes not at all to be compared with the affairs of the dry goods or grocery store next door. Because of the special nature of the product, a special kind of acumen is required. Because of the technologies by which the product is rendered consumable, varied technical training is required.

Obviously, therefore, a high order of man-power is constantly needed. Management is part of this man-power; then from the subordinate personnel of today we should expect the technical and managerial executives of tomorrow. The methodical training and conscientious supervision of personnel thus form a basic and a vital function of this theatre business.

¶ Mr. Dan Halpin, who is much interested in a very ingenious device to aid the hard-of-hearing, writes:

"In your editorials of the June 2d issue you give an interesting sidelight on vision. Why would not this apply even more so to hearing? Forty million pairs of eye-glasses have been purchased. Only a few hundred thousand hearing aids have been sold, though there are over fifteen million hard-of-hearing people in America."

True enough. Our suggestions in the June 2d issue, concerned with an inquiry as to what the public really thinks about the motion picture and its theatre, was not intended to be exhaustive. If some of your patrons tell you they cannot hear well in your theatre, do not be too sure that the fault lies in the condition or operation of your equipment. A substantial number of people with slightly impaired hearing are not aware of their mild affliction—or (the psychologists can explain this) they won't admit it if they are.—G. S.

CONSTRUCTING THEATRE ADVERTISING

Putting Ideas Into Type Forms

A discussion of type style and the fitting of type to copy and layout—the seventh article of a series

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

IN THE PREVIOUS article on type we note the different general classes into which type is broadly divided.

Type Style

We now come to a more detailed examination of type forms, beginning with a consideration of type faces.

All faces slip more or less readily into one of the general classes of type. That is, some are old-style, some modern flat-serif, others gothic or modern sans-serif, and so on through the list of basic groups noted in the previous article. The characteristics which distinguish one face from another are not so obvious as those by which we identify classes. Sometimes, indeed, an expert's familiarity with certain faces is necessary to tell them one from another.

There are two reasons for this. One is that the fundamental principles of good type design are so rigid that not a great deal of difference is possible in the general pattern of type characters. Legibility is the first consideration, and tradition governs legibilty to a very restrictive degree. There are freak types, of course, and wide variation is also possible among types cut for special purposes (particularly in the display sizes and ornamental styles). Note, however, the similarity that exists for most people between the type used, for example, in one book of fiction and another, though the faces employed may be really quite distinctive in the terms of the typographer.

Another reason many type faces have the same appearance to the layman is that a face marketed by one type manufacturer may be approximately duplicated by some other manufacturer. There are two sources of type patterns—one, the early masters of design; the other, contemporary originators. Like the music masters, whose works now belong to everybody, the early designers have given patterns to most of the type cutters of today. Some modern cuttings may be fairly true renditions of the original, others represent important modifications. In either case, they may be named for their originators (Caslon, Bodoni, etc.), or they may be renamed, the new designation becoming the property of the designer or company sponsoring the modern cutting (as in Linotype's Granjon, based on a Claude Garamond design). As to the contemporary designer, he may create a style that becomes popular among typographers, whereupon similar faces may be produced by competitive sources of type. Thus we have been given, for example, a number of modern sans-serif faces some of which closely resemble each other (to name only three, the Mergenthaler Linotype Company's Metro, Intertype's Vogue and Ludlow's Tempo).

AVAILABILITY OF FACES

The situation thus created should be appreciated because in most instances it greatly influences type selection. To illustrate, you might want to use Metro for a certain display element. Your printer, however, may have only Tempo in the display sizes. Although there are certain distinctions between the two faces, these are not likely to seem great enough to cause you to insist upon one over the other. They, and many other faces of the same specific style (including those available only for hand-setting, like Continental's Kabel), may be said to be interchangeable for most practical purposes.

A similar, but not identical kind of interchangeability is present among the older styles of type, those which, until recently, we were most familiar with and which are still dominant except in the field of advertising (and even there they are not to be lost sight of despite the current clamor for "modernistic" novelty). These faces are most readily identified by their possession of serifs, either flat or rounded, and by their delicate shadings, emphasized in the contrast between the weights of the vertical and horizontal strokes. Among these are the Caslons, the Cheltenhams, the Bodonis, and so on through a lengthy list. Those named immediately above, as well as many others, are available for various kinds of machine setting and for hand-setting also, in cuttings so conventionalized on the basis of the original design that no matter what company supplied the cast type or machine matrices, the job will be composed essentially in the style of type specified.

Such faces are directly interchangeable for the practical purposes of most commercial printing, because they really are, in a broad sense, standard. We have noted, however, that a manufacturer may originate or adapt a design and give it an exclusive name. Thus even among the traditional styles of type (in contradistinction to the modern sans-serif and square-serif patterns), there are styles restricted to certain makes of machines or to hand-setting. Thus the face you want to use may not be available from your printer. In most instances, however (except for highly specialized styles), he will be able to give you a face carrying another name that is at least approximately as suitable to your purposes as your original choice.

COMMON FACES

The average newspaper, of course, is not capable of offering as wide a selection of type faces as the typesetting companies in large cities that specialize in advertising composition, but it doubtless has enough of a variety to serve the theatre advertiser effectively. Any important deficiency is likely to be found among the new modern sans-serif styles. A great variety of type styles is really not necessary. Probably the most of all advertising, in the United States at least, is accomplished with from twenty to twenty-five faces. More important than the availability of many different faces is the ability to get, by original instructions or ultimate criticism, an advertisement that is, within itself, a harmonious conveyor and interpreter of the message.

Prominent among type faces suitable for advertisements, available in the plant of the average newspaper, are the following:

Cheltenham (especially boldface), Caslon, Bodoni (especially bold, though not heavy), Goudy, Century, Benedictine (to a lesser extent), Garamond, Gothics (probably some variety of faces in this class, with both extended and condensed fonts), Cloister, and (except in the very small cities) one or two families of modern sans-serif. In addition, the advertiser will frequently find available odd fonts of special types, like script; black letter styles, commonly referred to as Old English; outline (or inline) faces, which have hollowed-out characters giving the effect of double strokes.

COMBINING TYPE FACES

SELECTION OF type for an advertisement calls, more often than not, for a selection of more than one face. When this is not the case (and it is safest to use one type family if it meets all the copy and psychological needs of the advertisement), the problem of selection is greatly simplified. But with advertisements most frequently made up display matter, which is commonly diversified in itself; text, captions or small blocks of explanatory copy, and in addition, the signature, address, and so on, mechanical conditions as well as the demands of contrast indicate for the average advertisement more than one family of type.

The theatre advertiser, of course, scarcely needs to be so meticulous about such matters as the professional typographer. But whatever the ad, space for it is being purchased because it has definite merchandising value, and it is therefore important enough to be done with a reasonable amount of care and skill. True it is that the printer should be able to supply the skill. All too often, however, the skill supplied will be mechanical, not creative. The printer, moreover, does not have the intimate feel of the copy that the advertiser has, and in theatre advertising, which sells emotional experiences, copy should be interpreted in the special terms of the showman. It probably may be conceded that it is at least better for the showman to tell the printer what he wants than for the printer to "dope" the copy from the limitations of a printer.

To be able to combine types, it is naturally necessary to have some definite comprehension of the nature of each of the faces to be combined. Nobody is familiar with all available type styles, of course. Even the professional typographer is thoroughly versed in only those families he uses and has used in the past. For the theatre advertiser, an acquaintance, which may be gradually developed, with the commoner faces should be sufficient.

STUDYING FACES

In examining type faces to determine their use to him, he should observe how each seems to be individually characterized, and how the characteristics of one style are distinguished from, or bear certain relationships to, those of other faces. Thus will be aided the selection of a certain face to serve a certain purpose, and the combining of faces harmoniously. The theatre advertiser's method will not be necessarily that of the professional. It will probably suffice if he observes type with respect to the following features:

Feeling. Much has been said and written about the psychology of type, a great deal of it absurd. The thought expressed itself goes a long way toward setting up in the reader a specific intellectual or emotional reaction irrespective of the physical character of the type employed. Nevertheless, the physical personality of the type is important. To illustrate:

She killed for love!

Obviously, you can't kill for either love or money very convincingly in a face like that, but you are likely to get away with it by adopting some such weapon as:

She killed for love!

The emphatic, swift bold italic seems to harmonize with the idea. We get a feeling of vigorous unrestraint, into which category we may assume that murder falls. But there is no formulaic psychological analogy between any idea or action and a certain style of type. Environment—the interplay of contributing typographical elements as well as copy—must be considered. As in music, tradition is what determines the reaction. The best way to obtain some definite, memorable sense of the feeling of certain type styles is to ask: How does it make me feel? Then when the time comes actually to use type of that style, a similar test should be put to it all over again, with specific reference to the copy, the general personality of the layout as a whole, and the influence of any combining types which already may have been determined. Repeated use of certain faces will of course gradually clarify for you any definite psychological tendencies that each may possess.

Pattern. The greatest difference will be seen at once to lie between the two great type groups: faces with serifs and those without serifs (sans-serif). In considering the former, one should note that some faces have rounded serifs (old style), while others have flat serifs (modern. To illustrate:

Old Style

Modern

The sans-serif group may be divided into gothic and modern sans-serif. There is plenty of distinction between them, as examination will show, the gothic or old style sans-serif being extremely plain, regular in lining, rather more uniform in character formation, as a rule, than the version developed during the 1920's. There are many variations of the old gothic, and they have been cut in condensed and extended styles more than most faces. Their principal use today is for newspaper headlines and handbills. The modern gothic (usually referred to now merely as modern or sans-serif) is relatively highly stylized, simple rather than plain, somewhat irregular in lining and character formation. To illustrate the two groups:

Old Gothic

Modern Sans-Serif

The square serif style previously alluded to is really modern sans-serif with terminal bars added. From some points of view the addition represents a whimsy of little constructive typographical significance, square serif faces being stodgy, and when used for more than a very few words in display sizes, quite illegible. To illustrate:

Square Serif

Other factors entering into the determination and recognition of pattern have been indicated earlier in this article.

Tone. This means the general lightness or darkness in the effect of the face upon the printed page. Among fonts of some families of type there are ranges of tone from lightface through medium and boldface to extreme boldface. But two faces in the same font and pointage may be quite distinct as to tone, one noticeably darker than the other. Tone must be considered because the advertisement as a whole should have one dominant tone, and because tone is an important factor in determining face combinations. Many an error in judgment as to the harmony of face pattern has been concealed by a happy similarity in tone.

Knowing fairly well the principal characteristics of the type faces at one's disposal, one is in a position to combine them adequately well according to the common rules of harmony. Specifically with respect to type, faces should be wedded according to their physical compatibility. They should have some things in common. Flat serifs with flat serifs. Round with round. Sans-serif with sans-serif, or at least with square serifs or modern flat serif, depending on relative tone values. Highly decorative faces do not go with austere, formal-looking faces. Type with a flourish has greatly restricted application when associated with type having a rigid or event constrainted pattern. But no formula can be laid down. For the advertiser who does not wish to go deeply into the craft of the typographer, the best advice is: Combine type faces according to their feeling, or their tone, or their pattern. One of these divisions should offer, as a general thing, a common ground for a reasonable settlement of their differences.

FITTING TYPE TO THE LAYOUT

IN EVERY advertising layout there are certain rigid limitations of space for each element. Therefore each type element has to be set in lines of certain lengths and in blocks of certain depths. This fundamentally involves measurement and spacing according to the space available, the necessity of suitable intervening areas of white space within the advertisement, and what may be called the common-sense dictates of readability.

Display lines. These are the catchlines or headings of the advertisement, usually located at the top, but in some instances, at least in subordinate size and boldness, made to occupy positions within the body of the layout. Commonly the physical arrangement can be freer than is the case with text matter—that is, there is no need to conform to the rigid limitations of the paragraph. Indeed, a certain looseness, or flourish, is frequently indicated. Nevertheless, the display line is physically limited by the demands of good balance and by the proper margins of the layout. Only a certain number of characters, or approximately so, are permissible to each line.

Text. This consists in the main part of the message, and for the purposes at hand, caption matter or small blocks of secondary

Describing the new Midway in Dearborn, Mich., representing an original use of materials as well as low cost construction

[The following description of the Midway has been prepared for Better Theatres by the architects, Bennett & Straight of Deaborn.—THE EDITOR.]

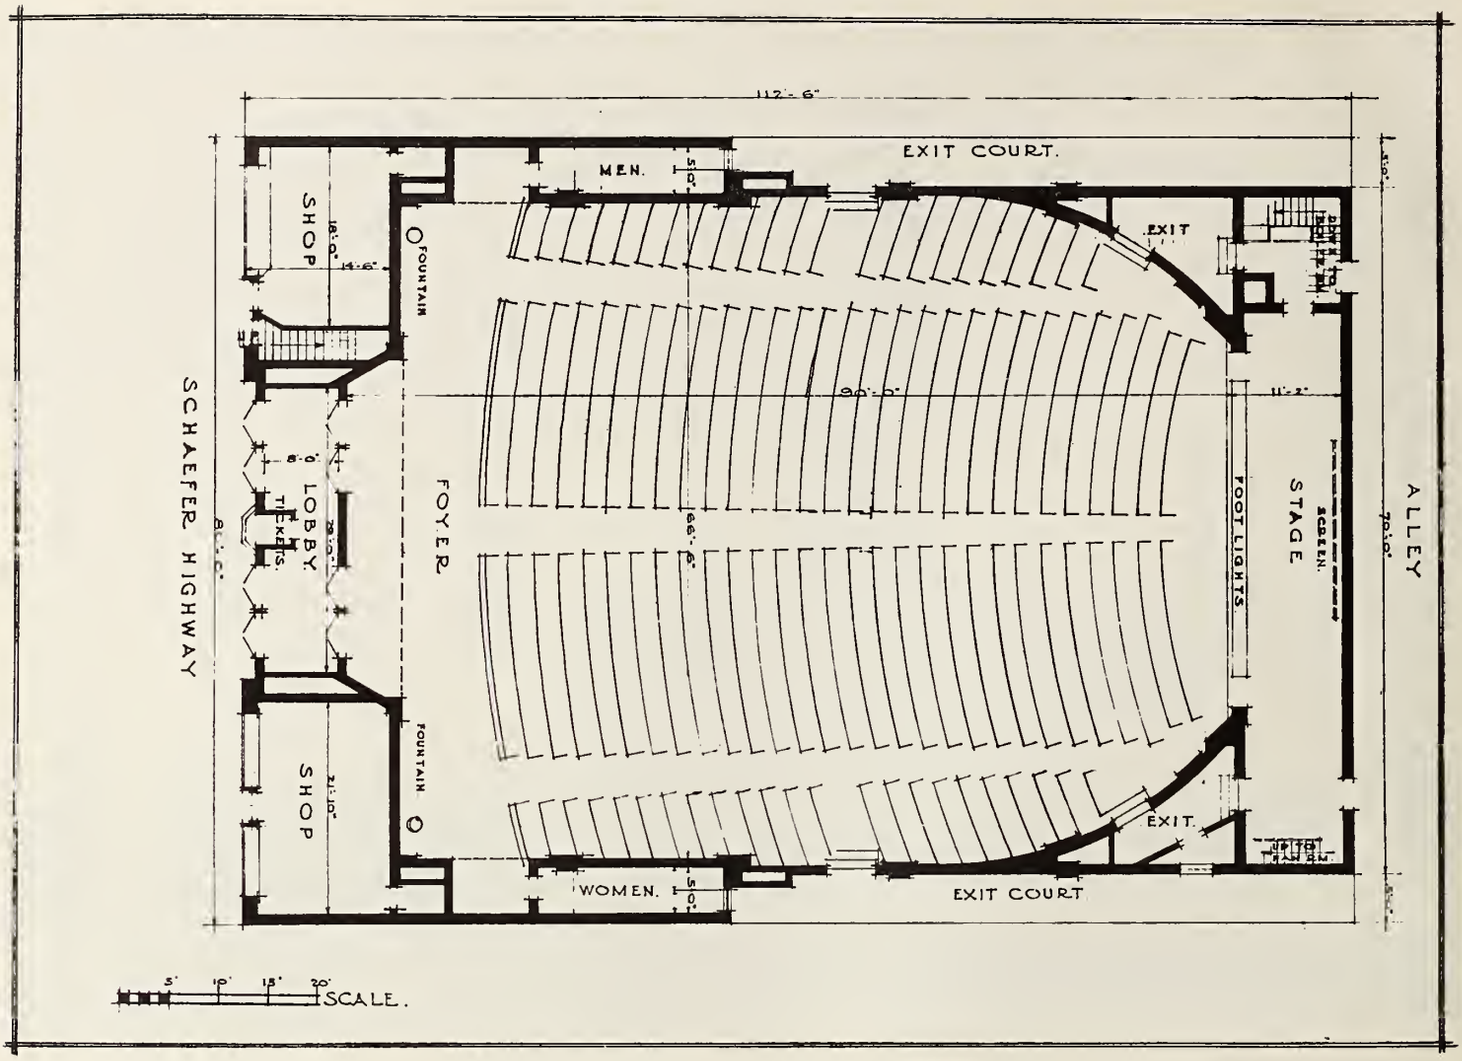
THE Midway Theatre in Dearborn, Mich., is owned and managed by the Midway Theatre Company. Joseph Miskinis and Joseph Stoia head the concern. The building fronts 80 feet on Schaefer Highway, and extends 112 feet to an alley at the rear. It is of a modern design with an exterior facing of a cream colored, honed surface Minnesota "Kasota" stone, with all panels and decorative motifs worked out with polished pink "Kasota" stone. The ground floor is entirely utilized for the theatre, with the exception of two small (21 foot x 15 foot) shops. On the second floor over the shops and lobby is space for owner's office, and one rentable office, and the projection room.

GENERAL CONSTRUCTION

Construction is of steel-frame, reinforced concrete, and entirely fireproof to conform to a very rigid local building code. Exterior enclosing walls are of masonry construction faced with brick and backed up on the interior with cinder block. Floors are of concrete slabs with terrazzo finish, in the lobby, shops, toilet rooms, etc. Steel trusses over the auditorium support the roof and ceiling. Roof is of the steel deck type, insulated with 1 inch of board insulation and covered with a tar and gravel roof.



The building exclusive of land and equipment, represents an investment of about $45,000. It contains about 230,000 cubic feet, which means that it cost about 19 cents per cubic foot. Equipment to complete the project represents about $10,000 additional.

Dearborn, the home of Henry Ford and the Ford Motor Company, is a suburb, practically surrounded by Detroit. It has a population of over 60,000 people. The Midway, being located on Schaefer Highway just off Michigan Avenue, is at the most important intersection in the business section of Dearborn, as the Schaefer Highway leads directly to the Ford Motor Company and is one of the heaviest traveled roads either in Detroit or Dearborn. The building was erected by the owners under the architects' supervision, by awarding of contracts to the various different trades involved, and was erected in about four months time, mostly during one of the coldest winters in this section of the country.

SEATING

The seating is all on the ground floor, the floor being bowled to give satisfactory seating arrangement and sightlines. There are 29 rows of seats spaced 30 inches back-to-back and averaging 20 inches center-to-center, giving about 32 seats to the row and a total seating capacity of 900. Chairs are of the upholstered type manufactured by the Ideal Seating Company of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The view at the top of the page shows the modern design of the front elevation with facing and decorative elements in Minnesota "Kasota" stone in blended shades. Enclosing walls are of masonry faced with brick and backed with cinder block.

GROUND FLOOR PLAN, MIDWAY THEATRE, DEARBORN, MICH.

BENNETT & STRAIGHT, Architects

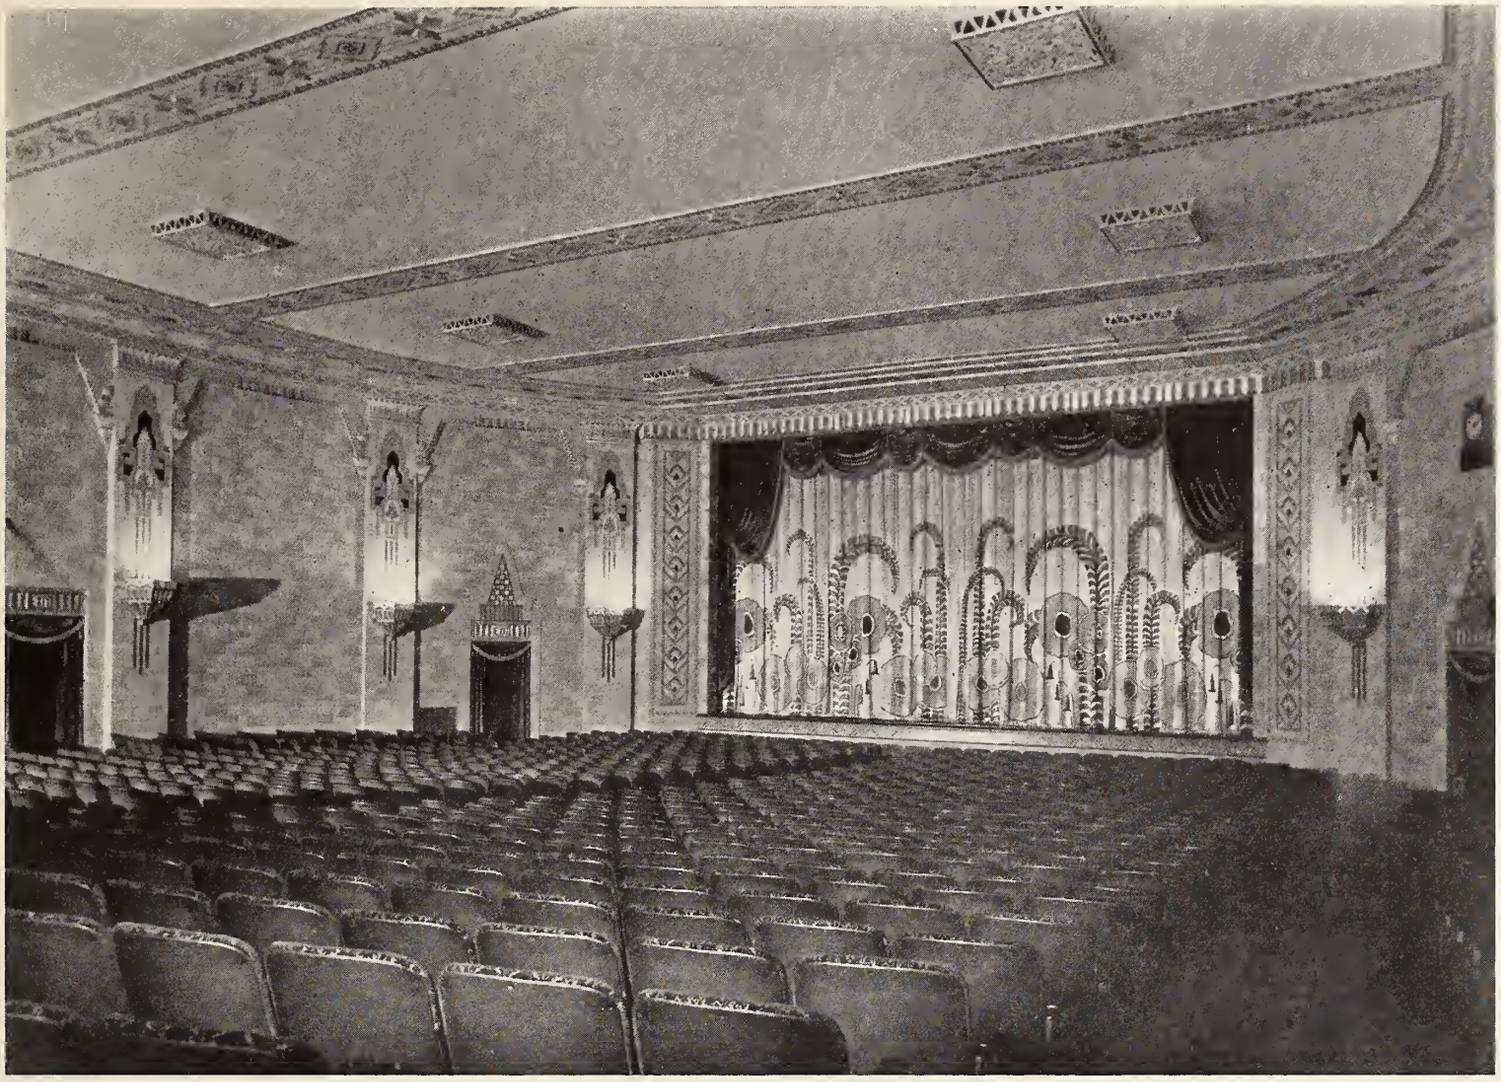
PROJECTION

The projection room is located on the second floor level with access from second floor corridor. The room is 19 feet x 9 feet with a 6 foot by 9 foot adjoining room for storage or other purposes. This room was intended for the generators, which were not necessary with the a. c. equipment. There is also a toilet room off the projection room. The walls are of Gypsum block construction 6 inches thick, ceiling 2 inches thick, fireproof and suspended from the roof construction. The walls and ceilings are plastered and painted with oil paint in a buff tone with a darker dado or wainscotting. The floors are of cement with linoleum finish. The present projection installation consists of two Simplex a. c. projectors equipped with Strong a. c. Mogul lamps and "Superlite" lenses. Space and provision is arranged for another machine or spot. The sound equipment is Universal.

The screen is 20 x 15 feet and sets back at the rear of the stage, giving about 16 feet from the front row of seats to the screen.

AIR CONDITIONING

Over the stage is located the fan room. Fresh air is taken into the building about 30 feet above the ground, from the north side, drawn over the heating or cooling coils, through the filters, and blown out by a 30,000-c.f.m. fan through ten ornamental ceiling grilles. Air is exhausted from the floor level through six ducts, and discharged through roof ventilators, or may be recirculated for quick heating before opening time. Provision has been made for the installation of cooling coils and refrigerating units, which will be installed at a later date as and if local conditions require them.



The auditorium is heated by air tempered over the steam coils in the fan room and blown out through the ceiling grilles. Auxiliary heating in lobby, shops, offices, toilet rooms, etc., is by direct radiation. Steam is generated in a steel tubular boiler, located in the boiler room under the stage. At present the fuel is coal, but provision has been made and tanks installed for oil burning equipment. No provision has been made for any air conditioning outside the auditorium.

ILLUMINATION

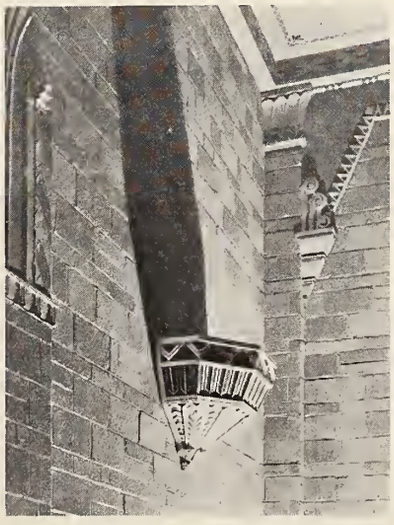
The auditorium is illuminated by indirect lighting supplied through six large urns located on the side walls. Each urn contains four reflectors equipped with 200-watt lamps arranged with red, blue, amber and white lenses. The soffit of the marquee over the entrance is arranged to flood-light adequately the sidewalk. Feature attraction signs are provided for on the ends of the marquee, together with the large vertical sign on the front. Further provision has been made for flood-lighting the exterior from reflectors which have been concealed on the marquee.

ACOUSTIC TREATMENT

Cinder block for the interior wall treatment was selected for its acoustic value.

General view of the auditorium, with its walls of cinder block.

The blocks are of various sizes and laid in a random ashler pattern, giving a very pleasing effect. "Sunflex" paint was sprayed on the walls, using a warm buff shade as a base coat, then alternating blocks were handpainted in various shades to give a Caen stone appearance. The use of this type of paint does not seal the porous texture of the blocks, hence the full sound absorption is obtained. No other acoustic material was used.



Cinder blocks adapt themselves nicely for decoration as the colors used are brilliant and full of luster. The use of block is also very economical as no plastering is required. Plastering is a hard surface and would require considerable ceiling acoustic treatment.

PLAN AND DECORATION

The ground floor layout is such that little or no space is lost and patrons purchasing tickets pass directly through a small lobby into the foyer space. Rest rooms are provided at each end of the foyer, with concealed entrances to them reached through alcoves.

The stage is equipped only for picture shows or minor acts, as no fly gallery or asbestos curtain is provided. The proscenium opening is 36 feet wide by 20 feet high.

Modern style of architectural treatment is used on the exterior, adapted to the intended use of the building without detracting from the semi-commercial use. Interior architectural treatment is carried out to harmonize with the exterior. Poster frames are of white metal. The marquee is of structural steel covered with moulded sheet metal with ornamental panels on the soffit.

Detail of cinder block wall.

The lobby follows the general architectural design. The walls are plastered in a textured treatment and stippled in pleasing shades of greens, tans and buff. The ceiling is of plaster, paneled and finished with ornamental cornices. Floors are of colored terrazzo in pattern design with a base of Ross pink marble. Radiators are concealed by white metal grilles with white metal poster frames and mirrors over.

The foyer and auditorium form a unit and are finished from floor to ceiling with cinder blocks laid in the random ashler design. Blocks have been painted very successfully to imitate Caen stone, as heretofore mentioned. The coffered ceiling is of textured plaster in the panels with decorative stencil-painted, smooth plaster bands. Where the ceiling adjoins the wall ornamental plaster cornices occur. No illumination other than the side wall urns, six on each side. Floors are of colored terrazzo finish, with aisles and foyer space carpeted. The decorative scheme of ceilings and cornices are carried out in warm tones to blend with the Caen stone wall effect. Bright colors are used in the stencils, blues, reds, and silver bronze predominating, with a peach tone in the panels.

A FACT-FINDING SYSTEM TO GUIDE YOU

By J. T. KNIGHT, Jr

The need of local statistics for efficient theatre operation, how they may be charted and valuably put to work

EARLIER, AND from time to time, I have repeatedly emphasized the importance of the theatre manager. Our industry is entering a period when the manager will come into his own as an important and greatly respected link in the chain of success of any one theatre or of a circuit—this provided the manager equips himself so that he can master the problems of his particular operation.

A theatre is only as successful as its manager—that's axiomatic—and the same principle applies equally to the circuit. This, of course, sounds a bit trite. Despite some arguments to the contrary, it is still true. In every article that I have written I have addressed myself directly to the manager, because in the theatre manager I see the final solution of many of our troubles, trials and tribulations of today, and of the more recent past few months. Our income is collected from the theatre-going public of this country at the box office of the theatres. The managers must be held responsible for those "grosses," they must cheerfully shoulder that responsibility, knowing with confidence that their ability as managers is largely measured by the box office results.

If the manager's ability and therefore his success is to be measured by the box office results, he has the right to know by what criterion the box office results are measured. Too often we hear the word "gross" as if it were the measure of success. I believe that the only measure of real box office results is in the net figures. Often the net is lost sight of in the boast of a large gross. But large gross does not necessarily indicate a large net figure.

GROSS VERSUS NET

There are at least two definite reasons for the growth of this practice of talking always of the gross figures: The first is perhaps that the trade papers report the intake on pictures in terms of "gross receipts," and we read such figures so often that we begin to think largely in terms of gross intake. A second reason, and perhaps the most important, is that theatre managers, except in cases of owner-managers, are not given accurate information regarding the fixed, overhead, depreciation and amortization charges, etc., by which they could arrive at correct net operating totals.

This failure to give such information to theatre managers by circuit executives has been founded upon several conditions, any one of which has on occasions been justified. For instance, dishonesty of some managers; some managers giving information to unauthorized persons; some managers leaving books, reports and papers unprotected so others might see such information; some managers' desire to take advantage of every slight upturn in business to ask for a raise; and again, some circuit executives' desire to becloud and make mysterious the whole procedure of theatre operation; and still others' desire to load the theatre with all the charges the traffic will bear. But cutting through all of these reasons, the real basis of such practice is a lack of mutual confidence, appreciation and understanding between the administrative executives and managers.

No individual can go very far in the business world without self-confidence (I don't mean an inflated ego) founded upon conscientious effort and intelligent application. No commercial endeavor can go very far without mutual confidence (I don't mean blind faith) between the administrative forces and the operating forces, founded upon co-operation and a unity of purpose.

POSITION OF MANAGER

The time has come for a full appreciation of these principles by every one connected with picture exhibition. The money taken in at the box office is the only earned income for this industry, all other barter and trade for pictures, pooling and leasing of theatres and personal services might be said to be within the industry. The money changing hands in such deals was originally taken in at the box offices or borrowed from banks to be paid back from the box office intake. Knowing this, it naturally follows that there must exist that mutual confidence between the administrative and the operating forces.

If managers can't be trusted with the confidential details of a theatre operation then that manager should be asked to resign and a new manager appointed capable of shouldering the responsibility and sharing the confidence of the operation. Conversely every responsible and reliable manager has the right to ask for, and to expect, the confidential details of his operation if he hopes to handle that operation intelligently. When managers become sufficiently self-confident, with that self-confidence founded upon worthy past records, to insist upon sufficient data for intelligent operation, then and only then will the manager be taking his true place and part in this industry. When such details are, as a rule, given to managers, the industry to some extent will be self-protected against some of the nightmare deals that have been made in this industry in the past, the skeletons of which have so embarrassingly come clattering out of the closets of secrecy during the past two or three years.

MANAGER SHOULD POSSESS FACTS

The first step toward this objective is for the manager to demonstrate positively his ability to operate a theatre intelligently. Intelligent operation means knowing every phase and detail of the operation, which means the neighborhood, the town, the state, the local history, labor conditions, local political situation, patriotic organizations, religious attitudes, etc., and most of all the manager must have at his finger tips the details of the theatre's business.

In order to know the details of the theatre's business there must be an adequate system of workable, fact-producing, theatre control records. Control records are not synonymous with an accounting system, bookkeeping, statistical charts, journal entries, log entries, or diary recording; or pay rolls, requisitions, invoices or advertising schedules, Proper and adequate control records are a combination of all of the above, and any other pertinent facts pertaining to the particular theatre, summarized for quick references and arranged to present a fabric of related facts —facts supported by sufficient exact detail to justify the use of the control records as the foundation for opinions and decisions that will guide and direct the future managing of that theatre.

MEANING OF "TOTALS"

Too often important decisions are based upon totals: total attendance, total box office intake, total net profits or total net losses. Totals seldom indicate the exact point of failure or the specific reason for success. Therefore, totals can only be considered secondary or supporting data for control records.

Totals may profitably be used to support a detailed hour-by-hour day-by-day history of the rate of doing business. The rate of doing business is the varying amount of business done in relation to a unit of time. Therefore a plan to show this "rate of doing business" will of course show the business total, but in addition will show the hours when business was below normal, normal, and above normal.

Space does not permit an elaborate description and discussion of all the types of records and summaries which a theatre manager might keep to aid him in knowing his business so I shall concentrate on a practical suggestion which I believe has many advantages and which tells a long story with many details emphasized.

A SYSTEM OF FACT-FINDING

The accompanying diagram represents the business done on a Saturday by a theatre of 1,100 seating capacity in a town sufficiently close to a large city to be considered a suburb of the city. The box office opened at one o'clock p.m., and stayed open continuously till 10 p.m. The numbers of the tickets were noted by the cashier every thirty minutes, so that the number of tickets sold, or the number of people entering the theatre, during the preceding half hour was determined. The number of people is indicated by the space between the horizontal lines, and the key figures along the vertical line at the left are indicated in intervals of 250; hence the space between each horizontal line represents 50 people. The distance between the vertical lines represents time, the space between each line represents 12 minutes; five spaces represent one hour.

Below the heavy horizontal line, where the hours 1:00, 2:00, 3:00 and so on up to 10 o'clock are indicated, is noted in brief the program. This shows the feature picture and the rest of the program.

In reading this chart you will see that between 1:00 p.m. and 1:30 p.m., 100 people entered the theatre; between 1:30 p.m. and 2:00 p.m. 250 people entered; and between 2:00 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. 100 people entered, and so on up to 10:00 p.m.

You can also see that between 1:30 p.m. and 2:00 p.m. film was showing, but that 2:00 p.m. the regular show started; the feature picture of the first show started at 3:00 p.m. and lasted till 4:12 p.m. Also note that "fill in film" was used again between 5:12 p.m. and 5:36 p.m., so on through till 10:00 p.m. when the feature picture started for the last time.

So also at half hour intervals, the manager, assistant manager or usher checks the number of people actually in the theatre. This can be an estimated check of the house, and with a little practice such estimating becomes surprisingly accurate; or it can be an actual count; or it may be an actual count by a hand tally. These points are plotted and connected with the dotted line. So the chart indicates that at 1:30 there were 100 people in the theatre; at 2:00 there were 300; at 2:30, 400; at 3:00, 650, and so on.

Right at this point it is well to realize that this is not actually a lot of work.

ERADICATING MOTHS (answering H. R. M.): The moth condition which you outline in your letter is evidently very serious. I assume that during the two or three years that the theatre has been closed, that they have gained such headway that nothing but the most drastic measures can be taken now to get rid of them. A fumigation of the entire theatre with hydrocyanic acid gas is the most effective procedure. This gas is deadly to ALL ANIMAL LIFE, including HUMAN BEINGS. This can only be done by experts with the full approval and cooperation of the Health Department of your city. Don't attempt this yourself. Let the job out to an accredited company and cover yourself in writing against all kinds of damage claims. Ten breaths of this gas in the concentrated use in house fumigation will cause death.

My second suggestion is this: Depending upon the quantity of carpet and the amount of your investment in the carpet, I would recommend your taking it up from the floor. Vacuum clean it well and sprinkle it thoroughly with paradichlorobenzene crystals, one-half pound to the square yard, then fold or roll up with the nap of the carpet inside. Make these rolls or bundles as compact and air tight as possible. As these crystals evaporate they form a gas or vapor, that if confined sufficiently long will kill moths in all stages of their development. If the theatre continues to remain closed this treatment should be repeated every six months. This you can do yourself with theatre help. There is no danger to human life involved.

The third suggestion is this: Seal the theatre up tight with 3- or 4-inch gummed tape on all doors or other openings to the outside. Try to seal ventilating ducts in some way. Then after the carpet has been vacuumed, sprinkle over the carpet the same paradichlorobenzene crystals mentioned above, but at the rate of one pound for every 1,000 cubic feet of volume of air space. Be sure that every inch of carpet is covered with these crystals. This process should protect the carpets from 9 to 12 months, provided there is a minimum of air leakage from or into the theatre. The fumes from these crystals in carrying out this treatment will irritate the eyes of the workers, but will do no permanent damage to human beings. However, I do not recommend exposure to these fumes longer than necessary.

MOTORS (answering W. H. A., Jr.): Your questions are very general, I can't answer them in anything but general terms. All motors fall somewhere in the following classification:

Motors classified as to the current supplied to them are either direct (d.c.) or Alternating (a.c.) current.

D.C. motors are classified as (1) shunt motors, (2) series motors, (3) compound motors, and (4) compensating motors.

A.C. motors are classified as (1) synchronous motors, (2) induction motors, in turn classified as (a) squirrel cage rotor motors, (b) phase wound rotor motors; and (3) commutator motors.

Probably the most common theatre usage of motors is as follows:

D.C. motors: Shunt wound, for pumps and general purposes. Shunt wound motors with resistance in series with armature (variable peed), for fans and blowers.

A.C. motors: Synchronous, for motor generator sets, pumps and compressors. Squirrel cage (low resistance rotor windings), for pumps, fans and blowers, and general purposes.

Your question with reference to lubrication is equally as general as the motor type question. I shall try to cover that briefly in these columns in the July 28th issue.

You might get some immediate help by referring to my article entitled "Maintenance of Theatre Machinery" in the February 10, 1934, issue of BETTER THEATRES.

AIR WASHERS (answering J. G.): Dig out of your files the Spring Buyers Number of Better Theatres, dated April 7, 1934. In there you will find an article entitled "Summer Comfort Through Ventilation," and on page 16 a section entitled, "Effect and use of Air Washer." Read this carefully. It does contain a lot of information.

Then in that same issue, turn over to page 59, where under the heading, "Equipment Affairs," you will find brief descriptions of different systems all of which use air washers, and any or all of those companies could quote on your job.

In addition to the four described, air-washers and ventilation systems are advertised on pages 35, 36, 37, 38 and 42.

If there is anything more we can do for you let us know. We will be glad to advise you further upon receipt of more specific details and questions.

This entire chart can be plotted and sketched in 20 minutes with the proper data at hand. The cashier in most every theatre usually takes hourly readings from the ticket machine or directly from the tickets, so it is only necessary for her to take them at half-hour intervals instead of at hour intervals. The arrangement must be made to get an accurate count of the people in the theatre at half-hour intervals. The paper used to make this graph is standard. It can be bought at most any stationery store for 15 or 20 cents a pad of 25 sheets. The pad so ruled so that there are five or ten spaces between the heavier ruled lines, is much more convenient than one divided into four or eight spaces between heavier lines.

RATE OF ATTENDANCE CHART

Of the two curves shown on the diagram, the solid line showing the rate of movement of people into the theatre is more important. This rate might be considered the cause, and the dotted curve (showing the fill of the house) the effect. The dotted line represents "totals," as earlier referred to, and is dependent upon, or results from, the rate curve. The only way the "totals" curve can be altered is by influencing or bringing about changes in the rate curve. So if it is desirable to alter the "totals" or to fill curve, study what can be done to change the rate curve.

APPLICATION OF CHART

From this it follows that if the business in your theatre is not up to your desires, and there are too many vacant seats, a study of the rate of doing business becomes all the more important, for the total business is determined by the rate of business. If a manager should be fortunate enough to be playing capacity all the time, then this plan of analysis can't be of great help to him, but it will definitely be of great value to those doing less than capacity.

Note that the peak of the matinee "fill" curve is at the point A, whereas the peak of the matinee rate curve is at B. A is at 4:00 p.m., and B is at 2:00 p.m. A lags behind B two hours. This is caused, first, by the general habit of the people of this community on Saturday afternoons; and secondly, this time lag is greatly influenced by the program arrangement and schedule. If you begin to study your situation by this visual means you will soon see how, by altering the program schedule, you will effect changes in these curves. Of course it would be ideal if, when you had fewest people in the theatre, you had the highest rate of entrance.

These curves are directly affected by your advertising, publicity tieup, exploitation and star values. The effects may be to your advantage or disadvantage, and the plotting of results in this manner brings to your attention more quickly and more forcibly the results of your efforts, the exact spots that are improved, and the spots that have become worse, than any other method.

Look at the diagram: Certainly it would be a waste of time to make any sort of tieup, or advertise in such a way that you would attract more people to the box office between 8:10 and 9:03 when there are more people than you have seats for. But if emphasis that the last feature picture starts at 10 o'clock, and that there are seats available after 9:10, will make the drop-off less abrupt, then it is of definite advantage. Such information given to societies, evening educational groups, civic groups, legion posts or any gathering of persons that takes place periodically and adjourn about 9 o'clock, might be the means of picking up extra business when you can handle it.

From this chart it is readily seen that between 4:30 and 5:30 p.m., only 150 people were admitted to the theatre. It is possible that by a re-arrangement of the program, and omitting the "fill in film" (thereby saving some film cost) the same amount of business might have been done, and the theatre could have been closed between 4:30 and 5:30 so that all employes could get supper. In this way the inconvenience of supper reliefs could have been done away with. In these days of maximum working hours for theatre employes a manager will find such charts a great help in setting up work schedules. It can be seen at a glance just how rushed the cashier is, and if there is a second ticket window, when and if it should be opened to properly handle the people. It will also aid in establishing floor coverage by ushers or other service employes.

Summarizing: I have very briefly shown how this type of analysis will aid the theatre manager in knowing and visualizing—

First, The natural or habitual pattern of movement of the people of that community.

Second, How this chart can aid in laying out a more effective schedule of shows.

Third, How this chart can aid in planning advertising aimed at bringing people into the theatre at off peak periods.

Fourth, How this chart can help in planning tieups and exploitation stunts to affect more profitably box office receipts.

Fifth, How this chart will aid in establishing reasonable and effective working schedules for employes.

And a sixth point: Such charts can be of great help to the engineer or employer responsible for the proper ventilation of the theatre, by providing a basis for anticipating conditions that require the adjustment of fan speeds, the opening or closing of louvers, or the regulating of other equipment.

STUDYING LOCAL HABITS

If you should start in to set up such charts on your theatre and compare one day with the next, and this Monday with last Monday and the Monday preceding that, and Decoration Day next year with Decoration Day of this year, or Fourth of July next year with Fourth of July this year, you will soon observe and become impressed with what I have previously called "the habitual pattern of movement of people of the community." In brief, human beings are very much creatures of habit and conform in their routine lives to a definite order of things. The same or somewhat similar program is followed by people each Monday, or Tuesday, or Decoration Day, or Fourth of July, unless definitely influenced to do otherwise. This is clearly emphasized in the rate curves on any series of charts that I have made in actual practice, and it is of

LAW AFFECTING ADVERTISING METHODS

By LEO T. PARKER

A digest of regulations and court decision governing the use of billboards, signs and other exploitation mediums

ALMOST ALL states have enacted laws which prohibit false or misleading advertising. Generally, such laws provide imprisonment or fines, or both, as penalties for violators. Also, laws are common which prohibit publication or distribution of obscene or vulgar advertising.

When deciding whether a theatre operator has violated a law of this kind, the court considers testimony of disinterested witnesses who have read or seen the advertisement in litigation. In many cases expert witnesses also are required to testify particularly if the advertisement may be listed under the classification of art.

LEGALITY OF BILLBOARD ADS

IN OTHER localities laws have been enacted which prohibit billboard advertising, either on the grounds of fire hazard or marring natural beauty of scenic views.

Laws which relate to the erection and maintenance of billboards originate from several sources, of which the state Legislatures and municipal Councils are important. After a law is enacted it is deemed valid until it is declared void. Moreover, if a law is designed to safeguard the public welfare and is in exercise of the "police power," the courts may render a decision in favor of its validity even though apparently it interferes with the personal rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

For instance, in a quite recently decided case that involved the legality of a law which prohibited the construction and maintenance of billboards on a specified city street, the court held the law valid and explained that for a class legislation of this kind to be valid the law must have a tendency to support a public need and it must prove beneficial to the general public.

In another case an ordinance which prohibited the erection of signs or other obstructions "on or over any part of a specified street" was in litigation. A property owner ignored the law and erected a large sign on his lot. The city instituted legal proceedings against him for violating the ordinance. The advertiser contended that the ordinance was invalid and unconstitutional because it was not intended nor adapted to safeguard public health, safety, morals, habits or improve the general welfare.

However, the court held the ordinance valid and explained that the public has a legal right to restrict the maintenance of signs in a particular or special locality.

In still another case, where the legality of the law prohibiting erection of signs in a residential section was being tested, the court took the viewpoint that the erection of billboards in the specified locality would increase the hazards of fire and might tend to make a fire more destructive to life and property because its extinguishment would be accomplished with greater difficulty. The argument was, also, presented that a large number of women and children are on the streets unaccompanied in a residential district and the signs caused heavy shadows which increased the dangers.

The counsel which opposed the ordinance introduced testimony to show that in many instances lights were maintained on the front of billboards, as a result of which the residential district was better illuminated with the signs than without them. Notwithstanding this argument the court held the law valid.

DISCRIMINATORY LAW IS VOID

A LAW IS invalid if it discriminates. In other words, a valid law must be for the purpose of benefiting the people generally.

For example, a recent city ordinance prohibited the erection of any kind of signs for advertising purposes within 500 feet of a public park or boulevard. This law was tested and held invalid by the courts simply because it did not tend to promote the safety, health and general welfare of the public.

Therefore the important thing in determining whether a law is valid which prohibits signs or billboards in a particular section, is whether the effect of the law is to protect the health, or improve the morals, welfare and safety conditions, or in some manner advantageously benefit the public.

For illustration, in a leading case it was disclosed that a city had passed an unreasonable law. The court held the law invalid and said that a city has power to enact reasonable ordinances only and that the court will annul ordinances which are unreasonable, illegal, repugnant or discriminatory.

An example of an invalid state law is one which prohibits billboards and signs to be erected "in the Southern portion of the State." This law places a handicap on only a few residents, as a result of which others are favored.

LAW OF POLICE POWER

MANY OF THE suits involving regulations for the erection and maintenance of billboards are based on the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which in part reads:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privilege or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property . . . nor deny to any person . . . the equal protection of the law."

However, a court recently held that the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution was not originally intended to curtail the rights of a State under its natural police power to decide what is and what is not a reasonable regulation essential to the promotion of the welfare, morals, health and good order of the people.

Still another court explained that every

LOW VOLTAGE.—Low voltage on a single phase motor is the cause of plenty of grief for maintenance men. It is important, on a motor installation, that sufficiently large wire be used to reduce voltage drop to drop to a minimum. A motor will operate satisfactorily when loaded to its rated horsepower, the frequency is up, and the voltage is not more than 10% below or above the voltage marked on the name plate, but not necessarily in accordance with the standards that were established for its operation at the voltage for which it was designed. The same is true when a motor is operated at its rated horsepower and voltage, provided the frequency does not vary more than 5% over or under the frequency on the name plate.

owner of a business or property holds the title with the knowledge that such property may be regulated by the government, so that it shall not be maintained or operated in such a manner that the enjoyment or safety of a majority of other persons is jeopardized; and, further, that all private property in the United States is derived directly or indirectly from the government and subject to legal regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare of the inhabitants.

Recently a court said, "Police power is that inherent sovereignty which the government exercises whenever regulations are demanded by public policy for the benefit of society at large, in order to guard its morals, safety, health and the like, in accordance with the needs of civilization."

Another court stated that the meaning of the term "police power" is indefinable because a court cannot foresee the ever changing conditions of the country, but that the term is generally conceded to mean the necessary power for the safety and welfare of the public.

WHEN CIRCULARS ARE ILLEGAL

SINCE IT IS customary for many theatre owners to distribute circulars for the purpose of advertising special features, it is important to know that while a law is valid which requires circular distributors to obtain a license, yet a law is void which is intended to regulate distribution of circulars in stores or prevent advertisers from handing the circulars to pedestrians.

CASE

For instance, in Almassi v. City of Newark (150 Atl. 217, Newark, N. J.) it was disclosed that a city ordinance prohibits unlicensed "distributing or circulating posters, circulars, hand bills, samples, printed or engraved notices or other advertisements of any kind" in the streets.

A person who failed to obtain a license to distribute circulars was arrested and convicted of violating the ordinance. He appealed to the higher court on the grounds that the law was invalid. However, the higher court held the law valid, saying:

DECISION

"Had the city a right to enact such an ordinance? Has the city such right of supervision over its streets as to provide for the licensing of persons desiring to use them for the distribution of circular notices? . . . Circulars may be in such quantity and of such size and character as to render the streets so unsightly as to be almost universally objectionable, entailing substantial expense to the city in clearing them away. It is obvious the city must exercise some control of the subject, and an ordinance requiring a license is a reasonable police regulation."

On the other hand, it is important to know that a city cannot enact a valid ordinance regulating distribution of circulars in stores or handing them to individuals.

For example, in Coughlin v. Sullivan (126 Atl. 177, Jersey City, N. J.), the question presented the court was whether the distribution of pamphlets in stores and the giving of one pamphlet to a pedestrian on the street violated an ordinance prohibiting the distribution of pamphlets in the public streets. It was held that these acts did not in any manner violate that ordinance.

POWER OF CITY OVER CIRCULARS

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise only those powers which are granted in express words by State laws or which are necessarily implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, and such as are essential.

CASE

For illustration, in City of Chicago v. Schultz (173 N. E. 276, Chicago, Ill.), it was disclosed that a municipal ordinance provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation, whether a licensed bill-poster or sign painter or not, to distribute "any circular, dodger, handbills, pamphlet, card, picture, or any ad-

YOUR RIGHTS IN ACCEPTING NOTES

BY M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

A NOTE OR DRAFT, if it is drawn in the form outlined by me last month, has certain definite legal advantages over other forms of contracts; namely, negotiability, or the quality of being free from question by reason of the transactions between the original parties.

Now while an ordinary contract may be assigned to a third party, the third party takes it subject to any defenses which might be raised against the party assigning the contract to him. In the case of negotiable instruments, however, the assignee, or third party, may acquire greater rights than the party assigning the note or draft to him.

For example, if Smith by pointing a gun at Jones, forces him to sign a contract and then assigns the contract to Brown, an innocent third party, Jones can defend an action on the contract by Brown on the ground that he had signed it under duress. But, if instead of forcing Jones to sign a contract, Smith forces him to sign a note and then endorses it to Brown, the innocent third party, duress would not be a defense to an action on the note by Brown against Jones, though it would be if Smith sued Jones on the note.

In the law of negotiable instruments, an innocent third party is known as a holder in due course. To qualify as a holder in due course and to enjoy the privileges of that position, a party must receive a note or draft under the following conditions:

1. That the instrument is complete and regular upon its face.
2. That he becomes the holder of the instrument before it is overdue and without knowing that it had previously been dishonored, if such was the case.
3. That he takes it in good faith and gives value for it.
4. That when he takes it, he has no notice of any defect in the instrument or any defect in the title to the instrument of the person from whom he receives it.
5. If the instrument is payable on demand and is received by a third person an unreasonable length of time after its issue, the holder is not considered to be a holder in due course.

Among the defenses which cannot be raised as against a holder in due course are the following:

1. That the maker of the instrument was fraudulently induced to make it.
2. That the maker was forcibly compelled to make the instrument.
3. That the instrument was stolen.
4. That the party originally receiving the instrument never gave value or consideration for it.
5. That the instrument was paid before it became due.

Of course, if the holder of the instrument who claims to be a holder in due course, knows of the existence of any of these facts before he takes it, he cannot be considered to be a holder in due course. Furthermore, even against a holder in due course certain defenses exist and their effect is to make the instrument void. They are:

1. Forgery.
2. Payment of the instrument after maturity.
3. The fact that the party originally making the instrument is under age.
4. The fact that the maker or endorser had no authority to make or endorse the instrument.
5. In some states the fact that the consideration was illegal (for example, a note given in payment for committing a crime).

THE SELECTION OF ACOUSTIC MATERIALS

By C. C. POTWIN and S. K. WOLF

How the variation in frequency rates, auditorium design and other factors determine what will make efficient treatment

IN THE EARLY stages of sound reproduction in theatres, the problem of acoustics was not considered of primary importance. The average showman was at that time satisfied if the sound in his theatre was reasonably intelligible. In general, acoustic treatment would not be considered unless reverberation was excessive under all audience conditions, resulting in an appreciable loss in box-office receipts. Technical advances in the science of sound reproduction, together with the public's appreciation of improved quality, have led to a keener competition between most exhibitors.

Today, it is practically impossible to operate a theatre at a financial gain unless the sound quality reaches an acceptable standard set forth by the general public. Exhibitors are coming to realize this fact and are taking all possible steps to rectify such acoustic defects as are apparent in their particular theatres. It is the purpose of this article to provide a somewhat clearer understanding of the acoustic requirements of theatres and to explain the chief factors determining the selection of acoustic materials for treatment.

One of the more recent improvements in sound reproducing systems is the extension of the frequency range of reproduction. For example, the former systems responded faithfully to frequencies ranging from approximately 75 to 5,000 cycles per second, whereas in the more modern systems, this range is extended an octave below and above to include frequencies from approximately 50 to 8,500 cycles per second. One who is not familiar with the technicalities will inquire as to the principal advantage gained by so extending the response range. This can best be demonstrated by a listening test which, if performed in an acoustically correct auditorium, will readily indicate a response more in agreement with direct speech and music. Extension in the lower range improves the quality of the reproduced bass tones, and the extended upper range makes possible the reproduction of more of the overtones and harmonics. These extremely low and high tones lend depth, brilliance, and added naturalness to reproduced sound. Satisfactory usage of these modern systems can be obtained only where there is a proper balance of acoustic absorption within the theatre. The reverberation time must be within definite limits for all frequencies, rather than for only a limited portion of the frequency range.

VARIATION IN ABSORPTION

IN THE PAST, and even to the present day, exhibitors in general have been led to believe that the relative absorption value of an acoustic material at 512 cycles per second is the most important factor in theatre treatment. Little consideration has thereby been given to the absorption value of a material at other frequencies. As a result, materials have been installed frequently which provide a large amount of absorption at 512 cycles per second and throughout the higher frequency range, but which have a relatively small absorption value at the lower frequencies. Where large quantities of such materials are installed in a theatre, there is a resulting "boomy" effect, or condition of low frequency reverberation, as well as a certain flatness or lack of brilliance throughout the high frequencies. Figure 1 shows the absorption characteristic of a material of this particular type (Type B) compared with a material (Type A) having a more uniform and more desirable characteristic. It will be noted that although both materials have the same absorption value at 512 cycles per second, the average absorption throughout the low frequencies of material B is only about one-fourth of its respective value at the high frequencies, whereas for material A this relative variation is above one-half.

Very few, if any, materials have absolutely flat characteristics or identical absorption values throughout the entire frequency range. It has been determined by careful experimentation that the ear will tolerate or accept a proportionately greater amount of low-frequency than high-frequency reverberation. Since this variation must be kept within certain definite limits, we cannot make exclusive use of a material, having characteristics equivalent to the Type B material, in the average theatre.

TYPICAL ANALYSIS

For example, let us consider a theatre of average size, or about 150,000 cubic feet, having satisfactory proportions, equipped with reasonably efficient upholstered seats and carpet, and treated to a suitable optimum time at 512 cycles per second (omitting consideration of other frequencies) with a material having characteristics equivalent to those of Type B in Figure 1. The computed reverberation characteristic under these conditions, compared with the selected optimum frequency band, or best limits of reverberation time for this particular volume and shape, is shown as the dotted curve in Figure 2. The deviations from the optimum band at the low and high frequencies are most apparent, and it can be readily understood that the theatre treated with such a material would be "boomy" and lacking in brilliance even though a former type of reproducing system with a corresponding narrower range of frequency response were used.

If a modern system, with its greater range of frequency reproduction, is installed in this theatre these defects will be greatly exaggerated. When such a characteristic is encountered with the installation of a later type system, and when the exhibitor is reluctant about making any change in the treatment, it is frequently necessary to mechanically "filter out" or attenuate certain of the extremely low frequencies. This further sacrifices the added quality of naturalness which is gained from the improved system. The reverberation characteristic of the same theatre, treated with a material equivalent to Type A in Figure 1, is shown as the solid curve in Figure 2. It can be seen that this is well within the one-half of its average value at the higher frequencies. Where several different types of materials are used, their combined average absorption should approximate this proportionate ratio. This is a very general statement, however, and it must be borne in mind that a detailed analysis, covering the full frequency range, must be made of each individual case to determine the exact characteristics of the treatment required.

selected optimum limits for the full frequency range, and under these conditions the theatre should be very satisfactory for sound reproduction, using either the former or improved type of sound system.

ABSORPTION BALANCE

DUE TO THE wide differences in size, shape, interior furnishings, etc., of theatres, it is impossible to specify a material having one particular frequency absorption characteristics which would be adequate for all theatre treatment. In certain cases, particularly those involving new construction, where the architect favors materials which may be incorporated readily in the decorative scheme, it is often necessary to use as many as three materials to secure a proper balance of absorption as well as the architectural effect desired. However, in a theatre of satisfactory proportions which is equipped with efficient upholstered seats and the usual amount of carpet and drapes, the use of a material having an average contour of characteristic, which is in reasonably close agreement with that of material A, will insure a proper balance of absorption. In other words, the average absorption value at the lower frequencies should preferably not be less than Most acoustic materials now available on the market have been tested at octave intervals ranging from 128 to 4,096 cycles per second. It is possible, therefore, when selecting a material, to judge its efficiency at other frequencies as well as at 512 cycles per second. In view of the extension of the frequency range of reproducing systems, it is considered advisable to extend the testing range one octave below and one above the present band; i. e., from 64 to 8,196 cycles per second. Several recognized laboratories are now equipped to conduct such tests and it is believed that in the future more of the material manufacturers will make use of their facilities.

APPLICATION OF MATERIALS

THE ABSORPTION characteristics of most materials are appreciably affected by the manner of mounting—whether they be applied to furring strips or directly to a surface. It is, therefore, of particular importance that the method of mounting be in agreement with that used in the test. This will insure equivalent results after installing the material selected. The low frequency absorption of acoustic tiles, boards and felts is generally increased by mounting these materials on furring strips. This varies considerably, however, depending on the type and thickness of the material.

The careful selection of materials with respect to their acoustic characteristics has been considered of primary importance for some time—even prior to the recent improvements in sound systems. Acoustical engineers have considered this as well as the other requirements in selecting materials for theatre treatment. They generally undertake a complete analysis of the house at octave intervals throughout the frequency range. This is made possible through the use of more recently developed theoretical formulae. Accurate instrumental measurements of the action and decay of sound energy, at various frequencies, can also be made within the theatre. These are of particular value in solving certain complex problems and in checking the theoretical analysis.

RELATED FACTORS

THE FACTORS and precautions, other than the proper selection of materials, which should be taken into consideration in the acoustical design and treatment of theatres, are too numerous to mention here in complete detail. A few of particular importance, which have not been too frequently discussed in previous articles on the subject, are, however, included below.

AUDITORIUM DESIGN

The proportions of a theatre have a definite bearing on the resulting acoustic condition, and it has been found that, in general, the best distribution of sound energy is obtained where the ratio of height to width to length is in the order of 2:3:5, respectively.

It is not always possible to adhere strictly to a correct ratio of proportions in design since the architect may be limited with respect to lot size and other requirements of the theatre structure. This factor is of particular importance, however, and should, where possible, be given careful consideration.

BACKSTAGE TREATMENT

Proper backstage treatment is an important consideration in most theatres, particularly in those which have been designed with large stages to accommodate theatrical presentations. Complete separation of the backstage volume from the auditorium proper is frequently required in such cases to insure against any increase in reverberation caused by reflections of sound energy from within this area. In theatres with small stages, it is generally desirable to install an efficient form of acoustic treatment behind the horns.

SEATING

The importance of using efficiently upholstered seats cannot be too strongly emphasized since the variation in absorption, due to a change in the number of persons in the audience, is principally dependent upon this factor. For the most satisfactory results, this should be a minimum variation. The use of non-upholstered seats should, therefore, be avoided. Where such inefficient seats are used, and replacement is not economically possible, it is generally preferable to concentrate at least a part of the required acoustic treatment on the ceiling surface.

WALL INSTALLATION

When installing treatment on wall surfaces, it is preferable to carry it down to within approximately 4 feet above the floor, if this can be accomplished without seriously interfering with the existing decorative scheme. This low wall treatment is in many cases of equal importance to the treatment of other sections of the surfaces, since it is effective in reducing sound reflections in the vicinity of the audience.

The exhibitor should bear in mind that, from the standpoint of economy, the important consideration is not the cost per unit of absorption at 512 cycles per second, but rather its relative efficiency throughout the frequency range. It is more economical and profitable to install the correct treatment, regardless of the fact that it may be more expensive, than a less efficient type. In many cases where this principle has been disregarded, it has been necessary to remove the material installed and replace it with a type having the required efficiency.

This involves considerably more time and expense than is necessary. In order that the exhibitor may be assured of a thorough analysis of his acoustic problems and of receiving correct specifications for treatment, it is suggested that he present his case to an unbiased acoustical consultant, or to a concern which is familiar with the present day requirements, before installing treatment in his particular theatre.

LOWER OPERATING COSTS . . . FINER REPRODUCTION!

● You will enjoy materially reduced hourly operating cost with SYLVANIA Sound tubes. Scores of theatres now using them can attest to this fact. Types 242-A and 205-D employ the exclusive SYLVANIA Graphite Anode construction with its many inherent advantages. Type 264-B is a non-microphonic tube for use in head amplifiers. Rigid construction and special filament mounting eliminate the noise sources common to tubes of this type now on the market.

Sylvania Type 205D

Hygrade Sylvania Corporation also manufactures three types of phototubes for use in theatre sound equipment. These are the types 803-A, 868 and 814-A. Engineering information is available on request.

THE ACADEMY SEEKS ADVICE ON REEL LENGTHS

I AM IN RECEIPT of a letter from Gordon D. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The letter is long, but I propose quoting it in full for the reason that it displays an honest desire to co-operate and to give honest service.

When the Academy put through the Standard Release Print, the initial attempt was made in a manner that instantly set up very natural resentment, since it implied a lack of interest in obtaining the advice of theatre people. The Council evidently does not propose proceeding along those lines, which is good. Theatre folk and those who have toiled hard in the motion picture exhibition field for, lo, these many years, have a feeling that they should be consulted when matters directly affecting projection and the theatre are up for consideration and action.

My compliments to Mr. Mitchell and the Council. May I suggest to projectionists who feel they can offer constructive advice in the matter of reel load length, that they communicate with the Council at once. Mr. Mitchell says in a part of his letter:

"First may I express the appreciation of the Academy Research Council for the very fine story covering the recent revision of the Standard Release Print. As you know, we are again studying the problem of reel length, which is of very vital concern to all branches of the industry—production, distribution and exhibition. In connection with this investigation there seems to have been considerable misunderstanding on the part of many technicians in the East. The idea seems to be prevalent that the Academy has finally recommended a 1,700-foot reel for adoption by the industry.

"The fact of the matter is, however, that we have not as yet made any formal recommendation as to reel length change, but are studying the 1,700-foot length as a tentative length only. The subcommittee is still considering all factors before a final recommendation covering the future adoption of a longer length reel will be presented to the Research Council.

"As you know, into consideration in any project of this kind there enter many problems concerned with laboratory practice, editing of the picture, shipping regulations, wax recording problems, storage facilities, projection considerations, film shipping regulations in foreign countries, projection practice and equipment in foreign countries, etc.

"I have been asked by the Research Council to point out to you and, through you, to the thousands of your projectionist followers, that we at all times welcome co-operation from the projectionist end of the industry, and that the Reel Length Subcommittee is giving consideration to every opinion and every factor presented to it.

"We would appreciate any comment on this that you may care to give in your columns and especially would appreciate it if you will stress the fact that any projectionist opinion on reel length, or any of our other projects, will be given careful consideration at any time by our organization.

"As you know, technical progress will only be made through a very active co-operation between the branches of the industry, and a complete understanding by the various branches of the problems of the others. In this connection, anything which you may be able to do to bring out the fact that we in the production end of the business, are cognizant of the importance of the projection end and the value of the opinions arising there, will be of great help."

My reaction to the whole matter is that the one highly important thing is to make it possible to get the best results before theatre audiences. I believe we may all agree that that is the basic, fundamental problem of the motion picture industry at all times.

We won't bother discussing the wrongs or rights of it. That would just waste space. The fact is that a very large percentage of projectionists do double up reels. The fact is that they have a basically sound reason for so doing. The fact is that as things now are, the practice cannot be stopped. The fact is that "doubling up" does work to the injury of both picture and sound in feature photoplays. And there you are!

What is to be done about it? The answer is that if the best results are to be obtained, reel lengths must be made so that there will be no doubling. Otherwise no good will come from any reform, and we'll be right where we were before—or worse.

The best authority we have in projection matters at present is the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which body has given the matter of reel length very serious consideration and has decided that with anything less than a 2,000-foot reel we cannot be assured that doubling will be wholly stopped. I am a member of the committee and concur in that view. My opinion is, and for many years has been, that feature films should reach theatres in 2,000-foot lengths. It would be unwise, I am very sure, to make so important a change in a way that would not cure the ill, and cure it wholly.

"'With regard to the trouble we are having, while it may sound like one of Ripley's "believe-it-or-nots," the scratching and popping noise in our sound has been traced to automobiles, the worst offenders being the latest type cars, particularly Buicks and Chevrolets. Older type cars, and cars equipped with radios, do not produce the trouble.

"'Our projection room is on the second floor, next the street. Cars such as described in passing, cause a popping and scratching, but the greatest annoyance arises from parked cars when their engines are being started.

"'We are able to get some relief by cutting out the high frequencies with the tone control, but this is only partially effective and operates, of course, to depreciate the sound values. Will you kindly place this before your engineers and see if any remedy can be provided, since the amplifier is almost valueless. It is very similar to static in its effect. When engines are being cranked we can hear almost nothing at all except, of course, the noise. In fact we are obliged to use an old type amplifier, which it does not affect. The noise is picked up by the exciter lamp or photocell, or by both. Any suggestion will be appreciated.'"

The Sound-on-Film Corporation replied as follows: "Your complaint about the 'pick-up' from automobiles in the street, is the strangest thing which has ever been put up to us. However, we believe that this can be remedied by using an efficient a.c. line filter, as described on the set of instruction sheets which we are mailing you separately.

"The explanation is this: The only possible points where this 'pickup' could have an effect are the photocell leads and the exciter lamp leads from the amplifier to the projectors. It is hardly likely that the arcing in the automobile ignition system would jump that far. Therefore, the trouble is most likely being transmitted through your a. c. line, with either the front of your building, the marquee or some other surface collecting the static disturbances, and thus transmitting them right to your amplifier through the electrical wiring of the building."

This seemed a most interesting problem and, desiring to obtain all possible knowledge concerning it, I transmitted the entire matter to Lester Isaac, Director of Projection of Loew's, Inc., who in turn handed it over to one of his most able sound engineers, F. W. Boettcher, who reported as follows, the report being approved by Mr. Isaac:

"Re: attached correspondence from Mr. Richardson, automobile ignition equipment represents a source of interference from the spark plug discharge in the form of electro-magnetic waves.

"I would assume from the letter of complaint that proximity of the projection booth sound wiring to automobiles being started directly in front and one story under the booth, proves conclusively that the sound wiring and associated circuits are directly in the electro-magnetic field of automobile ignition systems.

"Possible remedies: Complete analysis of wiring of associated sound-on-film reproducing equipment, replacing all speech circuits with properly ground lead or Belden shield conductors. A checkup of preliminary amplifier vacuum tube circuits to determine if any of these voltage stages through resonance conditions of their grid and plate circuits may be in an oscillating condition. Proper grounding of all electro-magnetic and electro-static shields to common ground conductor, properly attached to a water pipe which may either be connected to a street main water supply or well.

"While this condition might also be caused by coupling through defective a.c. lighting circuits, we feel quite sure that the fundamental cause of the noise response lies in the sound reproducing system itself directly."

REFRACTION AND ABERRATION

JOHN L. GARRISON, of Vancouver, B. C., asks: "Will you be kind enough to explain just what is meant by 'refractive index'? I find it used in optical text books, but with no explanation I am unable to understand. I also would deeply appreciate an explanation, in general terms, of the refraction of light and of chromatic aberration. I cannot seem to absorb these things as explained in optical text books.

"I am studying with the hope that some day I may be able to enter the field of projection and do credit to it. That is some while in the future, though, as I still am in High school. I have your Bluebook of Projection and study your Bluebook School and BETTER THEATRES comments. I also have three other projection books and one projection publication, which latter a friend lends to me each week when he has finished with it. Frankly, Mr. Richardson, I don't mind saying I have learned far more from your books and departments than I have from all the rest combined."

Friend Garrison, I appreciate your friendly commendation of my work. May I continue to merit your good opinion. I must "land" on you for one thing, however, and that is your signature. All I can say is that it comes nearer looking like Garrison than anything else.

As to refraction of light, if a ray meets traveling through air a polished glass surface exactly at right angles, there is no refraction. The speed of the light will, however, be retarded, since the denser the medium light travels through, the slower its speed, and of course glass is much denser than air.

But if light reaches glass at any angle other than a right angle, the edge of it striking the surface first will be retarded, while the rest of the light will travel at regular air speed until it reaches the glass, hence the light will be bent or refracted an amount dependent upon the relative density of air and glass. This is illustrated in Figure 1.

Chromatic aberration is due to the fact that white light is a combination of many colors, each of which has a different wave length. It then follows that unless a lens be so corrected that all the various wave lengths will be focused at the same plane, then they will focus at different planes.

For example, violet will focus nearer the lens than green, and green closer than red.

As to refractive index, you will remember I have said light is refracted because of a difference in density of mediums and therefore the speed of light passing through them. There is, "believe it or not," a difference in the density of various glasses. The refractive index of any glass is the amount of refraction it will give to light entering at an angle, as compared with the angle at which it enters the glass. Examining figure 2 we see line BB which is a line exactly perpendicular to the surfaces of glass A. Now if ray C enter the glass at the angle shown, and we measure angle D and angle E, the difference between them will represent the refractive index.

Dear Sirs:

Just a few words to inform you regarding the operation of the 309 Full Range Reproducers which I installed recently.

Upon installation of the first Reproducer my sound was improved 90 percent. The one speaker was such an improvement over the two old speakers I have been using that I immediately ordered another in order to cover my house 100 percent. With the two horns my sound is distributed uniformly throughout the theatre.

I can sincerely say that any theatre manager can't go wrong on this type of speaker. With your guarantee of satisfaction—and it is satisfaction—I'll venture to say that wherever the reproducer is installed it is there to stay.

Again assuring you of my satisfaction, and wishing you success in the distribution to theatres where improved sound is desired, I am

Very truly yours,

or caring Adam about what it will be, spring their brain child on the helpless ones of the projection room, upon exhibitors and upon the public. For example, the soft focus, which is presumed to be enormously artistic, but really is a producer of strained eyes more than anything else.

The average theatre patron who looks for any substantial period of time at a soft focus image can note eye strain. He instantly ascribes what he translates into a fault, to that numbskull up in the projection room who doesn't know enough to sharpen the focus. He sometimes makes a more or less vigorous kick to the manager, and the manager not infrequently burns up the projection room phone wires registering his own kick.

As a matter of fact, cases have been known in which a manager had to be taken to the projection room to watch a sharp focus scene jump from that to an eye burning soft-focus smear and back again, before he would believe the fault was in the film and not chargeable to the projectionist.

And after all, why the soft focus? A short soft-focus scene might possibly create some little added beauty, provided the audience and the manager knew what it was all about. However, while such a thing may appeal to the artistic, as a general thing it most emphatically does not appeal to Mr. and Mrs. Plain Citizen. Why, then, annoy fifty people to please, perhaps, possibly one individual?

PERMISSIBLE LENS HEIGHT

FROM D. R. Simons of Denver, Col., comes this inquiry:

"I am contemplating the erection of a theatre a little later here in Denver. May I ask you how high above the screen center the lenses may be without too much damage to the picture through distortion. Also what material is best for projection room walls that does not have too much weight. I have talked with several supposed-to-be expert men, only to get as many different answers. I feel that if you will advise me the advice will be the best available because of your position and the many years you have had ample opportunity for observation, and you have no commercial axe to grind."

As to height of lenses, or in other words height of projection room floor, it should be no more than will produce a 5% increase in picture height through distortion, which of course works out to reduce projection room height as projection distance is reduced. In other words, the room floor may be higher at 100 than at 50 feet projection distance.

As to materials for building the room, I consider hollow tile not less than six inches thick, set in strong lime-tempered cement mortar, as the best material available. It is strong, relatively light in weight, does not store either heat or cold excessively, and properly laid and covered inside (and preferably outside as well, though the latter is not really essential—just a sort of assurance of absolute safety) with a good sound-absorbing, fireproof material, is pretty thoroughly sound-proof.

However, in laying the tile it is essential that good mortar be used—say, three parts sharp sand to one of good cement, with sufficient lime added to make it work smoothly. It is also essential that the tile be set solidly in mortar, not be just a hit-or-miss affair.

However, you object to too much weight, which leads me to think you may be considering the use of a none-too-strong carrying support. Let me warn you, Friend Simons, that unless you want trouble, be very sure that whatever the support is, it will be able to carry the floor without any vibration whatsoever. The projection room floor must be perfectly solid so as not to vibrate.

By the way, hollow tile may be used for the ceiling if desired. It can be laid between light I-beams, or even by T-irons, the necessary depth of which will of course depend entirely upon depth of room, front to back. For a 10-foot depth, 3-inch T-irons between each two rows of tile should be quite sufficient. If the room depth be in excess of 10 feet, possibly 4-inch irons would be necessary, thought I think not.

A NEW SOUND PROJECTOR

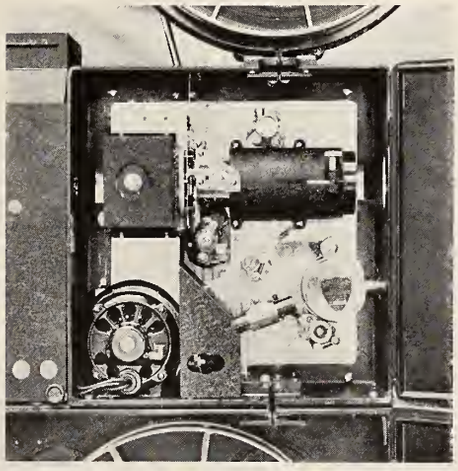
OUR OLD FRIEND, Herman A. DeVry of Chicago, is out with a new model professional motion picture-sound projector, and when DeVry puts out an equipment it is deserving of very serious consideration. The design of the new projector, judged from the maker's description, is along the lines of simplicity—very much so. Proceeding on the theory that gears set up warbles and other sound interferences, Mr. DeVry has eliminated the usual gear train and substituted silent chain drive. There is not a mesh gear in the mechanism.

The shutter is of the "barrel" type, for which DeVry makes extensive claims. I have not as yet had opportunity to personally examine the mechanism, hence cannot either affirm or dispute these claims.

The face of the intermittent sprocket is in exact vertical line with the film tracks of the aperture plate, and all sprockets engage from six to ten sprocket holes. Framing is accomplished without affecting the shutter timing.

The new DeVry projector is built as a picture-sound unit, which of course could possibly have advantages as against projectors to which the sound attachment must be added. Aperture ventilation is accomplished by the rotating shutter, though just to what extent I am not as yet advised.

Illuminants include a standard arc lamp of latest design for the projection light source, or if preferred, the DeVry Mazda lamp equipment, which may be had in 1,000- or 1,500-watt, 110-volts; or 900- or 1,800-watt 32 volts. Also the various types of lamps put out by the lamp companies are adaptable.



All shafting is of high-grade tool steel heat treated to increase its wearing qualities. The standard geneva intermittent movement is employed, constructed of tool steel and hardened. Bearings are either non-freezing bronze bearing metal or ball bearings. DeVry makes the flat claim that the use of what is known as "Robertson's Centripetal Wheel" and the silent chain drive totally eliminates all mechanical influence on the sound.

The sound mechanism is equipped with two exciter lamp sockets, which enable the projectionist to substitute a new exciter lamp for a faulty one almost instantly. The DeVry installation will include amplification of range suitable to the auditorium to be served, as well as loudspeakers and the wide range sound field.

The projector may be had mounted either on a firm, solid base, or on four sturdy legs, as preferred. The entire equipment packs into a small case and weighs less than 200 pounds.

The foregoing is written entirely from the manufacturer's own data, and when the equipment is available for examination, I shall discuss it further.

PROJECTION LAMP

● A new projection arc lamp of Suprex type has been brought out by the Breck Photoplay Supply Company of Los Angeles. The lamp is designed to use D. C. Suprex carbons on amperages ranging from 35 to 65. A feature is the use of a special governing device in adjusting the positive crater to the reflector. While the carbons are advanced at the proper ratio by a feed screw and continuous feed motor, varied by a potentiometer, the mechanism also incorporates an "electric eye" to maintain a suitable relationship between positive crater and reflector.

The design also includes an "air screen" conceived to stabilize the arc and prevent excessive pitting of the reflector by molten particles from the arc, as well as to prevent reflector breakage resulting from striking of the mirror by the arc tail flame. This provision is pointed out by the designer as having special application to houses with excessive projection angles. The blower for supplying the air to the air screen is driven by a separate motor and also supplies air through a duct protruding through the front of the lamphousing to a special air distributor for cooling the projector mechanism.

Carbons are maintained in a co-axial position by means of adjustment knobs located at the rear of the lamp. This is also true of the vertical and horizontal adjustments of the reflector. The arc is struck by squeezing a special knob at the rear of the lamp, pulling the air back to its proper burning gap by spring tension.

The carbon jaws and carriers are adjustable by means of a handle releasing the carbon carriers from the feed screw. The reflector is protected while the arc is being struck by a douser that is lowered into place by a handle at the front of the lamp. The entire burner unit is removed from the lamphouse by taking out four screws located at the back of the lamp. Finish is in black crackle enamel and black baked enamel.

PORTABLE PROJECTOR

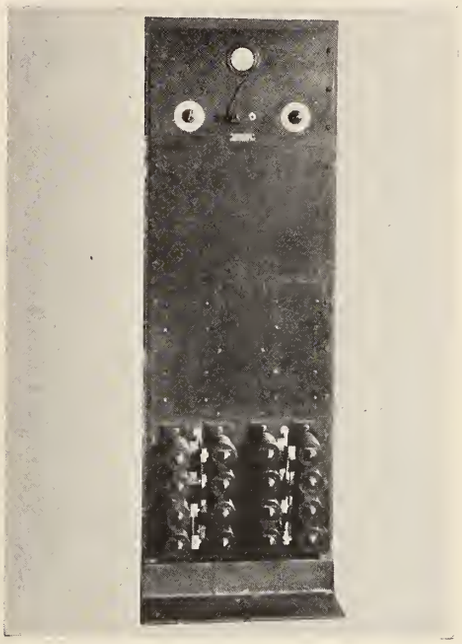
● A portable sound projector completely equipped for operation and design for suitcase carriage, has been brought out by the S. O. S. Corporation of New York. The projector mechanism is mounted within an aluminum case measuring 8½ x 21 x 21 inches, and the mechanism itself is an aluminum casting. The light source is a 1,000-watt incandescent biplane-filament lamp, General Electric manufacture. General projector and soundhead elements are of professional standards. Operation is on any 110-volt a. c. or d. c. circuit.

PROJECTION LAMP

● A new model projection arc lamp has been developed by the Imperial Electric & Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles, which recently brought out the Sterling Suprex lamp and Sterling converter. The new product is referred to as Model B. The 9-inch mirror formerly used has been replaced by one 12 inches in diameter. The mirror is Pyrex and designed to eliminate fogging and pitting due to smoke of the arc. The designer, C. S. Ashcraft, declares that the Model B lamp can be operated at an angle of 45° or more.

To replace the positive carbon, the new carbon merely has to be placed in a groove and a releasing lever closed. A clinker receptacle is provided to receive bits of the copper coating dropping off during operation. The design also incorporates a new carbon adjustment method and new optical system.

NEW CARPET WEAVE



● A new line of carpetings has been developed for the market under the name "Lokweave Broadloom" by Bigelow-Sanford. They are of the patent back type and can be procured in a choice of four plain qualities (one of hard twist fabric) and in 27 colors. Figured styles are under development.

NEW RECTIFIER

● A low-voltage rectifier adapted to theatre sound systems has been brought out by the Gates Radio and Supply Company of Quincy, Ill. It is referred to as Model A9S. It is of copper-oxide type and delivers a total of 12 volts at 8 amperes in two sections of 4 amperes each. Power consumption totals 220 watts.

The panel is 19 inches wide and 30 inches high, mounted on an iron frame. Rectifying elements are mounted on the front of the panel, and a rheostat for each section to permit adjustment for variations in line voltage, and a voltmeter for checking both sections, are provided.

Gates low-voltage rectifier.

NEW RECTIFIER

● A rectifier designed for use in motion picture projection has been brought out by the Baldor Electric Company of St. Louis. Principal features of the design are described as follows:

The transformer is made of laminated electrical sheet steel, the laminations tightly compressed to reduce vibration. Windings are of single cotton enamel magnet wire, insulated from the core and saturated with insulating varnish. The case is constructed of heavy gauge sheet steel and is mounted on short legs. Louvers in the sides and top provide ventilation. The case is finished in green lacquer.

The panel is made of sheet steel having a two-tone finish. Mounted on the panel are an "on and off" snap switch, an 0-50 d. c. ammeter (if desired), and a seven-point control dial, which varies the amperage at the arc between 15 and 30 amperes.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I HAVE A remodeling proposition in view which I wish you would give me some help on. My theatre now seats 500 on only one floor, and I want to add a balcony to seat about 150, to be used by colored patrons. I want to have them enter from the rear, up stairs to a platform and through a catwalk on each side, hidden from the view of the white patrons on the main floor.

To make room for the balcony I can add about 6 feet to the height of the auditorium at the rear, giving me about 21 feet in height. What material would you use for the ceiling, and can you suggest any decorative style?

I also want to change the floor slope. There is only a drop of 3 feet now (the floor at the rear of the auditorium is level with the stage).

When I change the auditorium I want to change the decoration of the walls also so as to get a good effect and also to have good acoustics. I now have panels with acoustic felt, and the same material is used at the rear. My sound is good now. I think I would like to have rough plaster walls with gold or some color in the plaster. Because the underside of the balcony will be seen by patrons entering the auditorium, that should have some pleasing decoration, too.

I now have a foyer 9 feet deep, and the seating space is 80 feet deep. The stage is 26 feet wide and 15 feet deep. Width of the auditorium inside is 30 feet. Seats are in three banks, two at each side and one in the middle. I would like to keep the cost down to about $3,000. I am sending you a sketch and will appreciate any help you can give me.—R. E. B.

The Answer:

SINCE YOU intend to add a balcony to your present theatre, and as the auditorium is 30 feet wide, it will require ten rows of seats to obtain a seating capacity of 150. I suggest you plan to have a mezzanine floor between the ceiling of the lobby and the underside of the balcony for entrance to the balcony seats connecting same with outside stairs and catwalks, so the colored patrons will be entirely hidden from view of the lower floor audience. A 6-foot addition to the present ceiling height will be sufficient to take care of the balcony.

For the ceiling above and below the balcony I advise you to use a sound absorbing tile and make this decorative. Apply tiles in varied patterns divided by borders.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

A 3-foot slope in the floor for the depth of the auditorium is not enough. You should add at least 2 feet more, but this can be done only in the front part and by lowering the stage floor, as there will not be enough ceiling height in the rear of the auditorium to take care of the new balcony.

Since you are going to change the wall decorations and remove the acoustical felt (which is an improvement in itself), you can save some money by using a plaster board or new wood material in place of plaster. Some splendid effects may be obtained by cutouts or by V-grooved lines in design in these boards. The manufacturers of these materials will gladly supply you with catalogs showing different methods of application and several designs.

You should attempt to obtain the majority of decorative effects by the use of concealed lighting in colors, and I advise you against the use of gold coloring as it has been overdone. Use bright and vivid colors.

If you are careful in the selection of materials and apply economy wherever possible, you may be able to have this remodeling executed for about $3,000, but do not figure on any less—it might cost more!

The Question:

ACCOMPANYING THIS letter is another sheet containing the dimensions of a building that I am considering converting into a theatre. The building has been used as a merchandise store. My desire is to have seats on the main floor only. I would like to have a stage for the accommodation of local talent.

Inasmuch as this building is only 14 feet high, I am afraid that it will be difficult to construct a projection booth. However, I shall be guided by any suggestions you can make.

Please outline a plan to assist me in the location of the box office, projection room, arrangement and number of seats that I can accommodate in this building, location of aisles, proper slope of the floor, and the correct spacing for the seats.

Will you kindly make some suggestions as to the color scheme to follow in the interior decoration, and in the lobby and front as well? I shall eagerly look forward to your reply, and shall greatly appreciate any suggestions that you may make.—L. H. B.

The Answer:

BEGINNING WITH the front of your theatre I suggest that the ticket booth be placed in the center with a double door on each side. Place the front of the ticket booth flush with face of building and set the doors back flush with back of booth so that they will not extend beyond front of building when open. Place the projection room in center of lobby with doors on each side, forming a small foyer at the beginning of each aisle, front wall of projection room to be flush with 2-foot offset in the left wall, 25 feet from front wall. If the projection room is 10 feet deep, the lobby will then have a depth of 11 feet, 6 inches. Raise projection room floor as high as possible so that the lower projection beam will have at least a 6-foot clearance above floor at the back of the first row of seats. Inasmuch as the ceiling height is only 14 feet, it will be impossible to place this room above lobby where it really belongs.

There are now 100 feet left for auditorium and stage. A 12-foot stage will be large enough for your requirements, and if you allow 14 feet for space between apron and front row of seats, there will be enough room left to accommodate 29 rows of seats. Arrange the seats across the width of the auditorium in a center bank of 11 seats, with an aisle on each side, making a total seating capacity of 319 seats.

For the slope of the floor I suggest that the first six rows of seats near the stage be placed on a level. From that point on to the projection room a slope of from 4 feet, 6 inches to 5 feet will be sufficient. Since there is no floor in the rear part of the building you may be able to excavate quite a little to bring the lower part of the floor down as far as possible.

For the proper spacing of seats use the minimum width of 20 inches from center to center, and the minimum of 30 inches from back to back.

It is impossible for me to suggest a color scheme not knowing what design or treatment you intend to employ. You should therefore consult a decorator.

The Question

I AM PLANNING on building a new theatre on a lot 43x160 feet, stadium type, theatre seating about 625, with a small shop in front. Would you advise me if this can be heated with a hot air furnace and blower system one used for cooling the theatre. Also please advise me if it is necessary to build the full 160-foot depth.—A.J.S.

The Answer

IT WILL NOT be necessary to utilize the full length of the lot to build a stadium type theatre with a seating capacity of 625. If you are satisfied with a stage 15 feet deep, the total length of the building will be 130 feet. Such a theatre can be heated very satisfactorily with hot air furnace, but I advise you to install a small hot water boiler next to the furnace to take care of heating shop, lobby, foyer, women's and men's rooms, office and projection room. This will reduce the cost of installation considerably, because it will eliminate a great amount of galvanized iron work for hot air ducts and returns, especially if the furnace room is located under the stage, as there will be required only two short ducts to connect air outlets at each side of stage.

I also recommend that you install a furnace with air conditioning unit connected. This will give clean, fresh heated air in winter, and in summer it will cool the theatre. It also will keep the interior clean, the blown-in air being 90% pure.

As far as designs for such a theatre are concerned, my best advice to you is to consult a theatre architect.

The Question

I HAVE A lot 24 feet, 6 inches wide by 150 feet deep and want to construct a new theatre of 500 seats. I realize this lot is too narrow, but I have tried for two years to find a wider lot in a suitable location and am unable to do so.

I want a balcony so that I can take care of the price range, but 120 to 150 seats are all that I need in it. What is the lowest ceiling height I can use, and please offer some tangible ideas as to lobby arrangement, balcony, stage, etc.—W.L.B.

The Answer

WHILE THE WIDTH of your lot is rather narrow, its size is large enough for a balcony type theatre with a seating capacity of 500. If you figure the seating capacity of the balcony at 150 there will be ample space on the lower floor to accommodate 350 seats. It will be possible to place ten seats in a row with a wall aisle at each side, across the width of the auditorium. If you allow 15 feet for Immediately upon entering the theatre patrons enjoy the comfortable vision which High Intensity projection permits in the large downtown theatres.

The Alternating Current High Intensity Arc now offers this same advantage to the smaller theatre.

the depth of the stage, 15 feet for space between first row of seats and stage apron, 8 feet for foyer, 15 feet for lobby, 3 feet for outside vestibule, and 3 feet for wall thickness, making a total of 59 feet, there will be enough space left for 36 rows of seats, or a minimum seating capacity of 360.

It will take 15 rows of seats for balcony. The minimum ceiling height will be as follows: 9 feet from high point of auditorium floor to soffit of balcony, 10 feet from lower part of balcony to top of last row, and 9 feet from this point to ceiling, making a total ceiling height of 28 feet at the high point of the auditorium floor.

There will be enough space between ceiling of lobby and floor of projection room to provide for a mezzanine floor, on which could be placed the women's and men's rest rooms and manager's office, also storage room. I suggest that the full width of the building be used for lobby and stairways to mezzanine, and that you place the ticket office in the center of the front with the entrance doors on each side.

matter, may be included under this heading. For these elements, space restrictions are pretty rigid—that is, they are set in paragraphs of a certain predetermined width, each line of which has to be of exactly that width (with rare and rather freakish exceptions). Thus only a limited number of characters is permissible to any one text unit, and the advertiser can convey his message in only a restricted number of words. All this seems rather obvious, but it is really common for copy to come to a printer in such quantity that it could not possibly be set in a readable size within the space available; hence printers' sarcastic references to "rubber type," which would be necessary if the copy were to be squeezed into the available space. The trouble is, type is made of metal.

COMPOSITION FACTORS

Thus adjustments are necessary between the copy and the type. Initially, one has a message that, in display and text, will require at least so much space with certain allocations in the layout. This forms the key by which the type space is determined at the outset. After this, the space itself imposes the restrictions indicated above on the number of characters in a display line, the number of words in a unit of text. Then in dealing with these problems, it should also be remembered that:

1. The smaller the size of the type, the shorter the line should be to attain readability. Ten-point type, in most faces large enough for text to be read easily, should not be set in a measure greater than 24 ems, and 18 ems is a preferable limit. In the display sizes, from 18-point up, the maximum width of proper line can be accordingly greater.

2. The greater the depth of a paragraph or block of type, the wider should be the measure if readability and good appearance are to be attained. Imagine, for example, 100 words set in 24-point on a 12-em measure!

3. Extremely narrow measures look best and probably are also most easily read if set in faces of narrow characters. That is to say, condensed faces, or their approximate equivalent, are better for measures under 10 ems than faces with distinctly broad characters.

4. Letter-spacing (placing extra space between each character) must be accounted for in computing the number of characters or words possible. Letter-spacing is not intended for large units, and as a rule, it should be restricted to words or lines set entirely in capitals (preferable roman, rather than italic).

5. Leading (placing extra space between lines) should be accounted for in computing the amount of copy permissible, since the number of lines possible is accordingly reduced. In general, lightface type does not really need leading, boldface type in all but the narrowest measures, is usually the better for it. Some faces, those with long descenders and ascenders, actually look slightly leaded even when they are not. But others, including lightface, appear squeezed in the vertical direction when set on a measure that is very wide. Type can be ordered composed with leading. To order 12-point type to be set on 14-point slugs means single leading (2 points to each lead). Otherwise leads can be inserted between the lines when the advertisement is being made up.

In ordering composition of main headings and subheads the printer may be instructed to set each line according to a specific measure and indentation, or he may be referred to the layout, where the copy involved is "roughed in" as wanted. The latter method is probably best for the main headings.

Text may be indicated in the layout merely by the outlining of the space to be occupied, such space being marked by a letter of the alphabet or numeral, and the copy being correspondingly designated. Copy instructions should be as explicit as possible, and even though the block of type is pretty clearly indicated, any paragraph provisions, in addition to the type instructions, should be specified in the copy. The usual paragraph forms are as follows:

This is a regularly indented paragraph, the first line being indented 1 pica (em), the rest following full measure. If this paragraph were of considerably wider measure, a proportionately greater indention of the first line would be in order.

This paragraph is set in a style known as a hanging indention, or hanger. The form has special uses, particularly for copy to be set off from paragraphs above and below.

This style of paragraph is called an inverted pyramid, or bank.
It is useful for subheads and similar matter.

Sometimes paragraphs are set flush—no indention of any kind. The printer should be ordered to set the copy flush, otherwise he will assume that the regular paragraph style is wanted; i. e., 1-pica indention of the first line. When there is more than one paragraph set flush, the paragraphs are separated by space. Occasionally conditions suggest that there be no separation, and that instead a paragraph sign (¶) be inserted where the new paragraph would normally begin.

When a paragraph is to begin with an initial (first letter of first word a large capital letter of the same face as the text is set in, or of a harmonizing face), this should be indicated in copy instructions. The size of the letter may be indicated by its pointage or by the number of lines that will have to be indented in order to provide space for it (two-line initial, three-line, etc.). Sometimes, however, one wants an initial to rest on the body of the first line and extend above the paragraph. In such a case, its size should be indicated in points. In some faces, an initial looks better when set on one line and extending above the paragraph (for example, Bodoni). The sunk-in initial, however, is the commonest.

COMPUTING TYPE LINES

THERE ARE systems galore for telling the copy writer how many words he can write to go into a certain space at a certain pointage in a certain face, and similarly the conditions necessary for a specific amount of copy that is already prepared can be determined by these little "ready-reckoners." Type manufacturers can supply them, anybody can make them if he wants to bother. But more necessary is a specimen line of the font to be used, and surely no one working with type will be without a catalog of the faces he commonly employs. With a specimen at hand, all that is needed is a minute or two of time and the ability to count.

In computing the amount of copy or space required, or the pointage that will take the copy in the space set aside for it—in short, measuring type—a distinction is usually made between display matter (the larger sizes of type set in one or only a few lines) and text. For the former, a count of characters is necessary, for they are relatively large. Text matter can be computed by words.

Display example: Copy for line is supplied as follows: Another Screen Masterpiece. The measure to be filled is 21 ems, the type to be used Caslon Old Face. Now each character is counted as one, except M's and W's, which count one-and-a-half; and I's, both capital and lower case, and lower case L's, which count as half-characters. Our line is to be set in capitals. It therefore has 26 characters. Look at your specimen sheet on Caslon Old Face. A glance will tell you that one or the other of two certain sizes will take the copy in the measure established. Lay a pica rule on one of these specimen capital lines and count 26 characters. If the count runs more or less than 21 ems, try the other. This is not as much of a hit-or-miss method as it sounds. The second probable size will be the proper one even if the first isn't in nine out of ten instances. Similarly you can determine how many characters will be needed in the copy if the type size and face, and the measure has been established, or what the measure must be if the type and copy have been determined.

Text examples: The copy is supplied, containing 100 words, as you find by counting the number of words in several lines to get an average, then by counting the total number of lines and multiplying. The width of the available type space is 15 ems, and you would like to have the text extend approximately 20 picas deep. Look at your type specimens in the face you would prefer to use. A glance will indicate about the size that will be readable, look well and take the copy.

The latter, however, must be determined definitely. Count the characters in a line, including the spaces between words. Therefore lay your pica rule on a likely-looking line and count the characters contained in 15 ems. Your count is 32. Now the average number of letters in English words is six. Six goes into 32 a little over five times, so the average number of words to the line is approximately five. The copy contains 100 words. Five goes into 100 twenty times. Now the size we have been counting is 10-point. Twenty times ten is 200 points. You know, of course, that there are 12 points in a pica. Divide 200 by 12, which gives you approximately 17 picas, which is the depth of the block of text matter if you use the 10-point size without leading. Quite probably in this case you would choose the 10-point size, setting on 12 point slugs if machine composition, or otherwise single-leading, which would make your copy extend to the depth wanted. Or you might decide on 12-point, set solid.

The word-count method, of course, is not really accurate, for there are too many variables in both lengths of words and widths of type characters. But in all except extremely small amounts of copy, the counting of words, rather than characters, will probably suffice for the theatre advertiser.

Law Affecting Advertising Methods

vertising matter of any kind whatsoever, or to distribute handbills or other advertising matter at houses, stores or places of business." In holding the ordinance void, the court said:

"There is no express grant of power to a city which enables it to pass an ordinance prohibiting a person from handing out a circular, card, picture, or advertising matter of any description whatsoever, in or upon its public streets or sidewalks. . . . The handing out on a public street, sidewalk, or public place of a 'circular, dodger, handbills, pamphlet, card, picture, or any advertising matter of any kind whatsoever,' is not, of itself, any offense. . . . It is true that if this ordinance is to be justified under the general powers granted to a municipality wherein the city is given power to regulate the use of its streets, the test of reasonableness must be applied. . . . The ordinance is not a reasonable exercise of its police powers. Its strict enforcement would unreasonably hamper persons in the conduct of their affairs."

CASE

Also, in the leading case of People v. Armstrong (41 N. W. 275, Detroit, Mich.), a person had been convicted of passing out cards to people on the sidewalk. In holding the ordinance unreasonable and void, the Supreme Court said:

DECISION

"What direction or restraint is required for the public good in the mere act of giving away an advertising card or handbill? This part of the ordinance is not aimed at the littering up of the streets, or to the frightening of horses, but the offense is made complete in itself by the mere act of distributing or giving away of these enumerated articles."

Nevertheless, a theatre operator is liable for "littering the streets" if the persons to whom his circulars are handed or passed drop them in quantities in the streets.

LEGAL RULES AFFECTING SIGNS

NUMEROUS PITFALLS await theatre owners and operators involving advertising signs, the most frequent of which involve lease and sale contracts.

CASE

For instance, I have before me a letter from an unfortunate theatre operator who recently was held liable by a higher court for a large amount due on an electric sign rental contract which he states he never signed. The facts of this litigation is that a few days after the operator had purchased the theatre, the seller informed him that he owed $260 on the electric sign which was attached to the theatre building. Without requiring further proof of the ownership of the sign, he gave his check to the seller for $260 believing that he was purchasing the sign.

Some time later, much to his surprise, he was informed by the manufacturer of the sign that the seller of the theatre had signed a four-year contract to pay a monthly rental of $15 for the sign, and that when he had purchased the theatre he had signed a contract to continue the monthly payment for the balance of the term of the contract, which still had three and one-half years duration.

After a month had expired, without the theatre owner paying the monthly rental, the sign company filed suit against him to recover immediately the full amount equal to $15 a month for three and one-half years.

During the trial the theatre owner testified that he did not remember signing the contract and he was not informed by either the seller of the theatre or the sign company that the electric sign was rented. In fact, he introduced evidence to show that he gave the original owner of the theatre a check for $260 believing that he was purchasing the sign.

DECISION

However, notwithstanding these facts, he was held liable for immediate payment to the sign company for the full amount of the rental charge, amounting to approximately $630.

Still another example of negligence on the part of a theatre owner to fulfill the terms of a signed contract is found in the leading case of Electric Sign Company v. Campbell (168 Ill. App. 64, Chicago, Ill.).

CASE

Here it was shown that a proprietor entered into a contract with a sign company by which he agreed to make a cash payment and the balance in six monthly installments. The contract further provided that if the buyer failed to make any payment when due, that all of the remaining installments should at once become due and payable.

The ordinance of the city provides that the owner of an electric sign shall pay the city an annual inspection fee, and that after a permit to erect the sign has been issued the buyer shall notify the city electrician who shall inspect the same. If the sign is erected in accordance with the ordinance the purchaser is authorized in writing by the city to operate and maintain the sign for one year.

However, when the proprietor and the salesman for the sign company entered into the contract the salesman failed to impart information relative to the city law requiring yearly inspections of the sign and verbally promised that the total cost to the buyer would be $70 including erection of the sign and making the electrical connections.

The sign company erected the sign and connected it with electric current, but did not connect it through the meter. Soon thereafter the light company disconnected the current from the sign because the inspection fees had not been paid and then discovered that the sign was not connected with the meter.

The purchaser refused to pay the sign company the balance due after the first payment contending that the latter had breached its contract in failing to pay the city inspection fees and make the proper connection with the current, in accordance with the salesman's verbal agreement.

DECISION

However, the court held the purchaser liable for immediate payment of the balance due the sign company, since the written contract simply stated that the sign company agreed to erect the sign, without specifying anything regarding making the electric connections.

Therefore, it is important that theatre operators investigate state and city laws, regarding installations of electric signs, before making contracts of purchase. This is necessary because usually the courts will not consider testimony relative to verbal agreements, if such verbal statements contradict the terms of the written contract.

KEEP SIGNS WITHIN CURB LINE

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that although a theatre owner may have obtained a permit from municipal officials to make building improvements or install an electric sign, this fact is immaterial in litigation where the theatre owner has filed suit to recover damages from an individual who injured the sign. The controlling testimony in a litigation of this nature is: Did the person negligently effect the damage?

For example, in Theatres Company v. American Railway Express Company (166 N. E. 557, Boston, Mass.), it was disclosed that a theatre owner filed suit against a motor-truck owner to recover damages resulting from the unusually high truck body knocking down an expensive electric sign attached to theatre building.

Testimony was introduced which proved that the marquee hung from the building suspended at its outer end by chains fastened to the wall, and it extended over the sidewalk to within three inches of the perpendicular plane of the outer edge of the curb. The sign damaged by the truck was upon the marquee and extended eight inches further, and thus projected five inches beyond the line of the curb.

The theatre owner argued that since he had obtained a license to attach the sign in this manner, the owner of the truck which knocked it down was liable. However, the court held the theatre owner not entitled to recover damages, saying:

"There is nothing in this evidence, which, as matter of law, required a finding of negligence of the driver. If he had known that the marquee with its signs projected into the traveled way, it might well be thought that he was not negligent in failing to observe his exact position."

immense value to the manager to know, and by this method see, this habit pattern.

Further examination will be convincing that outstanding stars in pictures affect these curves; one may attract the type of persons who go to theatres early, while others attract the sophisticates who are "late comers." Learning and observing all of these things gradually develops the manager to sense the effect of coming events, both in and outside of the theatre, and to make plans accordingly. Only too often managers think that they can remember all of the details that develop throughout day in and day out operation of a theatre, only to wake up suddenly when it's too late and realize that they have missed a chance to bring more money into the box office. Some men have remarkable memories, some have remarkably analytical minds, but such men are few and far between. Most of us need some such instrument as these daily business graphs to keep us constantly working at the weak spots in our operations.

Changes come about slowly, so slowly that some sort of visual representation is necessary to keep the trend of such changes constantly before us. Any function that constantly varies can be recorded in a chart or graph, and from such chart or graph there is a basis for advancing an opinion and making plans in advance for coming events.

Other lines of commercial enterprise make beneficial use of this form of recording happenings, events or facts. Our industry is a legitimate business, it is time to remove some of the guesswork. There have been too many wrong guesses during the past few years. We are in an era of change that is going to supplant old haphazard methods by more systematic, reliable and orderly methods.

Don't get the idea that this is an endeavor to intellectualize theatre operation theoretically—there must always be that theatrical instinct which is called "showmanship." But method in analyzing theatre operations is practical. It has been so proved in actual usage. The method here described requires about 20 minutes each day, and it will prove itself of practical value to you.

UP AND AT 'EM!

WHILE the motion picture industry is concerning itself with adherence to the Production Code it need not in too contrite a spirit relax a proper vigilance against the continued and more recently inflamed activities of the political censorship bodies of the various cities and states.

It was more than certain, with the abundant discussions in the daily press of the Legion of Decency movement and related affairs, that the censorship boards of the land should become blushingly self-conscious.

The intimation that these censorships, many of the most diligent of them in the very centers where the Legion of Decency has reached greatest activity, are not entirely effective appears to have been deduced by the censors. They now tend to lay about them in a fevered haste to make a show of action if not efficiency. The motion picture therefore is just now considerably more in peril from the garbling amateur film editors of the censors' boards than normally.

The currently advertised failure of censorship to achieve its avowed and promised ends is in truth a weapon delivered into the hands of the industry.

HORSEFEATHERS

FOR some years we have treasured as the most priceless whimsy of the world of the motion picture a discovery on that golden afternoon in the old Paramount studio at Long Island City when we found an imported director who could do nothing unless his pet pig, pink and beribboned, was near by. Whether the pig was totem or mascot could not be discovered. But the pig was there, attended by his own valet, when pictures were to be made.

Now, however, comes a tale from the interior of newspaperdom that seems almost as good, if not indeed better. It is solemnly related by sources ordinarily deemed reliable, that a certain midwestern publisher and editor, who has these several years been increasing in belligerency and eccentricity, has created a strange shrine to the sport of polo in the secret heights of his great tower. There have been installed, so the report runs, a synthetic horse, a simulated turf and a driving field with a net to catch the balls which the publisher wallops about between conferences on the state of the nation.

We are informed, most plausibly, that the reporter wag who added a shovelful of aromatic realism, accurately placed and neatly mounded, is no longer with the paper.

"RESEARCH" COUNCIL

Maybe a want ad would do it — something like this:

WANTED A PRESIDENT—Big publicity and uplift movement has magnificent opening at the top for person of prominence, sole requirement is name of distinction. Salary will never be an object, but handsome compensation in free publicity is available. No knowledge of any subject is required. Speeches, announcements and opinions all to be supplied, in mimeograph form. Ability to take orders and make page one of daily press important. Job carries own kudos, prior incumbents two of our best university presidents and a society-millionairess. Worthy cause of movement keeping diligent staff employed. Fund raising ability would be welcomed. Reply on crested stationery and handwritten letter addressed to W.H.S. care MPRC.

This week what survives of the Motion Picture Research Council is addressed at the blithe expedient of seeking to enlist in its alleged scholarly endeavors in behalf of the public and the screen the school teachers of the nation, through an approach to the National Education Association in Washington.

This sounds like a big movement.

It would be a big movement if the educators of the nation were really responsive to any such pressures. But there is neither any such solidarity of the teachers as an organized profession, nor any such tremendous community and unity of interest among them as will make them for the purposes of the crusading Dr. William H. Short an adequate substitute for the public voting power of the Legion of Decency which has set in quest of this expedient.

There is no proper issue between the schools and the screen.

There is, however, something of an opportunity for those who think out-of-focus, or argue that way without conscience, to confuse again the differences between the functions of the show business and the school system on the flimsy argument that "pictures can be educational so they all ought to be."

The teachers have problems of their own. They are not motion picture problems.

IF the researchers and uplifters really want to do something about keeping this country from going to hell in a hack, let us direct their attention to the current eruption of the female fashion of barefeet in sandals with toe nails tinted to match finger nails. Tomato and fire engine red are the fashionable colors along Madison avenue and the shore places this week. And we used to deplore Hollywood!

SAMARITANISM

Finding itself before the New York Grievance Board as an independent exhibitor asked to have a seven-day clearance lifted, Loew's Inc., has nationally decided to discontinue the good samaritan role, and hereafter will cease its voluntary waivers of protection, heretofore generously granted to independent exhibitors to help them over difficult spots, though it amounted to dropping its own legitimate protection in favor of smaller competition. . . .

KENTUCKY TAX

To take care of Kentucky's three per cent sales tax, one cent has been added to each adult admission in the state, with no levy on children's admissions. Since collection of an exact three per cent revenue would be difficult, the one cent idea was hit upon, approved by the state tax commission. . . .

CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Vancouver, in Canada, is awaiting materialization of the plan announced by Gaston Glass, who says he represents Joseph I. Schnitzer, to produce six to 18 pictures annually in Canada under the quota law. Mr. Glass declares he has contracts from a major company for distribution. A building, suitable for sound stages, is Mr. Glass's initial object. . . .

ALLIED UNIT

Organization of the Allied Theatre Owners of New York State was furthered at a Buffalo meeting last week, when Sidney Samuelson, national Allied president, addressed 40 independent theatremen. Said he: "The exhibitor must demand clean pictures for two reasons, financial and good citizenship. He has a civic responsibility to give (his patrons) decent shows." . . .

JUDGMENTS AWARDED

As a result of the printing patents infringement case initiated recently by Consolidated Film Industries against the United States Cinema Corporation, New York supreme court Justice Collins last week awarded Consolidated a judgment of $50,796. . . .

A NEW "MIKE"

Its object being perfection of a new "mike" which would combine greatest acoustic, recording efficiency in smallest compass, the MGM sound department made hundreds of tests, finally developed a "bullet mike," which, easily manipulated, may be packed in a space three inches wide by 11 long. . . .

FILM AS MEDIA

Using the motion picture as the chief selling medium at Chicago World's Fair exhibits are two transportation lines, two manufacturing companies, with six subjects in exhibition. The companies, their films, all made by Castle Films: New York Central, "Flight of the Century"; Rock Island Lines, "Trail of the Golden State Limited," "Mile High Colorado"; Elgin, "Time," "Time from the Stars"; General Motors, "Modern Velvet." . . .

RADIO PREFERENCES

Perhaps of interest to motion picture producers is the result of a nationwide poll of radio listeners conducted by Radio Guide, to ascertain preference. The winners: stars, Joe Penner, Bing Crosby; programs, Fleischmann, Show Boat, Chase and Sanborn; orchestras, Wayne King, Guy Lombardo, Ben Bernie; teams, Amos and Andy, Burns and Allen, Myrt and Marge. . . .

SCHULBERG STATUS

In New York last week presumably to discuss with Erpi a new producing deal, B. P. Schulberg, with four still to make, gave indications he will not renew his Paramount contract. In Hollywood reports continued current that he may sign with RKO Radio for a series of features. . . .

INDEPENDENT SPLIT

In the formation in California of a new independent theatre organization south of San Bernardino county by allies of Fox West Coast, evidence is seen of a split in the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California. Filed were paper for the Theatre Owners Association of Southern California, with Sherill Cohen, Elaine Waldman and G. A. Metzger as directors. Its members will probably be asked to resign from the ITOA. . . .

SANDWICH THEATRE

Still battling to consolidate its right to run Sunday shows in connection with sandwich sales and via a restaurant license, the Orpheum, Memphis, Tenn., won an initial victory as Chancellor Bejach granted an injunction, restraining the city from interfering with the theatre pending disposition. The court shortly will render a declaratory judgment on the issue. . . .

THEATRE PLAN DROPPED

Since MGM apparently has concluded a satisfactory deal in New York with Robert McNeill, president of United California Theatres and associated companies, on the new MGM lineup, the plans of Loew to build theatres in northern California, especially subsequent runs in San Francisco residential districts, have been abandoned, according to reports. . . .

PROJECTIONISTS

Riding further into difficulty, 1,000 members of Local 306, New York projectionists' union, have asked President Harry Sherman to resign. Another meeting this week will further discuss that request and another to drop his salary drastically. Justice James A. Dunne, supreme court, will decide "on legal merits" whether the district attorney's office may keep the records of 306 and Empire State, seized last week for grand jury investigation. . . .

MPTOA ASKS PENALTIES FOR DUALS; COCHRANE CALLS AGITATION "SELFISH"

THE air being full of this and that about The Code and the enduring issue of Double Billing, MOTION PICTURE HERALD has deemed it a service to the industry and perhaps a clarification of some of the muddy thinking of the day, to ask Mr. Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal Pictures Corporation and a member of the Code Authority, to contribute an exposition of the subject and its current status, legal and political, from his own point of view. Mr. Cochrane's many years of honorable service of the industry and his high personal repute make him an institutional authority quite independent of his several important official titles and connections. —TERRY RAMSAYE

By ROBERT H. COCHRANE

The most amazing phase of the quarrel about double features is the fact that most of the men who are trying to stop dual featuring are the very men who have claimed that they were oppressed by others in the past. In other words, exhibitors who have violently objected to submitting to orders from others are now trying to impose restrictions upon other exhibitors.

The "poor exhibitor" (socalled) is trying to jam his own views down the throat of the poorer exhibitor!

As a member of the Code Authority, I have watched the double feature squabble with a great deal of astonishment.

I have seen organized attempts to stop double-featuring in Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City, Chicago and other points, and in each case, apparently, the movement was organized by exhibitors. In some cases the movement is supported by distributors who are themselves, in their own theatres, using double features.

Principle seems to have been cast to the winds. Exhibitors who have been oppressed in the past in various ways, now seem obsessed with the desire to oppress other exhibitors. Men who make their living out of stirring up trouble by telling certain exhibitors that they are oppressed are now trying to oppress other exhibitors.

I have been in this business for 28 years. In all that time I have always noted that the man in power always abused his power, whether he was a producer, a distributor or an exhibitor. For that reason, nothing should surprise me. Yet I confess I am perfectly aghast at the attitude many men have taken on the double feature matter.

To me, it seems plain that each theatre's policy is purely and simply the affair of that theatre, as long as it does not wreck the business.

If I owned a theatre which could not make a profit on single features but could get out of the red by showing double features, I would run double features and fight the whole world if it tried to stop me.

Yet now I see theatre groups trying to put other theatre groups out of business, out of nothing but pure selfishness and absolute lack of consideration of the other fellow's problem.

The Universal company has always refused to be swayed by rotten principles. I do not know whether single or double features are best for Universal's personal welfare; but I do recognize the fact that we are vitally interested in the welfare of each individual theatre with which we transact business, and I know from experience that what is one man's food is another man's poison in this peculiar business of ours.

So, to make the record clear, I reiterate Mr. Laemmle's declaration of policy

Urging drastic local campaigns and severe penalities in new clearance schedules for theatres "guilty" of double featuring, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is now calling upon its members to do everything in their power to put an end to a "vicious and unfair practice."

Conceding that control of the practice is difficult, and citing lack of cooperation by the large distributors, the MPTOA, through a bulletin, urged exhibitors to support local clearance and zoning boards' actions in imposing penalties.

In New York a severe denunciation of the effort to outlaw dual programs was voiced by Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal Pictures and an unaffiliated distributor member of the Code Authority. Mr. Cochrane, upon the invitation of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, expressed an opinion of the agitation to curb doubles in which he vigorously denounced the efforts now being expended in the field to use the machinery of the motion picture code for "selfish purposes" in penalizing theatres using dual programs.

Questions Exhibitors' Motives

Mr. Cochrane questioned the motives of exhibitors now campaigning for abolition of duals and scored Local Clearance Boards for imposing penalties in new clearance schedules against double bill theatres. Such action by these boards is unjustified, Mr. Cochrane charged, because "there is not one word in the code which gives any local board the right" to inflict such penalties.

Some of the affiliated distributors who are now attempting to force an end to double policies are themselves, in their own theatres, using the system, he said. Mr. Cochrane's remarks in full appear on this page.

MPTOA Demands Elimination

"Theatres playing single feature programs clearly should be protected against competing theatres who show the same picture at or near the same time on a double feature program," the MPTOA said. "If double features are to be permitted in the town, surely it is only reasonable to require those theatres to follow the theatres playing single features. Local exhibitor associations should strongly and aggressively advocate such zoning provisions, which have been sucessfully incorporated into several zoning plans already."

Chicago exhibitors have abolished double featuring and business improvement is reported, according to the MPTOA. Los Angeles, Dallas, Kansas City, Philadelphia, Milwaukee and other localities were reported to be making headway. Cleveland exhibitors reached a unanimous agreement barring the on the double feature question when I say that we believe we can serve our own best interest by serving the best interest of the major part of our customers.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the total business done in twelve key cities during the ten weeks period from April 21 to June 23, 1934, with the receipts from the same cities during the corresponding period in 1933. The cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco.

COCHRANE ON DOUBLE FEATURES

Some of the local clearance and zoning boards acting under the NRA are trying to penalize the theatre which uses double features. There is not one word in the NRA Code which gives any local clearance and zoning board the right to do this. We fought this out in Washington last fall for a whole month with the result that the Code does not contain one word which justifies action against theatres which wish to use double features. The only inference which can be drawn from this is the inference that each theatre has a right to run its own affairs for its own good, as long as it does not wreck the business of a greater number of theatres.

As a member of the Code Authority, I shall always vote that double features are a matter of individual policy for each theatre, always provided that the good of the greatest number is always taken into consideration.

Double Bill Issue Is Still Unsettled

practice, but the situation there has since become complicated.

"In spite of selfish and short-sighted opposition, and betrayal by professional exhibitor organizations, this form of cut throat competition is on its way out," the MPTOA bulletin said.

In Chicago, an unusual case filed before the Local Grievance Board last week was that of George Gehring of the Rosewood, seeking to force major distributors to sell him on a double feature policy and asking the local board to decide whether collusion had been practiced by the distributors.

Since all major distributors are made defendants to the complaint, disposition of the case would require that they sit in judgment on an action directed against themselves, so the matter was transmitted directly to the Code Authority in New York without local board action.

At Cleveland, since the signing of the agreement by exhibitors several weeks ago to eliminate double features, with the effective date set for July 8, several theatres which had been closed for a long period of time have been taken over by other operators and they are opening these houses on a double bill policy. The first is the Temple in Cleveland, now operated by Victor Wolcott with ten cents admission.

The drastic conditions and provisions contained in the initial clearance and zoning schedules for the Kansas City territory, which were designed to eliminate or sharply restrict duals, premiums, rebates and similar price reducing practices, were eliminated from the new clearance schedule set up by the local board late last week. The new plan makes no mention of trade practices which the initial schedule sought to regulate. Neither does it impose shorter protection for houses using stage shows.

Although the Code Authority in New York last week was reported to have voted evenly on the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedule, the general opinion on the Coast is that double features will not be done away with. There is a clause in the local clearance schedule which provides a penalty of 182 days for theatres maintaining a dual policy. Objections were raised in the sector by two distributors and independent exhibitors. In addition to the 182 days' penalty, twin bill houses lose all right to priority of run.

The proposed clearance schedule for Milwaukee provides that any theatre showing dual bills at 35 cents evenings will get film on the basis of one-half of the regular evening admission, and a subsequent run single feature theatre shall have pictures made available to it in its price classification.

Consolidated Seen As Influential in Finances of RKO

It is considered highly probable that Consolidated Film Industries may wield an influential voting stock power in RKO as a result of its acquisition of $1,825,208 of six per cent gold notes of RKO, which are secured by practically all of the stock owned by RKO in its directly and indirectly owned subsidiaries.

The gold notes were acquired by Consolidated from Chemical Bank and Trust Company and Commercial Investment Trust. Their original maturities were January 1 and July 1, 1933, but under an agreement between RKO and the banks early in 1933, extensions were obtained so that the first of the notes, in the amount of $25,208, plus interest, did not mature until July 1, 1934. The balance falls due August 1 and the first of each succeeding month through January 1, 1935, in the amount of $300,000. The July 1 maturity of $25,208 is being paid by RKO. Indications are, however, that negotiations looking to extension of the August 1 and subsequent maturities will be begun soon.

Holds Voting Power

Voting of the RKO stocks pledged as collateral securing the notes may be exercised by Consolidated in certain contingencies. Voting of the stock for the election of RKO directors, however, may be exercised only as directed by RCA. On all other matters the stock may be voted as directed by a committee of three, two to be named by H. J. Yates, president of Consolidated, and the third by David Sarnoff, RCA president. In the absence of directions from this committee the stock may be voted in the "uncontrolled discretion" of Consolidated.

Negatives as Security

Dividends or any other proceeds paid on the RKO subsidiaries' stock and notes, pledged as collateral on the gold notes held by Consolidated, are to be employed for the operation of a revolving credit fund out of which new loans are to be made to the operating subsidiaries of RKO for working capital and current requirements. These new loans, according to the agreement, are to be secured in the case of Radio Pictures by chattel mortgages on completed films, a new film to be pledged as an old one becomes obsolete. Consolidated has the right to deduct interest on the notes from this revolving fund, however.

The pledging of the negatives was objected to by RKO creditors over a period of months but the plan eventually received the approval of the United States circuit court of appeals in New York, and the creditor objections were halted. During the court attacks on the plan, attorneys for the RKO receivers declared that if the agreement was set aside the collateral securing the notes, which represents "substantially all of the assets of RKO," could be sold by the note-holders and might result in putting RKO out of existence as a going concern.

ALL-TIME BEST SELLERS: FILMS, PLAYS, BOOKS SONGS AND RADIO

Records Show Close Relationships of All Amusement Industries

On this and the following pages are pre-printed one of the special features of the 1934-1935 Almanac, now on the presses.

By FRED AYER

The vital relationship among all the amusement arts and industries—the motion picture, the legitimate theatre, the book publisher, radio and the music world—becomes increasingly apparent through comparison of "best sellers" for all time.

Based upon record sales of best selling novels, the longest runs of legitimate plays in New York and on the road, the world gross rentals of the industry's outstanding motion pictures, the record sales of popular songs and the most popular radio time, it is established that:

1. Forty-six best selling novels out of a list of 65 which sold 500,000 copies and over, have been made into motion pictures.
2. Twenty-three legitimate theatrical productions out of a list of 32 having 500 performances and over in New York City, have been made into motion pictures.
3. Twelve popular songs out of a list of more than 100 which sold 1,000,000 copies or more were motion picture and musical comedy songs. (This, considering that the depression and other competitive forces set in within a year and one-half after sound pictures came into existence, is generally conceded to be a high percentage.)
4. The gross rental winner of all time in the motion picture industry is "The Singing Fool," one of the first sound pictures, produced by Warner Brothers and with a world total of $5,000,000.
5. The record New York run for legitimate plays is credited to "Abie's Irish Rose," with 2,532 performances.
6. The legitimate roadshow record in the United States goes to Joseph Jefferson's production of "Rip Van Winkle," which he played for at least 50 years, averaging 40 weeks annually, for a total of approximately 16,000 performances. "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has played intermittently for about 40 years on the road, is said to have totaled nearly 15,000 performances.
7. The best selling popular song—a war-time number—is "Keep the Home Fires Burning," while "There's a Long, Long Trail" also is said to have sold approximately 3,000,000 copies.
8. The best selling novel is "In His Steps," published in 1899, with a record sale of 8,000,000 copies.
9. The most popular radio time is "Morning Devotions," heard daily on the NBC network, with 2,576 broadcasts.

Asterisk (*): silent picture

success of the industry's first all-talking motion picture, Warners' "The Jazz Singer"—hangs up the world all-time gross rental record with a total of approximately $5,000,000 paid into the company's coffers by theatres all over the world. The picture was released in October, 1928, and starred Al Jolson. Its domestic gross rentals are reputed to have approximated $3,500,000—the highest domestic figure ever recorded.

"The Jazz Singer" was the first all-talking film to be released, and while it was pre-eminently a financial success—chalking up about $3,500,000 in world rentals—its successor recorded not only over one-third more in rentals, but received far greater world acclaim as entertainment.

"Four Horsemen" Second

The second largest motion picture gross was earned by "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," produced approximately two years after the close of the World War by the old Metro company, by Richard A. Rowland. "The Four Horsemen" took in $4,500,000 in world gross rentals. It got the largest gross of the silent picture era.

Not only did this film break the record for silents, but it started a cycle of war pictures which was to run for nearly ten years. In this picture were starred the late Rudolph Valentino, then at the very height of his popularity, and Alice Terry. The book, by Vicente Belasco Ibanez, already had attained world success, and the film, coming at a time when a war-stricken world was beginning to emerge from the wreckage, was seen as the first real treatise on the futility of war by the millions who viewed it throughout the world.

It has long been the impression, both within and without the industry, that D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" was the biggest money maker in the history of the motion picture. Wild tales of $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 profits on the picture have come to be almost an accepted fact. Its gross rentals—profits before distribution and production costs—totaled approximately $3,500,000.

Possibly the basis for the stories of "Birth of a Nation's" enormous profits is the fact that in three years of roadshowing in the United States alone, it took in more than $10,000,000 at the box office. There also can be little doubt that the public paid more per capita to see the Griffith masterpiece than any motion picture ever made, the average admission price for the three-year roadshow approximating $1.

In point of gross rentals, "Ben-Hur," starring Ramon Novarro and Francis X. Bushman, follows "The Four Horsemen" with a total of $4,000,000. In eight months of roadshowing it brought box office receipts of $3,200,000.

Others Exceeding $3,500,000

In addition to "Birth of a Nation," other pictures with gross rentals totaling $3,500,000 are "The Big Parade," "The Covered Wagon" and "The Jazz Singer." "Cavalcade," released in 1933 by Fox, is expected to take in more than $3,500,000 by the time it has finished playing in the British Empire. To date (June 1, 1934), it is estimated "Calvacade" has grossed nearly $3,000,000 in rentals, nearly three-fourths of which is said to have come from Great Britain and the Dominions.

Roadshow figures on some of these outstanding films, in addition to those already mentioned, show that "The Big Parade" took in more than $4,500,000 at the box office in 12 months; "The Covered Wagon," $3,500,000 in nine months, and "Way Down East," another D. W. Griffith melodrama, with gross rentals totaling $2,000,000, exclusive of roadshowing, took in at the box office $2,225,000 in eight months on the road.

Of the 72 motion pictures listed herewith with grosses of more than $1,000,000, 37 of them, or slightly more than one-half, are silent pictures.

Fox leads the list with 17 pictures; the old Metro company and MGM combined have 10; Paramount, nine; First National (Associated), eight; United Artists, seven; Pathe, six; RKO, six; Warner, five; Universal, two, and Selig and Producers Distributing Corporation, one each.

Both "Little Women" and "Footlight Parade," despite their comparatively recent release, are included in the listing because of their proven earning potentialities. RKO officials expect "Little Women" to be the outstanding financial success of 1934. The figures on both of these pictures are estimated on the basis of past and remaining bookings, both in this country and abroad. The same thing is true of "Rolling Down to Rio," also an RKO picture.

Simple Plays Win Favor Among Amateur Theatres

Amateur theatres and players throughout the United States and Canada have long expressed their preference for simple plays like "The Patsy," according to Samuel French, Inc., of New York, the largest publisher of plays for amateur performing rights. Although no figures on the number of sold copies of outstanding favorites for this field were obtainable, the list indicates that such plays as "Jonesy," "Are You a Mason?" "Tommy," "Clarence" and "Seventeen," are the most popular with schools and juvenile dramatic societies.

The publishing house indicated that established Little Theatres and university dramatic clubs throughout the country lean more to the sophisticated drama of Broadway for their material, and, accordingly, does not list many of these plays among the most popular. In this category come plays like "Smilin' Thru," "Berkeley Square," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Cat and the Canary," and others.

Royalties to the Samuel French company run from $15 a performance up to $75, chiefly from amateurs not playing for profit.

Burroughs and Grey Are Favorites Today

The American reading public, which once bought 8,000,000 copies of a Kansas clergyman's imagined version of the second coming of Christ—"In His Steps"—has chosen Edgar Rice Burroughs and Zane Grey as its favorite living authors, though there are no final figures on the total sales of their various works.

The Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University recently reported that all of the Grey and Burroughs books sell 10,000 to 20,000 copies annually.

The Bible, with 14,526,438 full editions and 22,097,087 New Testaments sold in the past 50 years, is probably the only single book that has sold more than the 8,000,000 copies accredited to Dr. Charles Monroe Sheldon's "In His Steps," published in 1899.

Twain, Kipling and O. Henry

Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling and O. Henry are likely the most popular authors with the American public, in addition to Grey and Burroughs, in so far as total sales go.

Of "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," some 1,500,000 copies each have been sold in non-pirated editions in this country. Six million volumes of a single set of O. Henry have been disposed of in the last 25 years. A million volumes of one expensive set of Kipling have been sold since it first was put out in 1900, and another Kipling set, less dear, sells 100,000 to 150,000 volumes annually.

All three of these authors—Twain, Kipling and Henry—have been so much pirated, sold in so many different sets, and published by so many different firms that no exact estimate of the total number of volumes sold by each can be reached.

Despite the apparently phenomenal success of "In His Steps," the book sells only 700 or 800 copies a year now, according to Alexander Grosset, head of Grosset & Dunlap, greatest reprint publishing house in the country.

"Freckles" Comes Next

Following this book on the accompanying list of best selling novels comes Gene Stratton Porter's "Freckles," with 2,000,000 copies. Next in line is "Ben-Hur," with 1,950,000; "Girl of the Limberlost," 1,700,000; "The Harvester," 1,600,000 copies, both of the last-named by Mrs. Porter.

The list of best sellers as released recently by the Institute of Arts and Sciences did not include "Little Women," chiefly because its first world edition, published in 1869, sold little more than 250,000 copies. Since its first edition, however, the book has been averaging about 750,000 copies annually. There are now more than 14 non-copyright editions on the market.

Warner Plans Mystery Series

Warner plans production of a series of detective features based on the mystery stories by Erle Stanley Gardner, with Warren William in the role of Perry Mason, detective. The first, "The Case of the Howling Dog," is now in production.

"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE" LEADING PLAY

Set World Record for Continuous Showings

A comedy that was peddled to dozens of New York's most enterprising theatrical producers, only to be rejected by each of them until, in sheer desperation, its author, Mrs. Anne Nichols, borrowed a small sum of money and produced it herself, set the record for continuous performances of a legitimate play, not only in New York but for the world. The name of the play was "Abie's Irish Rose." The record number of stage performances accredited it in New York City was 2,532.

Mrs. Nichols is reputed to have realized personally in excess of $3,000,000 as a result of "Abie's" activities throughout the world. The play has been performed by every stock company in the United States and Canada. It has been translated into every known language.

Next on the list of record New York runs of 500 performances or over, comes "Lightnin'," which John Golden produced with the late Frank Bacon in the leading part. "Lightnin'" had 1,291 consecutive performances in New York.

Some idea of the actual length of these runs in months is indicated in the fact that with eight performances weekly—two matinees and six nights—it is possible for a play to chalk up no more than 416 performances annually—not counting benefits. Thus, "Abie" ran just over six years and "Lightnin'," just over three.

"The Bat" Comes Third

"The Bat," a mystery play, comes third on the list of 32 plays with more than 500 performances to their credit, with 878 consecutive performances.

Of the 32 plays, 23 were made into motion pictures, and of these, 10 were sound pictures.

Five hundred performances of a play in New York, London, Berlin or Paris always is considered an unusual run. A play generally is adjudged a success if it is able to register 250 performances, or a little more than six months. Therefore, in spite of the fact that it is necessary to set a limitation for the sake of comparison with the figures of other amusement enterprises presented herewith, it is obvious that certain plays like "Grand Hotel," with 444 consecutive performances, should receive due credit.

Other more recent plays coming in this category include "Once in a Lifetime," 401 performances; "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," 372; "Counsellor-at-Law," 293; "Reunion in Vienna," 280; "Private Lives," 248; "Another Language," 428; "Dinner at Eight," 243. Some of the recent musical hits include "Of Thee I Sing," with 478 performances; "The Cat and the Fiddle," 395; "Gay Divorce," 248; "Take a Chance," 246; Earl Carroll's (1931-32) "Vanities," 300; "The Band Wagon," 262, and "The Laugh Parade," 243.

Buy Showcraft Interest

John T. Bergen & Company, investment bankers, Harry Dahn and Jack Bergen, have purchased a half-interest in Showcraft Pictures, Inc. Adolph Pollak, president, and Emil K. Ellis own the other half. Mr. Pollak has left for Hollywood to set the first two of 18 features planned.

Ned Wayburn Forms New Film Producing Company

Ned Wayburn, noted New York stage and musical show producer, has formed a new film producing organization, to be known as the Ned Wayburn Picture Company, with offices and rehearsal studios at 625 Madison avenue, New York.

The company will serve as an adjunct to the Ned Wayburn Producing organization, which plans a musical revue, musical film shorts, a feature radio program and a legitimate play, in the fall. The picture company will produce features, shorts and novelty subjects.

Win Hollywood Trip

Miss Lise Pehrson and Niels Boel-Rasmussen, of Denmark, have been adjudged the winning couple in a dance contest held in 11 European cities, the prize being a trip to New York and Hollywood as guests of Joan Crawford, MGM star. The couple will be accompanied by Kay Holbech, Danish newspaperman.

Authors Fund Benefits By Plagiarism Settlement

The net proceeds of the recent settlement of the plagiarism suit of Richard Washburn Child against Paramount, will be donated to the Authors League Fund, according to Herbert McKennis, attorney for Mr. Child. Although the case was disposed of as without basis in plagiarism by the court, the settlement, between $2,000 and $3,000, preceded that disposition, the attorney declared.

The suit was brought by Mr. Child on the basis of his novel, "The Avenger," which, he contended, was plagiarized in the Paramount picture "One Sunday Afternoon," which in turn was taken from the play of the same title, written by James Hagan, also a defendant.

Toeplitz Announces First

Toeplitz Productions, recently formed in London, will produce "The Dictator" as its initial venture. The film will be a costume story concerned with Sweden in the 18th Century.

'Morning Devotions' Heard 2,576 Times

Seventeen radio programs have passed the 500-performance mark, an achievement comparable to the extraordinary run of "Abie's Irish Rose" on the New York stage.

The leading program, with 2,576 performances to its credit, is "Morning Devotions," heard six days weekly over the National Broadcasting Company's network. Second on the list is "Cheerio," also an NBC feature, with 2,400 broadcasts; National Farm & Home Hour, 1,706; Lady Next Door, 1,475, and Orphan Annie, 1,411, all on NBC.

For the Columbia network Ida Bailey Allen leads with 1,240 broadcasts, followed by Guy Lombardo's orchestra with 1,040.

Station WOR in Newark, N. J., has presented "Uncle Don" to radio audiences 1,900 times, and "The Moonbeams," 1,366.

Big Task in New Ideas

According to Orin E. Dunlap, Jr., writing in the New York Times, the broadcasters have discovered that their big task is not in performing, but in finding new ideas.

"Whenever an orator or an actor faced the microphone in the early days of broadcasting he wondered how he might collect enough fresh thoughts for more than one or two broadcasts," said Mr. Dunlap. "Delighted by the fact that on the lecture platform the same speech might be used repeatedly, he was stunned by the insatiable radio's insistence on something new at every performance. And it looked as if each performer, especially speakers, might pass from the air after a week or so. But it worked out differently."

John Royal, program director at NBC, believes that a radio serial program will enjoy a long run if it meets in some manner some psychological requirement felt by a large portion of the public.

"It may be the personality of the artist or the novelty of the presentation or the human appeal of the message, but, whatever the quality of its components, the broadcast hits the spot with the average man or woman," Mr. Royal said.

Twelve Requirements

A study of the long-run broadcasts reveals that there are 12 vital ingredients, at least one of which is found necessary to the program—naturalness, voice personality, friendliness, timeliness, diversity, suspense, drama, education, melody, individuality, quality and humor.

While the list of record radio "runs" is limited to 500-performance minimums, it must be remembered that some of the most popular programs on the air today are on only once a week.

250 Vallee Performances

Outstanding among these is Rudy Vallee, who has given approximately 250 performances on the air over a six-year period. Will Rogers' series for Gulf Gasoline is in its second year, and the humorist has made about 75 appearances before the microphones. The same is true of Eddie Cantor and Bing Crosby.

Walter Damrosch inaugurated the NBC network on November 15, 1926, and has been on it regularly ever since, with about 300 performances on one program and 156 on another.

Vanderlip Cites Paramount Gains

Paramount Publix has worked itself back into definitely profitable operations, with its first quarter earnings estimated at $1,600,000, a cash position improvement of $1,152,356 in the first nine months ended June 9, and accumulation of $10,000,000 in cash, according to Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of a debenture holders' protective committee, in a statement issued by him on the company's advancement toward an early clearance of the receivership.

"Great progress has been made in working out reorganization plans," Mr. Vanderlip said last week, "and adjustments have been made with the majority of important landlords who have claims against the company on long-term leases of theatre properties. Also, a report has been completed by auditors for bankers and another is in progress for the stockholders' committee."

Representatives of stockholders, creditors and bondholders will appear before Federal Judge Coxe in New York July 10, and a sharp contest is expected among the various committees as to the method to be adopted for working out the company's complete rehabilitation.

Bankers may offer a plan which will include an assessment on the common stock, such an assessment being used, it is assumed, to pay off the $13,000,000 of bank loans outstanding.

Stockholders are reported as likely to oppose such a plan on the ground that, with earnings running well in excess of interest requirements on both bonds and bank loans, and a strong cash position, it would be possible to reorganize without putting the principal burden on the holders of the common stock of the company.

Motion Picture Relief Fund Officers Elected on Coast

Marion Davies was reelected president of Motion Picture Relief Fund in Hollywood, at the annual meeting last week. Other officers named were: Ronald Colman, first vice-president; Mary Pickford, second vice-president; Will H. Hays, third vice-president; Samuel Goldwyn, fourth vice-president; M. C. Levee, treasurer, and F. X. Bauer, executive secretary.

The new trustees, elected for three years, are: Irving Thalberg, Janet Gaynor, Frank Craven, Fredric March, Joe E. Brown. Reelected for three years were: Richard Barthelmess, Miss Davies, Cecil B. DeMille, William Randolph Hearst, Carl Laemmle, Sr. Plans were completed for an extensive campaign to raise $200,000 for current relief work.

Gaumont Moves Offices

The offices of Gaumont British Pictures Corporation of America have been removed from 226 West 42nd street, New York City, to 1600 Broadway. The change has been made necessary, according to Arthur A. Lee, vice-president, because of the necessity for larger quarters.

MGM Takes Sydney House

The St. James, 2,000-seat theatre in Sydney, Australia, has been taken over by MGM, and will be reopened July 6, with "Riptide" as the feature attraction.

Cummins Has Fascist Film

Samuel Cummins has acquired American distribution rights to "The Black Shirts," produced in Italy under Premier Mussolini's supervision. The picture, in its present form, runs 13 reels.

LOOKING BACK TO ROADSHOW DAYS

Joseph Jefferson Led The Roadshow Field

The "road" was once a field of legitimate theatrical endeavor where many managers made a deal of money. Today, despite much talk and agitation concerning its revival from the state of moribundity in which it has been for many years, it is distinctly not a source of profits for theatrical managers.

The all-time record in roadshowing of legitimate attractions unquestionably is held by the late Joseph Jefferson's version of "Rip Van Winkle," which he performed year after year for more than 50 years to the tune of about $32,000,000 in box office receipts, based on an average of $16,000 weekly for 40-week seasons during that time.

To be sure, Mr. Jefferson's showings of this production should come within the category of revivals, but the fact remains that Mr. Jefferson himself played the leading part in the play for 50 years—something unprecedented in the annals of the theatre.

Next on the list of roadshows would come "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has played every city and "tank" in the country for 40 years or more, bringing its total performances up to about 15,000.

4,800 "Ben-Hur" Performances

"Ben-Hur" averaged a 40-week season for 15 years, with average weekly grosses amounting to $16,000, making a total number of performances approximately 4,800.

David Warfield's "Music Master" and its position in the American theatre are unique for two reasons; first, it had the longest straight runs, uninterrupted, in theatrical history—12 years—with a total of about 4,992 performances; and, secondly, in 1913 it set what is probably a business record in the American theatre, taking in $100,000 at the box office in only four weeks.

The competition of the motion picture, coupled with the general depression, undoubtedly served to further the downward trend of legitimate theatre attendance "on the road." The low admission prices of the motion picture theatre have been too much for the roadshow manager and serious financial difficulties and even bankruptcies have come to be the lot of some of the theatre's most noted roadshowmen. The talking picture, when it made its appearance in 1927 and 1928, was the last straw, though even long prior to the depression potential audiences in the field had been educated to the lower admissions of the motion picture theatres for their entertainment. This development began with the advent of the feature pictures in 1912.

40 Weeks Then, 20 Now

Ten years ago a route sheet which sent a company into 150 cities and towns was a common occurrence. Many such routings, to be sure, were often split weeks—three days in one city and three in the next—but a good play was almost always assured of at least 40 weeks on the road.

Today, as indicated in the list of successful roadshows, the records for the past two years—not including "Green Pastures," which has been out on the road for four years with a total of something like 1,280 performances—are held by Katharine Cornell's 20-week tour of the "Barretts of Wimpole Street," and the New York Theatre Guild's 17-week tour of "Biography."

What the depression did to the New York theatre—notwithstanding the tremendous improvement of the current legitimate season over any one of the past four—is seen in the fact that there are now only 35 theatres left for legitimate drama, as against 68 in 1929, the peak season.

These figures denote the performances of straight road-shows, which started from a central point. The 15,000 performances of this play given herewith do not include those contributed by countless "tent" shows and stock performances. There were once 24 companies playing this at one time.*

Richard Mansfield played "Cyrano" in his repertoire for over 20 years. The performances listed for this play are those of the Walter Hampden tours, still extant.

N. B.: All of these plays were picked at random and represent, for the most part, typical entertainment of the period. The figures on performances and box office grosses have been contributed by authoritative "old-time" roadshowmen.

War Songs Lead in Sales of Sheet Music

"Keep the Home Fires Burning"—one of the two leaders in the sales of popular songs, with more than 3,000,000 copies sold—was written by Ivor Novello, shortly after the outbreak of the World War. Mr. Novello, one of England's outstanding contributions to the world of the theatre, the motion picture and literary endeavor, was only 18 years old at the time and he little dreamed that his song would blanket the English-speaking world as it did. It was popular in the United States long before this country—as a whole—had any idea of entering the overseas conflict.

Next on the song list, which gives minimum approximate figures, comes "There's a Long, Long Trail," another war song which sold as much as the Novello composition. "Down by the Old Mill Stream," a real old-timer, follows with an estimated 2,500,000 copies sold.

Before the advent of radio, the average sales life of popular song hits was 16 months, and when potential customers heard a song in the theatre or the music store, they bought copies of sheet music. Total sales advanced slowly, reached a peak and maintained that peak sale for several months, thus assuring a fair remuneration to the composer for the exercise of his creative genius. Then the sales would drop off rapidly. An outstanding song hit would sell at the average minimum rate of 1,156,000 copies.

Then came radio, and the composer's income from the sale of sheet music and phonograph records declined, despite the fact that hundreds of radio stations played his songs over and over again. The radio seized each new song hit and played it to death within three months, the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers explain, and the composer's income crashed. Today, the total sale for an unusually outstanding song hit is averaging about 229,000 copies.

Total sales of sheet music in dollars reached a high in 1926 of $3,447,775. In 1932, total sales had declined to $827,154. These figures are based on the statistics of three leading song publishers and were published last year in a booklet sponsored by the ASCAP, entitled "The Murder of Music."

A factual example of what effect the radio has had on the music publishing business is seen in the fact that in 1927 alone "Ramona" sold 1,750,000 copies of sheet music, while in 1931, the "Maine Stein Song," made popular by Rudy Vallee and generally considered the outstanding success of that year, sold 900,000 copies. The song had been literally "done to death" on the radio, and, while 900,000 copies in one year is considered an excellent sale, it is only about one-half the sale of "Ramona."

In spite of this apparently important part which music plays in the lives of the American people, it cannot be doubted that it is losing financially, if not in influence.

In 1929, the total amount of money spent for radios was $592,068,000, cheaper radios making it possible to lower that figure to $124,860,000 in 1932. Expenditures for broadcast advertising in 1932 were $39,107,000. As radio expenditures have increased, the money spent by the public for pianos has similarly decreased. In 1925, sales of pianos brought $93,670,000, and in 1931 only $12,000,000.

Eleven Thousand Are in Communities Having Less Than 20,000 Population; 3,235 in Cities of Over 200,000

The extent to which the motion picture industry depends on small communities for its box-office upkeep was learned this week in a survey which shows that 11,000 theatres of a newly-estimated total of 16,850 in the United States are located in places having a population of less than 20,000 persons, and 10,000 houses seat 500 or less.

Only eleven hundred theatres of the country's total structures seat 3,000 or more, all others seating under 1,500.

Only 3,235 theatres operate in cities with populations exceeding 200,000 persons, while 3,830 are in communities having 1,000 and fewer inhabitants.

Motion pictures are projected on the screens of theatres in some 9,260 cities, towns and hamlets of the United States, divided as follows:

Population of Towns	No. of Towns With Theatres	No. of Theatres
Over 500,000	13	2,215
200,000 to 500,000	27	1,025
100,000 to 200,000	53	778
50,000 to 100,000	95	775
20,000 to 50,000	258	1,168
7,500 to 20,000	726	1,703
4,000 to 7,500	867	1,400
2,000 to 4,000	1,464	1,806
1,000 to 2,000	2,023	2,149
1,000 and less	3,734	3,830
TOTALS	9,260	16,849

On the basis of the following classification of theatres according to size, the estimated absolute maximum theatre capacity of the country's theatres would approximate 13,370,000:

SEATING CAPACITIES	NO. OF THEATRES
Over 3,000	110
2,000 to 3,000	346
1,500 to 2,000	621
1,000 to 1,500	1,327
500 to 1,000	4,280
200 to 500	8,190
200 and less	1,975
TOTALS	16,849

Theatres having capacities of between 200 and 500 seats far exceed in number those theatres of any other size, 8,190—almost half—accommodating between 200 and 500 persons. Seven-eighths of all the country's theatres seat under one thousand, there being about 14,500 in this classification.

Loew Declares Dividend

The board of directors of Loew's, Inc., this week declared a quarterly dividend of $1.62½ per share on the outstanding $6.50 cumulative preferred stock, payable August 15, to stockholders of record July 28.

PRODUCTION CODE CHIEF AT HOME

Herewith appears the latest photographic recording of Mr. Joseph I. Breen, director of the Production Code Administration, the motion picture industry's response to the Legion of Decency, pictured with his family at their residence in Hollywood. This is evidence enough that Mr. Breen may be considered an authority of experience on the requirements of a typical, healthy and lively American family, running the whole scale of ages represented in the motion picture audience. Left to right, seated: Natalie, Frances, Tommy, Helene; standing: James, Mr. and Mrs. Breen, Joseph.

Paramount Continues Ban On All 10-Cent Theatres

Paramount, continuing its current season policy, will maintain its ban during 1934-35 on selling to 10-cent theatres. This subject, in addition to the question of double bills and preferred playing time, is highlighting regional sales meetings now being held.

Meanwhile, in Washington, the first of a two-day regional meeting was opened on Monday, with J. J. Unger presiding.

New Labor Board Setup

By an order of President Roosevelt, signed this week before leaving on his vacation, an impartial labor board of three members to investigate and mediate disputes during the remainder of the statutory life of the NRA was created. By this move, labor matters are taken out of the hands of General Hugh S. Johnson and the NRA, and transferred to the new board.

Southern Association To Meet in Atlanta July 8–9

The GFTA Independent Theatre Association, of which Ike Katz, Montgomery, Ala., is president, has set July 8-9 for its first convention, to be held at Atlanta. The organization, one month old, claims to have 100 members. Edward Golden, Monogram sales chief, will be one of the principal speakers at the meeting, which will be at the Ansley Hotel.

DR. SHORT IN PURSUIT OF TEACHERS' ARMY TO FILL RESEARCHER RANKS

A PLEASANTLY comprehensive report on the status of some aspects of the Motion Picture Research Council is embodied in a letter which Dr. William H. Short, director, creator and motivator of the Council, sent to its members.

It will be noted that the director makes no reference in this letter to the resignation of Mrs. August Belmont from the presidency or any suggestion as to whom he will cast for that role, next.

The best line of this letter is "a new constituency of more than 1,250 choice people." "Choice people" are indeed the commodity of those who engineer movements. One is to be pleased, editorially, as well as informed strategically, by the project to "implement" their program. Dr. Short's well written letter is herewith presented.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

"Our Executive Committee spent several hours last Friday morning going over the present work and future plans of the Council in detail. Near the close of the meeting they adopted unanimously the following minute and directed me to call it to your attention.

"That in view of the tremendous things already accomplished through the close and friendly cooperation which has characterized the members of the Council, and the urgent need which now exists for a modest sum of money to finance the work of the Council during the summer pending the financial campaign that is planned for the early autumn, the Executive Committee feels that members of the Board will consider it a privilege to join with them in making regular monthly contributions to the Council during the months of July, August and September, and instructs the Director to extend an invitation to this effect.

"They wish me to say that the membership campaign conducted during the spring has built up a new constituency of more than 1250 choice people chiefly in New York, Boston and Philadelphia; and that this creates an ideal situation for the ample financing that will be undertaken in the early autumn.

"In the meantime the budget has been cut to $800 a month, our chief activity being two studies; one of the trade practices of the motion picture industry, the other of our practical program of action with the object of "implementing" the program adopted at the meeting of the Board on December 29, 1933. Both have been financed (by two members of our Board) and both are expected to be completed by the end of the summer.

"During these months the only source of income for the regular budget is subscriptions from the members of the Board. The Committee wishes me to say that it confidently hopes for your assistance.

"As an index to the attention which the Committee is giving to our affairs, you will be glad to know that every member was in attendance and that they recessed to meet again on Monday morning, July 9th, at 9 o'clock; by which time they hope they may hear favorably from you. The Committee consists of Messrs. Cabot, Finley, Arthur Butler Graham, Houston, Wood, Woodruff, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. William Barclay Parsons, Jr."

Research Council Holds Conference at Washington to Present New Film Attack to National Education Group

Given pause by the loss of their leader and president in the person of Mrs. August Belmont, and by problems of finance, Dr. William Harrison Short this week was rallying his forces of the Motion Picture Research Council to pursue the vast army of school teachers of the National Education Association, to win over their support of a brand new Research campaign to raise the moral standards of the screen.

Dr. Short timed his new attack so that it appeared in the press close upon Mrs. Belmont's resignation.

Council Calls Special Conference

The Council hurriedly called a special conference at Washington over the week-end just prior to the opening of the educational convention, and at press time word came from the conference chambers that Dr. Short and his colleagues were about ready to submit to the teachers an attack on the film and a plea for the support of a definite program of action by all the organizations now campaigning against the screen.

The Council's executives and Dr. Short also evinced the conviction that the Darrow investigation and report of the motion picture code was not sufficiently comprehensive. The Council will embark upon an investigation of its own, in the course of which not only trade practices covered by the code will be studied, but also practices which it is declared are not even mentioned in the document, though having a far-reaching effect upon the industry and the public.

Arthur Butler Graham in Charge

The investigation will be conducted under the supervision of Arthur Butler Graham, motion picture attorney of New York. In charge of research work in this connection will be Dr. Wesley Mitchell, Dr. Ben D. Wood, Dr. Frederick M. Thrasher and Dr. Paul Cressey.

As a third part of its drive for clean pictures, the Council will cooperate with the State Department in a world-wide survey of the effect of motion pictures on American foreign trade and relations with other countries. A committee, consisting of Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Edgar Dale of the University of Ohio, and Dr. Herbert Blumer of the University of Chicago, has been appointed to draft a questionnaire to be sent to consular officers abroad.

A number of resolutions were adopted by the conference, one of which expressed appreciation to Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York "for his recent speech criticizing the industry for not making use of the Payne Fund studies."

The conference voted unanimously to seek "by every possible means" abolition of compulsory block booking and blind selling,

Eastern Allied Units to Join New Jersey at Meet

Allied of New Jersey will be joined by eastern Allied units at its annual convention in Atlantic City, August 22-24, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. The convention committee comprises: Julius Charnow, Leon Rosenblatt, Harry Hecht, Dave Snaper and M. Gerofsky. With units from Albany, Baltimore, Boston, in attendance, about 300 are expected. It is anticipated Sidney Samuelson will be reelected president.

Tec-Art Hearing to Be Held July 10th

Hearing on the trustee's report, petition for a final dividend and a petition for sale or abandonment of uncollected accounts of the Tec-Art Studios will be held July 10 in Los Angeles by Referee Rupert B. Turnbull.

The report shows receipts of $22,205, disbursements of $17,901 with a balance on hand of $4,303. Claims proved and allowed total $117,683. Additional claims are $683.

Church Movement Extended in Field By Several Units

The church movement against socalled "unclean" pictures continued to grow during the week, although activities in this connection were not as pronounced as in previous weeks.

At Albany, the convention of the Lutheran Synod decided that "the pressure of public opinion exerted directly upon boxoffices of motion picture theatres will give effect to our protest against indecent exhibitions."

Machinery for effecting a boycott of objectionable films shown in Massachusetts was set up at Boston by the Knights of Columbus. The state will be divided into three parts. Each K. of C. council will be assigned to work one or more parishes and the pastor of each parish will be asked to serve as honorary chairman of the parish committee. Members of each parish committee will distribute to parishioners a printed form giving the information to be disseminated.

Possibility of extending the Catholics' "Legion of Decency" movement to some 2,600,000 pupils enrolled in Catholic schools in 105 dioceses throughout the country was discussed this week in Chicago, where Archbishop John T. McNicholas, of Cincinnati, counselled with the members of the National Catholic Educational Association. They issued a call to parochial school heads to act on this matter under the leadership of their bishops.

Archbishop McNicholas said, "We are assured by the producers that the appeal jury has been transferred from Hollywood to New York. There is promise in this." However, he advised church leaders to "continue aggressive action."

Possibility that 80,000 additional Catholics will immediately join the "Legion of Decency" developed at Kansas City when Bishop Thomas Lillis issued a pastoral letter to parishioners in his diocese urging Legion of Decency pledges. He declared that the Catholics will continue their boycott until proof is furnished that decency has been completely restored.

Dr. E. LeRoy Dakin, vice-president of the Milwaukee County Council of (Protestant) Churches announced that the Council had expressed itself as being "in hearty accord with the action against films taken by the Catholic brethren and by the Federal Council of Churches and National Jewish Welfare Association."

Some 12,000 Baptist ministers in the south were urged this week by their denominational leader to join actively in the movement against "pictures which are destructive of home and religious beliefs."

While the Independent Theatre Owners at Omaha was passing a resolution endorsing the church film movement and urging the abolition of block booking as a solution, distributors and exhibitors in that territory came to a stalemate with the Catholic Standards Committee in effecting a compromise over the alleged action of the Standards Committee in banning pictures locally only after they had been screened at first runs. Charles Williams, president of the MPTO of Nebraska and Iowa made an appeal that boycotting of certain pictures be called by a national Catholic committee either before the films are released or locally before they play first runs.

The boycott of unclean pictures in Philadelphia is now complete, and as a result it was said that Saturday morning children matinee business has dropped as much as 80 per cent.

The "Legion of Decency" movement may be extended to Canada. Miss Eva M. Dillon, publicity head for the Catholic Women's League of Canada this week urged a nationwide reform move in Canada.

POPE APPROVES FILM CAMPAIGN

Pope Pius XI this week lent papal approval to the nationwide campaign of the Catholic Church in the United States against allegedly immoral motion pictures. To Bishop Michael Gallagher of Detroit, His Holiness said he was "deeply gratified" at the various reports he had heard as to the campaign's conduct.

At the same time, His Holiness declared it was difficult to believe that for a long time there had been such a thing as a depression or difficult conditions in the United States.

The Pope this week bestowed on Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia a special apostolic blessing for his campaign against "indecent" films.

Talley, Stallings Meet Fox Reel Men in Europe

With the arrival in Paris of Truman H. Talley, general manager, and Laurence Stallings, editor of Fox Movietone News, a general meeting was called this week at which the European staffs of the reel were to discuss plans for the reorganized newsreel, to begin operation in the fall. It is understood arrangements have been virtually completed for coverage in Soviet Russia.

At the meeting, and heading delegations from their own territories, were the following executives: Gerald Sanger, editor of British Movietone News, Great Britain; Russell Muth, Central Europe; Ettore Villani, Southern Europe and the Near East; Hans Pebal, other European countries; Ben Miggins, European director, and his staff. Another meeting shortly will include editorial and camera crews covering Asia, Africa and South America. Mr. Talley plans an increase of the number of offices in Central and South America.

Direct Action Called Aim

Motion picture producers are going too far when they say that what is being shown today on the screen is demanded by the public, Father Youngblood told a forum on "current evils" in Houston, Tex., this week.

Harry Spingold Dies

Harry Spingold of the radio department of the William Morris agency, died from a heart attack this week while on the train to New York from Chicago.

$25,000 Fine If Producers Do Not Adhere To Code

While producers in Hollywood were busy during the week "laundering" scripts and some sequences in completed negatives, it was learned confidentially that Hays member distributors will be subject to a fine of $25,000 for releasing any picture that violates the production code or for releasing a film in which ordered changes, corrections or modifications have not been made after the production code administration has so decreed.

This decision was made in order to insure strict adherence to the new form of administering the production code in keeping with the demands of the churches for cleaner films.

Any fines collected will be used for code administration, it was said, with the possibility that such fines will be used to employ scenario editors who would scan scripts before production with the view of making eliminations and showing producers how objectionable sequences can be rewritten.

However, none of Hollywood's production leaders would acknowledge the existence of any such plan.

Meanwhile, B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, issued instructions to the studio's producers to forthwith eliminate offensive screen material. He admitted that a few of RKO's pictures were among those which have been criticised by the church groups. Mr. Kahane urged the producers to observe the letter and spirit of the production code "in good faith."

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, said this week while en route to Hollywood that the present objections against pictures are coming from five per cent of the public. "This group," he said, "is a small but militant minority."

Mr. Warner declared that, "If this minority is sincere and broadminded and wants to cooperate with company heads, the problem can be solved, but if its motives are selfish and ulterior and designed to destroy the theatre because it competes with the church for the public's attention, then the crusade will fail." The industry's production plant is geared to produce any sort of entertainment called for, he added.

Former Censor Approves Pledge

Maude Murray Miller, for eight years a member of the Ohio Censor Board, last week publicly approved the action of Bishop J. J. Hartley ordering all priests under his jurisdiction to have pledges signed by members of their congregations not to attend theatres where indecent pictures are shown.

Proposes Producer Blacklist

Blacklisting producers and directors of undesirable pictures, in preference to censorship, was the solution advanced by Lawrence Grant, of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in Cincinnati last week, declaring that "the greater danger of picture houses is that any type of pictures can be shown in any type of house."

Magnificent Obsession

Said the New York Times of this great novel: "The fault with many a modern novel is that nothing happens in it. It is one merit of Magnificent Obsession that IT REALLY HAS A PLOT! Incident follows incident with impelling force. Love, finance, accident, injury and death all play their part in depicting a character controlled by a great ideal" . . . COLUMBIA PLANS 48 FEATURES; DETAILS ON 32 ARE ANNOUNCED

26 Two-Reel Short Subjects and Eight Series of Single-Reel Product Will Be Released During the 1934-35 Season

Columbia Pictures Corporation, the last of the larger distributors to assemble for annual sales meetings, swung into convention in Atlantic City Monday and announced a schedule of 48 feature pictures, 26 two-reel short subjects and eight series of single reel subjects for the 1934-35 season.

More than 150 district managers, branch managers and salesmen representing 16 territories in Canada and the eastern part of the United States attended the convention, the first of two regional meetings, the second of which will be held July 9 in Chicago.

Jack Cohn, vice-president in charge of distribution, outlined the 1934-35 program, announced 32 titles and told of a greatly expanded budget. Speeches were made also by Abe Montague, general sales manager; Abe Schneider, treasurer, and William Jaffe of the legal department.

Asserting that the motion picture industry is "more sinned against than sinning," Jack Cohn on Monday said that the "violent burst" of condemnation now current on the part of the churches of the country is directed against something greater and something far more important and all-embracing than the motion picture.

"The storm has mistakenly been shifted to the latter because the motion picture reflects the thing against which the crusaders inveigh—the tendencies of the times," Mr. Cohn said.

Calls Film Mirror of Times

"They have directed their ire against the mirror, instead of against the thing or condition reflected in the mirror.

"Sophistication is the one word that describes the fault universally charged against films. We are living in an era of sophistication and reflected in the conduct of city dwellers from coast to coast and reflected in the newspapers they read, and in American literature as a whole. To the extent that the motion picture holds the mirror up to Nature it reflects the same sophistication, against which many of us inveigh in vain."

Listed among star and personality pictures are two Frank Capra productions; one Grace Moore production; one Claudette Colbert production; one for Edward G. Robinson; four starring Jack Holt, one with Edmund Lowe; one starring Boris Karloff and one feature starring Gene Raymond.

Because of the ever-mounting increase in cost of production, due not only to public demand for finely produced stories of popular plays, books, and short stories, but due equally to the operation of the NRA principles throughout the organization, Columbia during the new season must be in a position to acquire more of exhibitors' preferred playing time, Mr. Cohn pointed out.

Titles of the 1934-35 program as announced are:

BROADWAY BILL, a Frank Capra production, with Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy.

ANOTHER FRANK CAPRA production, as yet untitled.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE, with Grace Moore, noted opera star.

FEATHER IN HER HAT, by I. A. R. Wylie, one of the current season's best sellers.

AN EDWARD G. ROBINSON production, to be produced by Howard Hawks, as yet untitled.

PARTY WIRE, a best seller by Bruce Manning.

A CLAUDETTE COLBERT production, untitled.

MAID OF HONOR, from the best seller and Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Katharine Brush.

CARNIVAL, a dramatic romance by Robert Riskin.

THE GIRL FRIEND, a musical extravaganza by Herbert Fields, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart.

ONE JACK HOLT-EDMUND LOWE production, untitled.

LADY BEWARE, a comedy drama.

BLACK ROOM MYSTERY, a thriller starring Boris Karloff.

SURE FIRE, starring Gene Raymond and Ann Sothern.

MILLS OF THE GODS, a drama by Melville Baker and Jack Kirkland, presenting a cross section of industrial America today.

DEPTHS BELOW, starring Jack Holt in a romantic melodrama.

TWO ADDITIONAL JACK HOLT productions.

BREAKFAST FOR TWO, a farce.

EIGHT BELLS, a drama of the sea.

ONCE A GENTLEMAN, from the story by Bradley King.

THAT'S GRATITUDE, from the stage comedy success by Frank Craven.

SPRING 3100, a melodrama.

MAN PROOF, comedy drama.

MURDER ISLAND, a thriller from the pen of Leland Jamieson.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY, drama.

WHITE LIES, romantic drama.

LADY OF NEW YORK, drama.

PRIVATE PROPERTY, drama.

UNKNOWN WOMAN, drama thriller.

$25 AN HOUR, Gladys Unger and Leyla Georgi's romantic stage comedy.

I CONFESS, drama.

In addition to these listed, there will be eight Tim McCoy outdoor action dramas and eight additional feature dramas.

The Short Product

To supplement its features, Columbia will offer a diversified line-up of single and two-reel short subjects. Of the two-reelers there will be 26, as yet untitled, featuring an aggregation of comedians, including Harry Langdon, Leon Errol, Andy Clyde, Walter Catlett and others.

The eight single reel series will include the "Color Rhapsodies," produced by Charles Mintz; "Krazy Kat Kartoons," also produced by Charles Mintz; "Scrappy" cartoons, another Mintz production; "Laughing With Medbury," produced by Walter Futter with John P. Medbury dialogue; "Life's Last Laughs," produced by C. S. Clancy; "Spice of Life," produced by Mentone; "World of Sport," and "Screen Snapshots," in which Harriet Parsons reveals intimate scenes of the stars at work and play.

Among the screen and stage stars, directors and writers who will work under the Columbia banner next season are:

DARROW BOARD URGES NEW CODE AUTHORITY, HITS AT LOCAL BOARDS

Charges Grievance Units Are Directing Boycott Against Independent Exhibitors; Declares Monopoly in Saddle

Immediate dismissal of the motion picture Code Authority and creation of a new body "that can conceive something of the rights of the public and has some other impulse than the extraction of fat profits" is recommended by Clarence Darrow's National Recovery Review Board in its third report to the President.

Unless President Roosevelt changes his mind and reconvenes the board to consider the approximately 150 codes against which complaints have been received and on which no action has been taken, the report constitutes the final gasp of the board headed by Clarence Darrow and created by the President last March to investigate complaints that codes were working to the benefit of monopoly and adversely to small enterprises.

Darrow Resigns

With the submission of the final report, Chairman Darrow followed the example of John F. Sinclair and W. O. Thompson and resigned, leaving only W. W. Neal, Fred P. Mann and Samuel P. Henry. Those members of the board have "recessed" until July 10 and returned to their homes, and will not come back to Washington unless asked to do so by the President. The board goes out of existence next week.

Taking a final fling at the National Recovery Administration, the board in its report declared that "it may safely be said that not in many years have monopolistic tendencies in industry been so forwarded and strengthened as they have been through the perversion of an act excellently intended to restore prosperity and promote the public welfare."

The present method of setting up code authorities is declared sadly defective and the cost of administration, in many cases, expensive and sometimes heavily burdensome to small business organizations.

Administration members should be selected "with an eye single to their fitness and qualifications for the duties to be assumed," it is asserted, and their presence on the authorities is useless unless they are entitled to vote upon all questions.

Blames Block Booking

Recommending dismissal of the Code Authority, the board points out that nothing has been done with respect to the recommendations in its original report, and lays at the door of the producers the blame for the religious campaign recently inaugurated against pictures and exhibitors, at the same time condemning the Government for failing to remedy evils in the industry before "manifestations of popular revolt" appeared.

"In the first report," it was pointed out, "this board described the lawless and outrageous excesses of the monopoly in this industry and demanded that something be done to protect the small enterprise, exposed to the insatiable rapacity of the powerful.

"Any notion that the Government or any governmental agency supports, sanctions or tolerates these practices would be be most unfortunate. But we are compelled to note that the evils in and resulting from the evil practice of block booking have resulted in curious manifestations of popular revolt."

Charging that the code sanctions practices which have been barred by the courts, the report declared that one of the results of the exactions of the large producers has been the institution of a "nation-wide boycott" directed against objectionable pictures, thus turning upon the industry a weapon which it itself had devised to keep recalcitrant exhibitors under control.

Text of Report

The report of the board with respect to the film code follows:

"The board feels called upon to advert again to the so-called code of fair competition for the motion pictures industry and renew its recommendations in reference thereto.

"Our former report on this code demonstrated not only its monopolistic and oppressive character but also indicated that in its negotiations and writings by the deputy administrator complete frankness and impartiality were lacking.

"The board made definite findings that the code was not warranted by and was contrary to the provisions of the national industrial recovery act inasmuch as it authorized practices which have been specifically condemned by the courts of this land as monopolistic and oppressive.

Charges Restraint at Hearings

"Numerous instances have come to the attention of this board where practices have arisen or are continued under the operation of the so-called code of fair competition although these practices have been determined to be monopolistic and oppressive by decisions of the United States supreme court and other courts of the land. In addition, cases have been noted where parties have been restrained at hearings held before the National Recovery Administration from citing these decisions.

"Thus, pursuant to the authority granted them in the motion picture code, the producer-dominated grievance boards are directing a boycott against independent exhibitors who deviate from the admission prices established by the producers. The result of this boycott is to force the exhibitors to comply with price regulations of the producers or close their theatres for lack of pictures. So we have the producers resorting to a boycott which has been judicially established to be illegal and monopolistic. (Paramount v US 282 US 30 and US v First National, 282 US 44.)

"The first instance of the disregard of the court decisions by the operation of the motion picture code is presented by the actions of the subservient clearance and zoning boards in formulating clearance and zoning schedules in various cities which put the low admission independent theatres so far behind the producer-owned theatres that they will not be able to supply their patrons with pictures of current interest and will lose them to the producer-owned houses. This device was attempted before the code but was halted by the decision in Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, et al.

"Heretofore the Big Eight producers have made little use of the extraordinary powers conferred upon them under the motion picture code. This apparent leniency, however, is readily explainable. They have been afraid to exercise their powers in the face of the public attack upon the code contained in the board's report. The failure of the National Recovery Administration to carry out the suggestions of this board encouraged the Big Eight to try out their new powers upon their helpless rivals.

Blames Block Booking for Attack of Churches on Theatre Attendance in Fight Against Salacious Motion Pictures

Says NRA Sanctions Boycotts

"More important from the standpoint of the public at large are the evil consequences resulting from the failure to act on the recommendation of this board that steps be taken to correct the practice known as compulsory block booking. The abolition of that practice is necessary to give the exhibitors and their patrons a right of selection as to the pictures to be shown in the theatres. As matters stand under the code, the power of the producers to compel the exhibitors to buy and show all of their pictures—the good with the bad—and to designate the days of the week upon which particular pictures shall be shown has the sanction of National Recovery Administration approval.

"Millions of outraged citizens, finding that the code affords no means of escaping the forced showing of pictures, have joined under the leadership of various religious bodies in putting into effect a nation-wide boycott directed against objectionable pictures. Thus, boycotting, sanctioned throughout the National Recovery Administration activities, becomes a national institution and is now employed by the public at large to compel the reforms which the National Recovery Administration has refused to effect. This boycott might have been avoided through the adoption of the recommendations of this board. In ignoring the suggestions of this board, the National Recovery Administration has forced the public to an expedient which, although effective, will surely result in grave hardships for the independent exhibitors who are in no way the cause of the evil sought to be remedied. The only way to prevent this injustice and attain the result which the entire nation is seeking by this boycott is to adopt the changes advised by this board in its original report on the motion picture code."

Code Boards Hear 812 Cases in Field

The Code Authority in New York this week mailed to Local Board secretaries in the field some 5,000 blanks upon which exhibitors who have not yet executed a code acceptance are again given the opportunity to sign, with the new deadline set at August 15. Other code developments during the week included a report by the Authority on the activities to date of the 31 Local Grievance and Clearance Boards, with which some 812 complaints under the code have been filed by exhibitors or exchanges. Of this total, 600 complaints have already been disposed of, and 94 were appealed to the Code Authority.

From Washington came word that all material asked of producers by the NRA in the questionnaires pertaining to salaries in the industry had been received and work was progressing in completing a compilation of motion picture earnings.

The Code Authority this week was instructed by the NRA to assume supervision of the distribution of the new Blue Eagle insignia within the industry. The order gave the Authority the right to recall the Blue Eagle upon violation. Assentees who have paid their code expense bill are entitled to the insignia.

Appoint First Appeals Group

Gradwell Sears, Warner sales executive; Harry Shiffman, independent New York exhibitor, Major Leslie Thompson, of RKO, are the members of the first Code Authority committee on appeals, under the plan recently adopted calling for the appointment of 10 rotating committees to assist the Authority in disposing of appeals from local board decisions. The committees will not make final decisions, merely hearing the appeals and recommending action to the Authority.

Joe Engel, who succeeded Mike Landow as Universal manager in Philadelphia, was appointed last week to Mr. Landow's post on the Local Grievance Board.

The extent of the actual operations of the code machinery in the field were outlined to the industry this week by the Code Authority, which announced that the 31 Local Grievance Boards have to date held a total of 144 meetings, heard 289 complaints, still have 63 complaints to be heard and certified 16 complaints to the Code Authority in connection with appeals. Out of the total complaints filed, 57 decisions have been appealed to the Code Authority. The compilation which follows gives a cross-section of Local Grievance Board activities to date:

The 31 Local Clearance and Zoning Boards to date have held 146 meetings, and have received 460 protests against schedules, of which 310 have already been decided. Thirty-seven decisions have been appealed to the Code Authority, while 150 protests remain to be heard.

A combined total of 94 appeals have been filed with the Code Authority on decisions of both groups of local boards. The Authority has passed final determination on 19 out of 39 appeals already heard.

(x) Protests pending completion of schedule decisions.
(y) Completed and published schedule for entire territory.

Announcement was made this week by the Code Authority of final determination of six appeals which had been taken on local board decisions. In the case of L. C. Sipe, Criterion theatre, Anderson, S. C., against Strand theatre, Anderson, S. C., the Authority sustained the appeal of the defendant in a case involving admissions.

In the case of J. M. Anderson, Princess theatre, Boone, Iowa, versus the Central States Theatre Corporation's Rialto, at Boone, the Authority affirmed the determination of the Des Moines Grievance Board in dismissing the complaint filed under Article VI, Part 2, Section 1 of the code.

The third case disposed of was Louis Linker's Criterion, Bridgeton, N. J., against Atlantic Theatres' Stanley at Bridgeton, involving overbuying, the Code Authority deciding that the determination of the Philadelphia Grievance Board shall be modified so as to include the finding that the respondent has not adopted an unfairly competing operating policy of unnecessary and too frequent changes, to include in place of the direction made by the Philadelphia board the direction that the respondent forthwith make its selection under its selective contracts with distributors of the minimum number of motion pictures which it is obliged to play under such license agreements, and thereby release the remainder to the complainant for negotiation.

The Code Authority ruled in the case of MGM against L. L. Drake's Ansonia theatre, Wadesboro, N. C., that the certified complaint filed by the local board shall be dismissed.

In the case of Anderson Theatre Circuit's Egyptian theatre, at DeKalb, Ill., against United Artists, the Authority dismissed the complaint and referred it back to the Chicago Grievance Board. The case involved the point of whether the complainant contracted to exhibit all of the pictures that were offered by the exchange.

The complaint of United Artists against A. L. Adams, Palace theatre, Silverton, Ore., was dismissed.

In Chicago, Screeno, a lottery which had become popular at a number of theatres in the sector, was ruled a violation of the code provision pertaining to the practice. Several cases of premature advertising were disposed of with all defendants pleading guilty.

An overbuying complaint brought by the Pikeville Amusement Co., Pikeville, Ky., was held up owing to the fact that the defendant in the case was not present at the hearing.

New clearance schedules to be set up in the Kansas City territory will supersede protection terms written into franchise agreements, new schedules taking precedence over this year's franchise. The new schedule provides that any independent not having a specified regular admission shall be classed five cents lower. Passes handed out on a Will Rogers picture to the stockyards must stop, the Kansas City grievance board ruled last week. The Kansas City price war has resulted in numerous complaints piling up on the grievance board charging exhibitors with reduced admission, playing pictures ahead of the spot at prices below contract stipulations and jumping clearance in double billing.

In Milwaukee many independent exhibitors took exception to many clauses in the proposed clearance and zoning schedules and declared they would not adhere to it in its present form.

The Minneapolis grievance board has banned the issuance of script books or coupons, on the ground that the practice tends to lower admissions and was unfair competition in many instances.

In New York, David T. Willentz, attorney general for New Jersey, and representing Allied of New Jersey on code matters, lost his first case before the clearance and zoning board. His client, the Ellwood, Newark, N. J., had protested the 14 days' clearance the Warner Regent and Capitol, Belleville, have over it.

At the last session of the Washington, D. C., clearance board, J. Louis Rome, operator of the Gwynn, Baltimore, lost his plea that he be placed in a zone separate from Frank Durkee's Forest. His purpose was to be free of the 14 days' clearance now enjoyed by the Durkee house.

INDIAN FINISHING SIGN LANUAGE FILM

At the Smithsonian Institute, in Washington, D. C., a motion picture camera is daily trained on the fingers of an elderly Indian, who, with painstaking care, is assisting in the making of a pictorial record of the Indian sign language, a manner of communication once used over the greater part of the North American continent, today understood by a mere handful of men.

The Indian is Chief Bull, of the Montana Blackfeet, whose name is Richard Sanderville. He was summoned to Washington to carry on the ambitious work begun by the late Major General Hugh L. Scott, famous Indian fighter, who probably knew more about the American Indian than any other white man in the country.

CHARLES EINFELD, HAROLD S. BAREFORD and CARL LESSERMAN returned to the Warner home office from Hollywood.

WILLIAM MELNIKER, MGM representative in South America, is in Hollywood.

WALTER FUTTER is in New York from England.

CLINT WEYER spent a day in Philadelphia last week.

LOU METZGER arrived on the Coast from New York.

RCA Sues Kentucky Firm For Royalties Alleged Due

Briefs have been asked by the federal court, Louisville, Ky., in the case of the Radio Corporation of America against the Ken-Rad Corporation, Owensboro, Ky. RCA is asking $55,000 allegedly due on royalties. The litigation involves royalties claimed due from sales of radio tubes to companies which held licenses from the patent holders. The Ken-Rad Company claims that because of the fact of sales to license holders, it was not obliged to pay royalties. It was brought out that the Owensboro firm paid all other royalties. The case of RCA against Arcturus Radio Tube Company was cited by the court as involving the same issues.

Bernard Bimberg Dead

Bernard K. Bimberg, for years a New York theatre builder, died late last week. He was president of the Benkay Amusement Company, the Bim-Green Catering Company and the Schuyler Amusement Company.

Amity Closes Deal

John M. Crinnion, executive vice-president of Amity Pictures, has closed a deal for distribution of the entire company product with Charles H. Tarbox, of the F. C. Pictures Corporation, Buffalo.

HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Four Oriental Pictures Are In Production at One Time; Four Films Start, Three Completed

By VICTOR SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD is going Chinese. For no reason at all, except perhaps that China happens to be an international "hot spot" at the moment, fourteen Oriental pictures are now in production.

Included in current cycle of pictures with an Oriental background are:

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER: "The Painted Veil," "Indo-China," "China Seas," "Good Earth."

WARNER BROS.: "Farewell to Shanghai," "Oil for the Lamps of China," "War Lord," "Skipper of Ispahan."

PARAMOUNT: "Sacrifice."

RADIO: "Ho for Shanghai."

FOX: Three Charlie Chan pictures.

Clyde Elliott will take a technical crew to China for an Oriental picture titled "Yellow Waters."

Four Productions Start

Only four new pictures were started in the past week. Three were completed. Of the new productions, Universal has two and Radio and Columbia one each. Radio, MGM and Reliance each contribute one to the trio finished.

At Universal, "Imitation of Life," in which Claudette Colbert is starred, was placed in work, also "Gift of Gab," which teams Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stewart and Alice White.

Columbia started "Among the Missing," in which important parts have been assigned to Richard Cromwell, Billie Seward, Arthur Hohl and Henrietta Crossman.

Radio's new feature is "The Gay Divorce," which numbers Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady and Edward Everett Horton.

Radio's completed picture is "A Hat, a Coat, a Glove," a mystery drama, featuring Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins and John Beal.

The completed MGM production, "All Good Americans," a story of topical modern life, lists Robert Young, Una Merkel, Madge Evans, Otto Kruger and Ted Healy in the cast.

Most important of the newly completed pictures is "The Count of Monte Cristo," Reliance Production (United Artists release). The picturization of the Dumas classic has Robert Donat and Elissa Landi at the head of a large cast.

Believing the title "It Ain't No Sin" may invite criticism at this time, Paramount had decided to give the forthcoming Mae West picture the handle of "That Saint Louis Woman," but found out the title had been used by Screencraft. They are now considering "West Is West."

As the result of preview reception of "One Night of Love," Columbia has exercised its option on Grace Moore and is retaining her on a term contract which calls for three pictures a year.

Universal again has signed a deal for the release of six Thalian two reelers, which will be made this year by Jack Townley Productions, Inc. Subjects will be made exclusively with Thalian members in the cast.

Certain leaders, including Ken Goldsmith and Sam Wolf, of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association called a meeting of that organization's members last week to map out a feasible plan whereby a nationwide campaign might be carried out to sustain double featuring. The meeting resulted in no definite decision, but one thing was made clear, that where money is necessary to conduct such a campaign the members are not in sympathy with the plan. It is being held in abeyance.

Little Progress In Fox Theatre Deal

Slight progress was made last week at a meeting in New York between representatives of Loew's, Inc., and Warner with a sub-committee of the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee in respect to the $4,000,000 offer made by Loew and Warner as purchase price for the 87 Fox Metropolitan houses. Indications were, as a result, that another postponement of the federal court hearing on the offer would be sought late this week.

Spokesmen for the bidders last week reported that the situation remained unchanged and that negotiations with the subcommittee would be continued on Monday.

Disney Merchandise Firm Opens Office in Canada

Kay Kamen, Inc., New York firm which controls the merchandising rights to the Walt Disney cartoon characters, has opened a Toronto office for contacts with Canadian manufacturers and advertisers, with Williston P. Munger of Kansas City in charge.

Additional new branches of the company are to be opened in Chicago and Paris. Foreign offices have already been established in Italy, Spain and Australia.

Hoffberg Office in Paris

J. H. Hoffberg Company has opened a new sales office in Paris, in charge of Joseph P. Lamy. Mr. Hoffberg has acquired from Morris Kleinerman European rights to four series of cartoons and novelties in color.

Fowler with Mundus

Guy Fowler has joined Mundus Pictures and will be in charge of press books.

PARIS INTERLUDE

(Formerly "All Good Americans")

MGM-Lucien Hubbard

This story is lilting comedy into which is woven deep human romance. The locale is the Bohemian quarter of Paris. The characters are a gay and easy-going group of young Americans. The straight story is pepped up by several unusual topical situations, most important of which are the famous Lindbergh landing and an atmospheric incorporation of the gaudy, colorful Art Students Ball.

Picture is adapted from the stage play, "All Good Americans," written by S. J. and Laura Perelman, who did "Horsefeathers." The screen play is by Wells Root. Direction is by Edward L. Marin, who made Monogram's "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "A Study in Scarlet."

The cast is composed exclusively of well-known screen names. It includes Madge Evans, currently in "Stand Up and Cheer" and "Grand Canary"; Robert Young, recently featured in "Rothschild" and "Lazy River"; Otto Kruger, now in "Treasure Island"; Una Merkel, currently in "Murder in the Private Car"; Ted Healy, Louise Henry, a newcoming juvenile, Edward Brophy, George Meeker, Bert Roach and Richard Tucker.

Possessing an unusual showmanship title and presenting a better than average box office valuable cast, the yarn is not only light and pleasing midsummer entertainment, but the elements it incorporates are definite exploitation assets. The Lindbergh flight, for practical purposes, is the occasion of the story, and as it develops its hectic newspaper drama romance atmosphere, it is colored by intimate glimpses of merry Parisian life. Topper for exploitation purposes is the Bohemian Art Students Ball. All elements in the story seem to be interest-exciting qualities which, tied up with cast names, locale and theme, can be easily adapted in many effective ways.

THE GAY DIVORCE

Radio

This production is an adaptation of a legitimate show in which Fred Astaire appeared on the New York and London stage. The story, a straightaway comedy romance, was written by Dwight Taylor, who did the adaptation of "Are You Listening?" for MGM. It was adapted to the screen by George Marion, Jr., who did "This Is the Night," "Love Me Tonight" and "Adorable"; Dorothy Yost and Edward Kaufman, who did "Aggie Appleby" and "Hips, Hips, Hooray." Direction is by Mark Sandrich, who recently completed "Cockeyed Cavaliers" and whose adaptability to this type production is further attested by "Melody Cruise."

Fred Astaire, who appeared on the screen in "Flying Down to Rio" and "Dancing Lady," has the same lead role as in the stage production, and Ginger Rogers, recently in "20,000,000 Sweethearts" and "Finishing School," is starred opposite him. Two actors, Erik Rhodes and Eric Blore, who appeared in the London production, will make their American screen debut. Other important principals are Alice Brady and Edward Everett Horton.

The locale is London. Given a comedy set-up, it develops into a romance. Astaire does all the romanticizing inasmuch as the apple of his eye, Miss Rogers, does everything possible to discourage his affectionate inclinations. Finally, as his friend Horton, a solicitor, is engaged by the young lady's aunt, Miss Brady, to arrange for a divorce, Astaire becomes an innocent co-respondent. Coloring the basic comedy romance in the anti-climax is the presentation of Miss Rogers and Astaire in a novel dance arrangement, "The Continental."

The yarn seems to have that peppy, clever punch and color usually so appealing to modern audiences. Despite the tone of the title, an examination of the story indicates that there will be nothing in it that will cause exhibitors to worry. Presented as a lively comedy, it looks to have that quality that clicks with the moderns.

THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO

U. A.-Reliance

The Alexandre Dumas classic is being brought to the screen on an extensive and costly scope. The cast of principals, numbering more than thirty, is supported by hundreds of extras. Robert Donat, noted European stage and screen star, familiar to American audiences through his part in "Henry VIII," has the leading role. Elissa Landi plays the part of Mercedes. Others who will be seen include Louis Calhern, Sidney Blackmer, O. P. Heggie, Luis Alberni, Georgia Caine, Irene Hervey, Juliette Compton, Helen Freeman, Holmes Herbert, Stanley Fields, Lionel Belmore, Clarence Muse, Laurence Grant and Ferdinand Munier.

The task of transferring to the screen the Dumas story of political intrigue, shattered love and life, heartless cruelty and the fantastic discovery of a valuable treasure that enabled Edmond Dantes, as the Count of Monte Cristo, to revenge himself upon and destroy his enemies, was handled by Philip Dunne, Daniel Totheroh and Rowland V. Lee. Lee also directed, and other than reference to his work on "Zoo in Budapest" and "I Am Suzanne," the vast difference between this story and others the trio have made does not permit comparison.

In every way, this picture promises to be big. Having seen some of it made, particularly the tableaux in the anti-climax, it gives every indication of being the type of production that will stir popular imagination. While there is historical fact to the story, it is not an historical romance or drama in the sense of "Rothschild" or "Viva Villa." And while it is a thrilling spectacle, it is vastly different from the spectacles as interpreted by the De Mille picture. Actually, it is the story of one man, his sufferings and triumphs, portrayed against the social and political background of early 19th century France. Continually it builds on impressive entertainment elements that have proved themselves time after time. The elaborateness upon which it is being produced is a direct tip-off as to the character of showmanship that should be given this picture.

DAMES

Warner

In story, settings, music, spectacular dance routines and girl glamour, this production is being developed along the "42nd Street," "Footlight Parade," "Wonder Bar" technique. Unlike its predecessors in that a hokum comedy story motivates, the novelty comes in the surprise spectacle numbers which, culminating in a gigantic modernistic song-dance situation including a sensational revolving staircase and tremendous giant wheel, appear to have the eye-thrilling quality to top the big features of the earlier pictures.

The story is by Robert Lord and Delmer Daves, with the adaptation and screen play by Daves. Ray Enright and Busby Berkeley are collaborating on the direction. Music and lyrics are by Warren and Dubin, Fain and Kahal, and Dixon and Wrubel.

Leading players include the headliners of previous Warner musical extravaganzas. Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell, last together in "20,000,000 Sweethearts," top the cast, which assigns featured roles to Joan Blondell, Guy Kibbee, Hugh Herbert and Zasu Pitts. Supporting players number Johnny Arthur, Ronnie Cosby, Berton Churchill, Phil Regan, Leila Bennett, Arthur Vinton, Arthur Aylesworth, Bess Flowers, Pat O'Malley and Claire McDowell.

The yarn, given a theatre folk background, begins as an out-and-out comedy. Herbert, eccentric, wealthy longhair, gives cousin Kibbee $10,000,000 on condition that he use it to found a moral elevation society. Romance, however, between his daughter, Ruby Keeler, and Powell, who want to produce a show, complicates the already embarrassing situation in which Kibbee finds himself with the golddigging Joan Blondell. As the story permits three outstanding music, dance-spectacle numbers, "Girl at the Ironing Board" (Miss Blondell and chorus), "Eyes for You" (Miss Keeler, Powell and chorus) and the sensational "Dames," in which entire company participates, the windup has Herbert financing the Powell-Ruby Keeler love match and the show and taking Miss Blondell as his wife to assist in spending the fortune.

THE CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA

Columbia

This comedy drama is adapted from a widely read novel by Wallace Smith. The screen play is by Smith and Arnold Belgard. Direction is by Lewis Milestone, most recently credited with "Rain" and "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum," but best remembered for "All Quiet on the Western Front."

Principals in the cast include several familiar and a pair of new screen names. John Gilbert heads the roster, which features Victor McLaglen, Fred Keating, legitimate stage recruit who has appeared in many Warner Brothers shorts; Wynne Gibson, featured in several Paramount productions, Alison Skipworth, currently in "Shoot the Works"; Florence Rice, daughter of the noted sportswriter, Grantland Rice, making her film debut, and Leon Errol.

All action takes place on a liner bound from San Pedro to New York. As McLaglen, in typical dumb detective fashion, endeavors to recover a stolen bond which he believes is in the possession of slick crook Keating, the situation becomes comically complicated by an endless chain of romantic meanderings. Dialogue indicating that the action will build to quick surprises, baffling not only to the participants therein but likewise the audiences, the show concentrates on accentuating the semi-hokum comedy element.

The yarn looks to be an outstanding value for mass consumption and suggests a line of tricky and novel showmanship for creating interest.

U. S. EXHIBITORS BUYING BRITISH WITHOUT "FEELERS," SAYS SCHENCK

Alexander Korda's Six Next Season Will Be Sold on Same Terms as Other United Artists Product, Says Executive

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Joseph Schenck talked very freely of the merits—and shortcomings—of British production when he met the press boys at Claridge's the other evening.

British pictures, he told us, had got beyond the stage at which they had to be sold "tentatively" in America. Until recently, it was a case of one exhibitor cautiously trying out the imported feature and the next waiting to see what happened before he risked a date. This piecemeal method of selling was no longer necessary, Mr. Schenck said.

United Artists had had no difficulty in selling London and B & D films in advance, on a percentage basis, he declared. What they wanted was an assurance from the British studios that the product would be there for the dates given the exhibitor. Alexander Korda is to make at least six pictures a year for United Artists release on the same terms as its other releases.

Korda had plenty of subjects, said Schenck, and United Artists wanted him to use artists like Fredric March and Ronald Colman and would help in every other possible way.

There are to be discussions also between Hubert Marsh of B & D and the United Artists chief, who said United definitely would release "Brewster's Millions," with Jack Buchanan, in the States, but that he was viewing "Nell Gwyn" before coming to a decision. Censor difficulties are hinted.

The big news about B & D was that Herbert Wilcox, in New York, had arranged with D. W. Griffith to direct "The Old Curiosity Shop" here. It appears that D. W. was down at the Ile de France seeing Mr. Schenck off. He is in first class health again, said the executive.

"The Private Life of Don Juan" is to open the London Pavilion when United Artists reopens the reconstructed building in September. If the building is not ready, the London film will go into the Leicester Square theatre.

Chaplin Working to a Scenario

Charlie Chaplin working to a cast-iron scenario is a miracle in prospect, said Mr. Schenck.

The United Artists executive said that in Hollywood he had seen sets already built at the Chaplin studio which he called among the most ambitious he has seen in any studio.

It is the fact that production is to be on a big scale mechanically—huge factory sets implying the employment of thousands of extras are scheduled—which has induced, or rather compelled, Chaplin to abandon his usual leisurely and temperamental style of production, said Mr. Schenck.

"Charlie has a new method of presentation in view," said he, "and production is going to be a big job for him, and entail enormous overheads. Therefore, he has for a year past been getting the film down on paper and told me that he had it all complete, down to the last gag.

"This is a big change from his usual method of shooting his films in single scenes, perhaps at intervals of several months, but then the whole thing is going to be on new lines.

"The subject? Well, all I can say is that it is going to be a presentation, from a humorous angle, of some of the outstanding facts of the present day world.

"Of course it will be silent. Charlie doesn't need to talk, and he is not likely to let anyone else talk."

European Activities Centered

The announcement by Mr. Schenck that United Artists is to make London the headquarters of all its business activities in Europe is a big compliment to Murray Silverstone.

Mr. Silverstone is to be European general manager, and will extend his offices and personnel here in order to cover, as an extra activity, all the business previously transacted from Paris as a center.

"It is a case of losing a little geographically in order to make use of the abilities of one of our best executives," is how Mr. Schenck put it.

Elstree Expanding

Three production companies are negotiating for land for studio erection at Elstree, a total area of 100 acres being mentioned.

While no names officially are stated, London Film Productions, Ltd., is believed to be one of the companies concerned.

J. V. Bryson's Consolidated Studio (once Whitehall) is adding three stages. London has been using space here for "The Shape of Things to Come."

Instructional Films

Gaumont British Instructional Film displayed the first seven of its new output of educational subjects to an audience of teachers at the Academy.

H. Ramsbotham, M.P., Parliamentary secretary to the Board of Education, spoke and a questionnaire was circulated, to get the expert reaction of the audience as a guide to future production.

The same procedure is being followed throughout the country.

Sophie Tucker has been signed by British Lion for a part in "Gay Love," now in progress under Leslie Hiscott's direction at Beaconsfield.

Tobis Film Distribution, Ltd., has been registered with a nominal (£100) capital to introduce French and German films recorded on the Tobis system.

Joseph P. Kennedy Head of Federal Securities Board

Joseph P. Kennedy, capitalist and former motion picture executive, on Tuesday assumed the office of chairman of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, where he will make his headquarters for the next five years.

Mr. Kennedy was unanimously elected to the chairmanship of the commission after a long session of Monday, marking the first meeting of the group. The appointment served to put an end to the differences between Mr. Kennedy and Ferdinand Pecora, Senate counsel in the stock market and banking investigations last year. Mr. Pecora, during the course of the investigations, unearthed evidence which revealed Mr. Kennedy as a participant with members of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Walter P. Chrysler, Lehman Bros., and others, in a Stock Exchange syndicate that operated in 145,000 shares of the common stock of Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. That was generally understood to be the reason behind the opposition of Mr. Pecora to Mr. Kennedy's appointment as chairman of the commission.

Although Mr. Pecora arrived in Washington from New York on Monday undetermined as to whether or not he would even accept a nomination to serve as a member of the commission, he was sworn in later in the day along with other members.

As the day's session ended, Mr. Pecora and Mr. Kennedy emerged from the conference chamber, arm in arm, and marched down the corridor, smiling and chatting, "chipper," according to the New York Times, "as two long-parted and suddenly reunited brothers."

Mr. Kennedy, who is a son-in-law of former Mayor James F. Fitzgerald of Boston, is a Democrat of note in Massachusetts and a former Harvard man, graduating four years after President Roosevelt. He has been one of the President's closest friends for many years, and contributed a large sum to the Roosevelt presidential campaign.

His banking career started immediately after his graduation from Harvard in 1912, beginning as a state banking examiner in Massachusetts and then working in his father's bank, the Columbia Trust Company. At the age of 25 he was made president.

Later he terminated his banking activities to become the Boston office manager of Hayden, Stone & Company, which was the beginning of a long Wall Street career. Subsequently he became interested in the motion picture industry and purchased the FBO company, later selling the company to Radio Corporation of America, which changed the FBO name to RKO. Mr. Kennedy then became active in the affairs of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and when Pathe sold out and merged with RKO Mr. Kennedy retired from film affairs.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 231.—(A) What is meant by refraction of light? (B) For all practical purposes what may it be assumed the amount of refraction light will receive in passing from air to glass or vice versa will depend? (C) What is the speed of light per second? (D) Why will a ray of light that is perpendicular to the surface of a lens where it is encountered pass that surface without refraction? (E) Does a ray meeting a glass lens surface at right angles (perpendicular to the surface) all pass into the lens?

Answer to Question No. 225

Blue Book School Question No. 225 was: (A) Have odd lenses or combinations of lenses any practical value? (B) What books or publications may be recommended for the projectionist's library? (C) What is your view as to the desirability of examination and license for projectionists?

The answers were most interesting. Because I am myself author of the Bluebook and editor of a department in a trade paper I did not feel I should pass upon section B of the question. I therefore selected three high-class projectionists, turned that section of the answer over to them and accepted their dictum, merely rewriting the answer for publication, the rewrite being okayed by them.

As to section C, there can be such a wide variance of honest opinion that I will not publish any names this time.

(A) I have selected the answer of F. Simms and O. L. Daris as best. These gentlemen say:

"If the question as asked includes only the use of odd lenses or combinations of lenses in projection, they have no value except a possible very minor one in that they may be used as a rather poor magnifying glass to examine film damage, sprocket teeth, et cetera. However, such lenses may have values not connected with projection, such as, for example, a burning glass."

(B) "Brother Richardson: As per your request, we have gone very carefully over such answers to section B of question No. 225 as seemed to have merit, and have unanimously selected that of J. Wentworth as best. We therefore return it with our unanimous okay for publication. The answer reads:

"I believe I am acquainted with all books dealing with presumed authority in motion picture projection and projection procedure as applies to motion pictures. I have them all and have studied them thoroughly, with result that I have been forced to the conclusion that the Bluebook is by far the best of them all, in so far as has to do with volumes 1 and 2, which deal wholly with projection as applies to films.

"Sound Bluebook volume 3 contains much most excellent matter, but it needs bringing up to date and considerable elaboration. (That is now being done.—F. H. R.) It is well worthy of a place in the projectionist's library, but should be supplemented by Nadell's 'Projecting Sound Pictures,' which contains some excellent matter. In addition, I would suggest the following: 'Photo Electric Cells and Their Application,' by Workin, and 'Theory of Theromic Vacuum Tubes,' by Chaffe.

"In addition the following are good for the projectionists' library: 'National Projection Carbons,' National Carbon Company; 'Hawkens Electrical Guides,' Hawkens and Staff; 'Lessons in Practical Electricity,' Swoope; 'Lenses, Mirrors and Prisms,' by Southall, 'Servicing Projection Equipment,' Mancall Publications; 'Visual Fatigue of Motion Pictures,' Aaron Singer. All instruction books issued by projection equipment manufacturers, which same should be kept right up to date.

"As to publications, The Bluebook School in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and the Projection Department of Better Theatres, its monthly equipment edition, should both be kept on file. They are invaluable. The 'International Projectionist' also contains excellent matter."

I believe I should here remark that many who answered cited other works, some of which are excellent; for example, "Optic Projection," which was excellent in its day, but was written 20 years ago.

(C) I have selected what seems to me to be a most excellent answer to section C, though were the "guilty party" named he probably would have a most unpleasant time. This answer reads:

"There can be no manner of doubt but that a really competent, honest examination of projectionists serves an excellent purpose because the fact that they must face it would put the fear of God in the heart and men who must take it would dig in and study. That is, Brother Richardson, beyond dispute, I believe. (So do I —F. H. R.)

"But how many really competent, honest examinations exist in these United States? Are there any? Right here in * * *, examinations are confined to matters pertaining solely to fire hazard, which is truly absurd in so far as has to do with determining the competency of the application in motion picture-sound projection. Moreover, it is charged and, I believe is true, that examinations are influenced by politicians who in effect 'order' that an applicant be passed regardless. It also certainly must be true that union officials have a finger in that pie, else how is it that occasionally a friend of theirs whose competency is purely imaginary goes through like a pig through an open gate. It is said, and I believe truly, that the union official goes to a friendly politician (alderman, etc.) and the F. P. tips the wink to ask only questions a child could answer, and not too many of them.

"Personally I am a union man and, I believe, a loyal one, too. I dispute the loyalty and even the decency of any union officer or member who would be a party to such proceeding. It is unfair to the union: to its other members who must compete with the ignoramus (and we certainly have them right here in * * *); to the profession as a whole; to the exhibitor and to the industry itself.

"I believe an honestly conducted, competent examination of projectionists, or apprentice projectionists is, or at least would certainly be beneficial to all concerned, but an examination based merely on fire hazard is verging upon silly. The examination should be such as will definitely determine whether the applicant is competent to conduct projection safely as to fire hazard and, still more, important, to give audiences the best possible return for their money with the least possible eye fatigue. The examiner represents the public, hence should give a real examination. If he does he will have rendered a very real service. There is but little real fire hazard to audiences now."

Gentlemen, I indorse every word of this answer. The man has good sense and an intelligent comprehension of the whole matter. I do not believe there is an examination in all this broad country that even faintly resembles a competent one. Men are passed right here in New York City who are as competent to assume charge of a projection room as I would be to assume the chair of mathematics in Yale. I can multiply, subtract, divide and do some other things, but I am very far from being a mathematician. It is nothing less than disgraceful the men that have been passed by the New York City licensing board, which, however, still only issues licence cards to machine operators.

On the whole, I think I will append the answer of W. Lempke. It is short and excellent. Here it is:

"Licensing of projectionists is desirable, provided that politicians and politics be kept out of it, and a fair and impartial examination be given to the applicant by competent examiners. Otherwise, it would be better not to have examinations or licenses issued. A man who is not interested in projection and merely keeps working at it just to have a job is more likely to study if he knew he would have to pass an examination in order to keep his position. But on the other hand, if this man's manager were alert he would discharge him before he would have to take the examination; hence, no licensing board would be needed. A competent man does not require a license to do good work; he does it for the satisfaction of doing a good job well and bettering his profession."

Quite true, but there are whole volumes in that: if this man's manager were alert!

POPEYE

WHAT A HIT

Exhibitors and motion picture fans all over the world crowned "POPEYE" the king of screen cartoons.

"The animated cartoon which at the present time is receiving wide-spread interest is 'Popeye the Sailor'. It would seem that he is destined to join the list of animated cartoon immortals. Because it deserves mention and because it is unusually clever, attentian is called to 'Papeye's' latest starring picture 'The Man an the Flying Trapeze'." —Winchester, Ky., Sun

"So often your favorite comic strip characters are disappointing on celluloid. Here at the United Artists is an animated sailor who leaves nothing to be desired by the most ardent 'Popeye' fan... This is the first of the cartoans to come near the standard of perfection. Synchronization and drawing are excellent... We predict a great future for 'Popeye' in the movies." —Chicaga American

"'Popeye the Sailar' cartoons have climbed in seven releases to one of the most popular short features on the screen." —Miami Herald, Miami, Fla.

"'Popeye the Sailor' who appears daily on the News-Telegram comic page, will be shown in Paramount's Popeye cartoon at the following theatres on Saturday: Columbia, Longview, Wash., Isis, Independence Highway, Portland.

You'll have to pardon us while we wax enthusiastic over 'Popeye' again . . . Always artistic, 'Popeye' has some delightful new methods of annihilation, which he displays for the charmer, Oliveoyl." Chicaga-American

"For yousn what just love short subjects, be on the watch-out for 'Popeye and Wimpy', an animated cartoan released by Paramount. It is extremely funny." —New Yark Jaurnal

Newspapers all over the country tie-up with theatres as "POPEYE" popeyelarity sweeps the nation.

BETTY BOOP

THE LITTLE SWEETHEART OF THE SCREEN

"A 'Betty Boop' short fills the progrom thot may truly be termed a borgain in pleosure." —Harrisburg, Pa., Patriot

COLOR CARTOONS

Paramount will produce six color cartoons in 1934-35

We believe that the new Max Fleischer series of COLOR CARTOONS will be such important factors in building entertainment programs in 1934-35 that we have devoted another page to them in order to depict in full color some of the interesting characters that will appear in them.

Below are also reproduced three of the sets used in making these pictures. These sets are so arranged as to produce a special stereoscopic effect, giving the pictures a third dimension . . .

PETE SMITH

SHORT SHOWMANSHIP

Pete Smith, Long on Experience in Promotion, Points Ways to Capitalizing on Short Product

"Publicity man becomes one-sheet" would have made a neat heading for this item. The many friends of Mr. Pete Smith, for some years a resident of these parts and ubiquitous in the promotional affairs of the motion picture on and about Broadway, has now been completely converted, by the transmutation processes of Hollywood and the MGM lot, into a "name." Pete has thus in effect become a demonstration of his own medicine, talking himself off the typewriter on to the screen and the "boardings." If his voice holds out, like as not Pete will ere long become a twenty-four sheet. As a friend and contemporary on Broadway, we cast about for a properly appreciative interviewer to deal with this situation and found him—in the person of Mr. Pete Smith, who quotes himself ably in the subjoined copy.—THE EDITOR.

"For seventeen years . . . or is it seventy? . . . I have been splitting infinitives between splitting headaches," says Pete Smith, "in an effort to tell the world and his wife about this picture or that one . . . or about the new, glamorous, irresistible beauty Joe Doakes 'discovered' in the harem of Abdul the Magnificent and who was about to rise to unprecedented heights as a flaming star of Unequalled Pictures Corp.

"Splitting the infinitives was not so difficult for an old infinitive splitter like myself . . . but curing the headaches resulting from a lack of exploitation possibilities or publicity angles in some of the pictures proved quite a task . . . in fact several tasks.

"Those seventeen years of searching for sales slants in all the fifty-seven varieties of motion picture productions now simplifies to some degree the problem of making short subjects with definite exploitation and publicity angles.

"In making MGM shorts, we often have discarded what otherwise might have made an interesting subject for the sole reason that it offered nothing in the way of an exploitation idea. Making shorts that deserve exploitation is one problem . . . and making them with an angle that the exhibitor can sell is another.

"Let's take the bowling short, 'Strikes and Spares,' for example. There's a ten strike for an exploitation subject—with no pun intended. There are more than 6,000,000 organized bowlers in the United States and they're the most rabid fans you'll find outside of a psychopathic ward.

And Twice As Many More

"In addition to the 6,000,000 bowlers who belong to the American Bowling Congress there probably are at least twice that many who do not take their bowling quite so seriously and therefore do not belong to the organization.

"The national body as well as the individual associations in the various cities throughout the country will go the limit in exploiting this picture. They will arrange theatre parties, place posters in all the bowling alleys, circularize the members of their organization and in other ways get behind 'Strikes and Spares.'

"The sensational plays by Andy Varipapa make good sport page publicity, and when we call his shots sensational we are being ultra conservative. He can make a bowling ball say 'uncle' in eleven languages.

"Stepping from bowling balls to baby bawls . . . there's no limit to the exploitation possibilities in the short 'Taking Care of Baby.' Baby contests, newspaper photo concerts, tieups with stores handling baby clothes, baby style shows and any number of additional ideas suggest themselves.

Baby Picture Easiest

"A baby picture is about the easiest type of photograph to get published, which should make it easy to get newspaper space.

"Few subjects of a sporting nature have caused as much controversy as pro football versus the college game, which is the reason behind the making of the short entitled 'Pro Football.' This national argument about the relative merits of the two styles of play can be revived in the newspapers, among college students and on the air with talks by athletic coaches.

"Any number of exhibitors are today ballyhooing their short subjects, when they have something they can sell, and are discovering that in doing so they also open new channels for exploiting their featured attractions."

Segall Is Elected To Head New Slate Of Exhibitor Unit

Charles Segall was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware last week, at the head of an entirely new slate, following the resignation of all officers.

Other officers elected were: Harold D. Cohen, first vice-president; Michael Egnal, second vice-president; Mike Leffy, treasurer; Marcus Benn, financial secretary; George P. Aarons, secretary. Named to the board of managers, which was increased to 12, were: Ed Jeffries, Mr. Benn, Morris Gerson, Luke Gring, Leonard Schlessinger, Abe Sabolsky, Morris Spiers, Lou Felt, Joseph Conway, I. Hoffman, Morris Handle, Fred Leopold.

Lewen Pizor was made an honorary member of the board with a right to vote. The members also voted to retain the present name and remain with the national body. Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, reviewed the code situation and defended the MPTOA. He insisted it was necessary to give the code a fair chance.

M. E. Comerford called on the meeting to pass a resolution asking producers to clean up films and watch advertising. He said he believed about 80 per cent of the present complaints are justified. At a luncheon later George Dembow of National Screen Service said distributor participation in trailer selling soon would raise another score charge problem. A resolution was passed asking MGM not to lay an added expense on exhibitors by launching its own trailer service.

Charney Handles Agfa

C. King Charney this week was appointed as distributor of Agfa 35mm. negative and positive film for the United States. The appointment was announced by R. H. Woodford, vice-president of the Agfa Ansco Corp.

Supplement Press Book

Raspin Productions has added a supplement to its press book on Edwin Carewe's "Are We Civilized," of several hundred endorsements of the picture. The book contains 16 pages of material and accessories.

Savini Closes Deals

R. M. Savini, president of the B 'N' B Corporation, has closed distribution deals with Charles Tarbox, of F. C. Pictures Corporation, Buffalo, and D. C. Millward of Cosmopolitan Film Exchange, Seattle, on the series of 12 Bud 'n' Ben three-reel western comedies.

Cohen Extends Holdings

Sydney S. Cohen, former president of the MPTOA, and now president of North Castle Properties, Inc., has purchased from the Stephen H. Briggs Estate a large block of property in the business section of Armonk, Westchester County, N. Y.

Of Human Bondage

(Radio)

Dramatic Romance

This is serious, almost too sombre, dramatic romance. It is keyed to play upon the most tender human emotions and sympathies. Contrary to the customary technique, a man is the character for whom sympathy is created. A woman is the one who stimulates those emotions. The picture is convincingly acted and directed, with Bette Davis proving a surprise. Where good acting is understood and appreciated, it has impressive qualities. However, where folk think they have enough troubles of their own and are but little concerned with the life tragedies of fictionary characters, there is a depressing tone.

It's the story of a man, Philip Carey, who loved one woman, Mildred, who had many loves. Club-footed, Carey wins sympathy from the outset. Fascinated by the girl whom he is happy to have tolerate him despite his deformity, Philip, unmindful of her cruel insults and against the advice of his friends, takes her back time after time as she regrets some new scarlet adventure. Nora tries to make him see the light, but her love for him cannot overcome his for Mildred. Eventually, coming under the influence of Athelny, who recognizes his potentialities, he submits to an operation rectifying his deformity. Another girl, Sally, Athelny's daughter, comes into his life and points the way to happiness. This Carey achieves in a tensely dramatic sequence with the now dissolute Mildred. Spurning her final appeal, he sends her away, knowing that she is going straight to her grave.

The subject matter of this story has been intelligently handled. At no time is it distasteful. Yet because of the theme, and recognizing the quality of the acting, something other than ordinary methods will be necessary if the show is to be successfully sold. Strength of cast names should be capitalized upon, as should the interest-creating influence of the story's author, W. Somerset Maugham.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by John Cromwell. Produced by Pandro S. Berman. Story by W. Somerset Maughan. Screen play by Lester Cohen. Photographed by Henry W. Gerrard. Here Comes the Navy

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

Lots of novel showmanship entertainment phases are to be found in this production. Its unusual production value made more thrilling by exceptional Navy cooperation, it is a fine patriotic tribute to USN character. Also, it's a piece of entertainment merchandise, which runs the whole scale of elements ordinarily attractive to old and young. Rough and robust without being ribald, it's tuned to a modern pitch. It moves fast, with rapid-fire dialogue.

The picture plays upon the emotions in two ways. It should be difficult for those who watch the spectacular Navy parade—the entire fleet, battle maneuvers, life aboard the ships, etc.—not to glow with pride. Similarly the sustaining comedy, drama, romance, adventure, thrill and danger, all motivated by an unusual human interest, are differently effective.

Given a comedy atmosphere right at the start, the story concerns two men and a woman. Aired by his lady love, Gladys, when he loses a dance hall brawl and also the prize waltz to petty officer Biff, Chesty decides he'll join the Navy to get even. Once in, the various phases of training recruits are depicted, Chesty is assigned to the Arizona, Biff's ship. Then the brawling between the two, contrasted by Droopy's running gag comedy, gets hot to explode when Biff finds that Chesty is loved by his sister, Dorothy. As the Navy tries to make a man out of Chesty, that worthy fails to respond to treatment and even though he is decorated for preventing a turret room disaster, the Navy decides he'd be better off elsewhere and transfers him to the dirigible Macon. That's the build-up for the topical news climax, when Chesty, again disobeying orders, rescues Biff from the end of a rope dangling in midair as the Macon is unable to make a landing. A real sock thrill, this sequence clears the way for a peppy climax which has the pair still brawling until the parson silences them so that he can proceed with the wedding ceremony.

In cast, production, story and acting values, this picture has the entertainment quality that merits a real campaign. It's a natural for Navy, veteran and patriotic group contacts. Sell it in the same spirit in which it has been made, with the advance campaign carrying a convincing ring.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Black Moon

Melodrama

Melodramatic material, dealing with the black magic of the Island of Haiti, more commonly known as Voodoo, "Black Moon" intertwines romance, action, drama and a suspense thrill or two, all of which combine to bring this into the category of fast-moving entertainment, which should be comparatively easy in the selling. The origin, a Cosmopolitan Magazine story, should be a point worth stressing.

The Jack Holt name in the leading role should give a pretty clear indication that an action film is to be expected. Fay Wray and Dorothy Burgess share the honors in the feminine lead.

Located in the early sequences in New York, and for the rest in Haiti, the film carries plenty of atmosphere, about which ballyhoo may be engendered. In that the colored natives involved in the film are rather harshly pictured as blood-thirsty worshippers of black gods who indulge in sacrificial orgies, the film may meet with objection in those situations where colored people make up a portion of the patronage.

There should be effectiveness in copy lines indicating the plot theme which finds a white woman, brought up among the natives, answering the call of the black voodoo, and the husband, in his turn, forced to sacrifice his wife for his small child. The selling may well bring the best results if it be couched along more or less melodramatic lines.

Miss Burgess, wife of the wealthy Holt, is about to make a trip with him to Haiti, where she was born and brought up by an uncle after the death of her parents, and under the care of a black woman as nurse. Holt is warned by a physician that his wife should be permitted to make her own fight against whatever is causing her to be restless and unstrung. Holt begs off from accompanying his wife and baby, played by Cora Sue Collins, and sends his secretary, Miss Wray, to look after things.

No sooner do they arrive in Haiti than the rumblings of Voodoo drums disturb the peace of the country. Her uncle attempts to prevail on Miss Burgess to leave by the next boat, since her presence, he believes, will result in serious trouble. Miss Wray wirelesses Holt to set sail from New York as soon as possible.

Clarence Muse, negro boatman from the United States, guides Holt to the scene of a Voodo sacrificial ceremony, and there Holt finds his wife acting as high priestess, dancing before the howling blacks in an ecstasy of religious fanaticism. When Miss Burgess returns to the house, she is followed by the horde of natives, and Miss Wray, the uncle, the baby and Holt seek refuge in the tower of the building. Eventually they are captured, the baby is demanded by the blacks for sacrifice, and after an initial escape, Holt and Muse dash back to the ceremony in the hills, just as Miss Burgess, against her will, is forced to make a sacrifice of her daughter. Holt kills his wife, saves the child, and Miss Wray, who loves Holt and he and the child sail home to a new life.—Aaronson, New York.

The Merry Frinks

(Warner)

Comedy-Drama

Moments of hilarious comedy alternate with touches of pathos and a suspicion of a tear incentive in "The Merry Frinks." Properly sold, copy will emphasize that here is lively entertainment of a somewhat different sort.

It is localed almost exclusively within the extremely narrow confines of the home of the Frinks, a highly unpretentious apartment somewhere uptown in New York City, which might be almost anywhere in any city. The point to get across is that these Frinks are ordinary folk, that with a bit of exaggeration, to be sure (which enhances the entertainment value of the picture), the audience will see themselves as others see them.

A grand conglomeration of what goes on within that family of Frinks, we have their squabbles, their petty jealousies, their equally petty and misguided ambitions, and through it all the figure of the mother, who continuously bears the brunt of the attack from all sides, the one who frantically, and for the most part successfully, holds the trigger-edge elements of the Frink family together.

The roles are excellently taken in all cases, with special attention going to Aline MacMahon as Mrs. Frink, Hugh Herbert as Mr. Frink, Allen Jenkins as the eldest son, and other good names, including Guy Kibbee, Helen Lowell, Frankie Darro. Those names indicate the necessity of hitting the comedy note in the selling.

We find this prize collection of Frinks disporting themselves each in his or her own peculiarly selfish way, with the exception of Mrs. Frink. Herbert is an almost perpetually inebriated newspaper sports writer, whose jobs never last long. Jenkins is the young lawyer, who is heart and soul and very loud-voiced in the interests of "the workers," and his denunciation of capitalism. Miss Lowell is the cantankerous old grandmother; Darro is the truant-playing youngster with an ambition toward the squared circle; Joan Wheeler is the young daughter with considerably more confidence in her singing ability than has any other member of the family, whose wabbling romance with straight and steady James Bush Ma Frink is trying her best to bolster. Into the melange walks Australian Uncle Newt, played entertainingly by Kibbee, to stay for life.

Trouble piles on trouble for Ma Frink until Uncle Newt, making his own supper, eats sufficient to accumulate acute indigestion and pass on. Trouble with a married man and the daughter, and more inebriation on the part of Herbert, and Ma Frink breaks down, telling her family she is through. Just then in walks a lawyer with a will leaving a million dollars or so to Ma, and she goes away to sumptuous apartments, beauty parlors and a gigolo for companionship. The family goes from bad to worse, if possible, in her absence, until, again reaching a breaking point, they rush headlong after Mom, catching her just as she is boarding a plane for Palm Beach. Her family acknowledges its collective selfishness, and happiness is restored.

Lively, entertaining comedy, this should be good for almost any type of audience and played any time.—AARONSON, New York.

Animal Antics
(Paramount)
Interesting

An interesting number of the Grantland Rice Sportlight series, although hardly ranking with several of the more active numbers of the series, this pictures something of the training of wild animals. Seen are two polar bears, engaged in a friendly boxing match; a group of beautiful and highly trained Arabian horses, and the manner of training and developing lions at a well known lion farm in California.—Running time, 10 minutes.

BRITISH PICTURES SHOWN IN LONDON

OVER THE GARDEN WALL

B. I. P. production, distributed by Wardour Films, Ltd. Directed by John Daumery. Features Bobby Howes, Marian Marsh, Margaret Bannerman, Bertha Belmore and Fred Watts.

Here is farce plus songs. Bobby Howes is well cast as the impecunious lover of "the girl next door" whom he persuades to elope and, in a London hotel, to pose as his sister until it is legally possible to marry her. (It takes three weeks in this country.) In a one-man show he sings well and puts over the comedy stuff—which includes the commandeering of a fire-wagon in a dash to catch the girl—with good spirit. Authentic London atmosphere. Moves quickly.—B. A.

SOMETHING ALWAYS HAPPENS

Produced by Warner Bros.-First National Pictures, Ltd., and distributed by Warner Bros., Ltd. Directed by Michael Powell. Features Ian Hunter, Nancy O'Neill, Muriel George and Peter Gawthorne.

Ian Hunter, male lead here, is slated for Hollywood. He makes the best of a not too convincing romantic - salesman - becomes - business-magnate role. He starts a petrol-station enterprise in rivalry with the father of the girl he wants, and gets her by beating the old man to it. Fair, light entertainment, it is chiefly interesting as providing an American introduction to Hunter.—B. A.

NO ESCAPE

Produced by Warner Bros.-First National Pictures, Ltd., and distributed by Warner Bros., Ltd. Directed by Ralph Ince. Features Ian Hunter, Binnie Barnes, Molly Lamont and Ralph Ince.

The hero has been in contact with a case of bubonic plague aboard ship, and is trailed through London by the police, who expect him to start an epidemic. Otherwise the plot is more or less to pattern; the hero wrongfully accused of poisoning his pal and finally cleared by confession of the pal's wife. The infection danger is used to provide fair suspense. Settings are the Malay jungle, Singapore, and liner and English country. Ince is the best player and his straightforward direction good.—B. A.

Strong to the Finich
(Paramount)
Good

Another of the excellently entertaining Popeye, the Sailor animated cartoons, this finds Olive Oyl with a flock of children at her health farm resentful of the spinach they must eat. Popeye arrives and proceeds to demonstrate to what extent spinach can produce the strength that only he possesses. It is highly enjoyable for both youngsters and oldsters.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Burn 'Em Up Barns
(Mascot)
Fast Action

If the episodes to follow are as completely crammed with action as are the first two of this new Mascot serial, the exhibitor may be assured of something which should be a good drawing card for the younger element among his patronage. Thrills and crashes, breakneck speed and dare-deviltry on automobile or motorcycle, villains and the hero protecting the property of the girl he loves and with whom he is a partner in a garage. It is all there, with each episode concluding on the proper note of suspense and impending danger for the hero. It is happily true, as far as is indicated in two episodes, that comparatively little footage in each following episode is devoted to a repeat on the closing sequences of the previous episode. In the cast are Jack Mullhall, Frankie Darro, Lola Lane, fighting for their rights, and the villainy led by Edwin Maxwell and Jason Robards. At the moment it looks like a good selling bet for the exhibitor, hitting at the youngsters in his patronage. Each episode of 12 runs approximately 20 minutes.

Hollywood on Parade—No. 13
Fan Interest

This should be an entertaining short subject for screen fans who like to see the stars of Hollywood in moments off the set. Shown in this number are Buster Crabbe, trying to ride a Texas longhorn steer; with a novel method of introduction, the 13 Wampas Baby Stars of 1934, selected as budding star material, and several other personalities. Rates about on a par with others of this series.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial—No. 12
(Paramount)
Fair

Only a fair number of the series, this subject contains an interesting nature study of the tiny humming bird in action and at rest; an amusing sartorial review of what the well-dessed Englishman will wear; the application of the art of makeup to the feminine physiognomy, and another sequence of a noted composer of popular song hits shown in action, with his orchestra and vocally. A fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial
Of Interest

This, number 11 of the Pictorial series, holds the interest with a diversity of subjects, including an interesting photographic description of the methods of making the perfect lenses used in the all-important microscope, and the rendition, by Ralph Rainger, of certain of his own more popular song successes of the day. The subject should be found of general interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Says Campaign Is Challenge to Women

The purification of motion pictures presents a challenge to Catholic women the country over that is worthy of "their best thought and action," Mrs. Harry LeBerge, vice-president of the National Council of Catholic Women, said before a luncheon in Portland, Ore., in honor of Archbishop Edward D. Howard last week.

"The movies constitute a menace to morals, homes and good government, and their salacious and obscene advertising on our billboards would make even a pagan blush. Movie producers must be taught through their cash registers that the public will not tolerate indecent films."

Fears $3,000,000 Loss

P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, said last week he estimates that if the move against salacious pictures keeps only 10 per cent of the people of Ohio away from theatres, the loss to exhibitors of the state will be in excess of $3,000,000 annually.

ANOTHER FOUR ★★★★ STAR PICTURE

FOUR STARS

WANDA HALE in N. Y. DAILY NEWS (FOUR STARS ★★★★)

Yesterday's premiere audience at the Music Hall broke out in unrestrained applause. Radio Pictures has turned out in "Of Human Bondage" a picture that is at once absorbing, intense and convincing. Such a piece of filmcraft certainly could not have been turned out with any actor of less brilliance than Leslie Howard, who invests his role with a sympathy and an understanding that fit almost exactly the fine and sensitive demands of the W. Somerset Maugham classic . . . here we find Bette Davis doing a job that is so revealing as to make one ask, "Where's that girl been all this while?"... deserved glory.

REGINA CREWE in N. Y. AMERICAN

The milling throngs that stormed the Radio City Music Hall yesterday attested to the fact that a Hollywood hero does not necessarily have to be an Adonis or a crooner to succeed. Leslie Howard has made an indelible impression on the minds of men and the hearts of women . . . the film is a poignant portrait, sympathetically treated by Director John Cromwell and glossed by the polished performances of an unusually fine cast.

RICHARD WATTS, JR. in N. Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

Leslie Howard must certainly be the most satisfying actor on the English-speaking stage. There is a splendid air of rightness about everything he does. Thereupon, the mere fact of his appearance in the screen edition of that brilliant novel, "Of Human Bondage", provides the picture with dignity, power and dramatic effectiveness. As a photoplay, "Of Human Bondage" is definitely superior to the average . . . well written . . . good photoplay, made something more than that by Mr. Howard's perfect performance.

WILLIAM BOEHNEL in N. Y. WORLD-TELEGRAM

A dignified, sensitive, eminently satisfying screen treatment has been accorded "Of Human Bondage". W. Somerset Maugham's magnificent story . . . the film now on view at the Radio City Music Hall emerges a distinguished contribution to the cinema . . . adapted by Lester Cohn with such fine appreciation for the muted sorrow that is hidden in the novel's pages . . . that it has, as precious few films can claim to have, a true beauty in its writing. John Cromwell has done an extra fine job of direction, and the performances are excellent. Leslie Howard comes off with the first honors.

"Bondage" Opens Big

RKO's "Of Human Bondage," on its opening day at the Music Hall, played to the best receipts of any picture since "Cavalcade" and "Little Women". Indications are that the picture will be held over a second week.

BLAND JOHANESON in N. Y. DAILY MIRROR

A brilliantly acted film version of the Maugham novel.

Miss Davis will astound you . . . a dramatic character actress of overwhelming power. Touching and infinitely tender, it is a simple description of a devastating fascination. Leslie Howard's performance is exquisite. He plays it with his usual warmth, tenderness and understanding.

MORDAUNT HALL in N. Y. TIMES

The very lifelike quality of the story and the marked authenticity of its atmosphere cause the spectators to hang on every word uttered by the interesting group of characters . . . one might be tempted to say that his portrait of Philip Carey excels any performance he has given before the camera. No more expert illustration of getting under the skin of the character has been done in motion pictures.

Another enormously effective portrayal is that of Bette Davis . . . outburst of applause when the film came to an end. John Cromwell, the director, has given many a subtle and imaginative touch to his scenes. There is nothing stereotyped about this film.

EILEEN CREELMAN in N. Y. SUN

Once in a while it happens that a fine book may become a fine picture. Of Somerset Maugham's modern classic, "Of Human Bondage", be it gratefully recorded, this is true.

Adaptor Lester Cohen, and director John Cromwell, have treated the book with honesty and vigor.

Leslie Howard, of course, is perfectly cast . . . Bette Davis's portrayal of the tawdry Cockney waitress, a performance as humorous as it is powerful, was something of a surprise. This Miss Davis is an actress rather than a screen beauty in this difficult part. It is, this "Of Human Bondage", a picture to be seen.

ROSE PELSWICK in N. Y. EVENING JOURNAL

In transferring "Of Human Bondage" to the screen, director John Cromwell and adaptor Lester Cohen have done well . . . with intelligent understanding, those responsible for the picture have made it a sombrely interesting narrative. Bette Davis sheds the artificiality of her previous parts, and her portrait of the tawdry waitress, Mildred, is excellent even to her Cockney accents . . . yesterday noon's Music Hall audience broke into enthusiastic applause.

The picture is handsomely mounted and was obviously filmed with a great deal of care and thought.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

BEFORE MIDNIGHT: Ralph Bellamy—Just fair mystery. Okay where mysteries are liked; not so good here, though. Running time, seven reels. Played May 15-16.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—Buck Jones rings up another score. Plenty of action and a good family picture. Played 18-19 on Family Nights.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—Excellent western with plenty of action. Should satisfy those who are looking for such. Played June 15-16.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong, Ann Suthern—This is a mighty good entertaining newspaper story. Ann Sothern is fine and Robert Armstrong is always good. The whole cast is good. I call it better than the average program picture. Our patrons mentioned it. Played June 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Marvelous entertainment. Did a grand business and first picture ever to run five days in my town. Give it all the best playing time you can and it will surely bring them in.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable—Nothing can be added to the praise of this picture from what has already been said by other exhibitors. Some came the second time to see it. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 21-22.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—One of the best pictures we have played this year. Has mass appeal. It's clean entertainment and a box-office success. Could have used it an extra day, which is very unusual for my town. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby, Rex—Very good western. Played June 12-13.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Good western. Westerns are always clean, hence extra patronage from the kids whose mothers pick their shows.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young—This picture is absolutely unsuited to small towns. Columbia calls it a big special and it is anything but this. While the principals did excellent acting and the story might appeal to intellectuals, it does not draw and has no place in the small town theatre. It is not a picture for children. I am sorry I played it. It suffered several walkouts, something very unusual in my town. Running time, 73 minutes.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro—A good picture of its kind with a four-star rating, but it meant nothing at the box-office. Played June 16-17.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—Good little family feature. Used it on my Wednesday and Thursday Family Nights and every one liked it very much. Played May 2-3.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SONG YOU GAVE ME, THE: Bebe Daniels, Victor Varconi—What a flop this is. Too much English in this one. No good old American community can take pictures of this type. Played April 25-26.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—I didn't see this myself, but the cash box proved it didn't attract very many visitors. Played June 19-20.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard—What a wanton waste of effort. Any one who could sit through this idiotic thing should be given a free pass to theatres for the remainder of his life. Have never seen them walk out on a feature so fast in my life. Every one was right astraddle of my neck. Poor John Barrymore will put himself right out of the game with another like this. Did a marvelous business first day, but comment was so unfavorable I put it on the shelf. Thank heaven we can do that.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Jean Parker—This type of picture would go over in a big town much better than in suburban houses because it appeals only to a certain class of people and as no one under 16 is allowed to see it you lose the younger element, and in lots of cases the parents who can't bring the kiddies do not come themselves. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 28-29.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt—Very good Holt picture. I believe they are cutting out some of the smut in pictures. Okay, boys; keep up the good work. Running time, eight reels. Played May 26-27.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt—Jack Holt gives us another fairly good little picture. Did a good business and pleased. Played April 11-12 on Family Nights.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

WRECKER, THE: Jack Holt, Genevieve Tobin—A fine action picture that would have gone over big here but for the fact that I ran it with "What Price Innocence" and all young folk under 16 were excluded, so we suffered accordingly. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 28-29.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

First Division

ROAD TO RUIN: Helen Foster, Paul Page—A very nice show with business above expectations. I believe it will click in any house.—L. S. Gilligan, Tall Corn Theatre, Kanawha, Iowa. General patronage.

ROAD TO RUIN: Helen Foster, Paul Page—Played to capacity shows and broke all midweek records in my theatre. People liked the picture and received many favorable comments. Enuf said.—C. H. Sartorius, Capitol Theatre, Hartley, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

BEDSIDE: Warren William—A palooka which I had to double feature. Warner wouldn't let me do it with one of theirs, but there are enough punks from other companies to make up for it.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

BEDSIDE: Warren William, Jean Muir—A very good entertaining picture of its kind. The whole cast was fine. The cast being so good made the picture. The story was rather thin and it took good acting to save it. They did and people were satisfied with the show. Played June 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis, Margaret Lindsay, Lyle Talbot, Donald Woods—This released but recently and as it proved excellent entertainment I am anxious to pass along promptly the good news. The action is fast and has plenty of thrills. We ran it on our Family Night and it pleased everybody. Little better than average receipts. Played June 16.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Not so hot. Very much disappointed in this one, both on the screen and at the box-office. Played April 22-23-24.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess—The ideal small town picture and very much enjoyed by adults and children. Not a single criticism. Better than average receipts. Played June 14-15.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon—Here is real comedy. Aline MacMahon as Ma Frink can't be beaten. Played this on Family Days and satisfied good crowds. Played June 19-20.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—And the producers deny making dirty pictures. This one is about the worst yet, swapping husbands and wives at wholesale. No wonder the churches and people are hollering for cleaner pictures. A few like this will make any one holler.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—This is a little old, but good. Every one liked it who likes Brown. Running time, eight reels. Played May 8-9.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—Another good one from Warner. No smutty remarks as in some of their releases. Too bad we don't get more like this one as the box-office can stand it during this hot weather. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 14-15.—Frank A. Finger, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers.—This is a natural. Warner Brothers surely know how to put it into their musicals. Did a good business and every one liked it. Played June 3-4-5.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—Joe E. Brown does not go in my town. People here did not like the picture and I surely did a poor business. This is the first time he has ever played in my house. No good. Played June 1-2.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio—This one, while it had played all around here, still did a whale of a business in a town where pictures don't stand up more than two days. Nuf sed.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson—Played this late and didn't do the business I should have because of the fact that a larger town near by ran it in April, and so thoroughly covered my territory with advertising that most all the folks that wanted to see it went to see it during its four-day run in that town. Don't think this picture will compare with "Gold Diggers of 1933" or "Footlight Parade" in small towns. I didn't do but 50 per cent of the business that I did on "Gold Diggers of 1933" or "Footlight Parade." Played June 21-22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio—Excellent as are all of Warner Brothers musicals. Did a swell business and every one liked it. Played May 13-14-15.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, Sid Silvers—This fellow Spencer Tracy always good. Never played a star more pleasing. Even in some trite pictures they like Spencer. I like him I guess because he's about as handsome as Dad Jenkins and myself. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 17-18.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy—Much better than some of the specials. You can boost this and it will satisfy. Clean and good for any day. Running time, eight reels. Played May 12-13.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: "Pat" Paterson, Herbert Mundin—A racehorse story. Plenty of comedy and a whiz bang ending. Every one liked it. Played June 19-20.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—A sweet picture that was well liked by all who saw it. For some reason it didn't do any extra business here to my surprise, for I expected big things from it. Maybe because it lacks action, being a story of romance in old Carolina. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 28-29.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Possibly these stars have made a better picture, but this one is hard to beat from an entertainment standpoint. Played on the hottest nights we have had this summer, but at that we fared above average at the box-office. Running time, 82 minutes. Played June 21-22.—Frank A. Finger, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—Nice little picture. Will please most any one. It's clean and that's something these days. Played June 17-18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—A sweet little picture that every one liked. Not much draw in the names, but this is one you can plug safely for average business.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—They certainly came out on this slow motion picture. Just a lot of waste film and they came out and told me. Can it.—West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—One of the best pictures for the past year. Drew almost capacity attendance. Greatly appreciated and often applauded. Good for any theatre any time. Played June 9.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—The patrons raved over this and told their friends how good it was because they came in as many numbers the second night as they did the first. Rogers just fitted the part like a glove. Business good. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 6-7.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—This picture is all that the other exhibitors have said of it. Harum was a natural character for Rogers. Rogers pulls for he has a following of people that we never see in the theatre at any other time. And if you ask me this star is the only one that has been successful this season for us. Gaynor, that used to be a bet, has slipped and never pulled normal business since "Paddy, the Next Best Thing."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—One of the most satisfactory pictures for a long time. Clean, wholesome fun for all. Nothing but praise for this one. Running time, nine reels. Played Apr. 28-29.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—The first packed house this town has had in three years. And how they came and how they raved. Too bad we can't have those every day in the week.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Played this three days with a midnight opening and was very disappointed in the business. Did not do much over average Rogers business. However, it is beyond a doubt Rogers' best picture to date. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 20-21-22.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien—Very entertaining picture. A semi-action that has everything for entertainment. The supporting cast is excellent. Played Apr. 17-18.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—Beautiful both artistically and every other way. Probably the hot weather hit us but business was pretty close to what Fox expected judging by the guarantee.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—A good musical that failed to get business. It was lavishly produced and the musical numbers were good. Durante came very near stealing the show and Alice Faye was excellent. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 31-—une 1.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Jimmy Durante, Alice Faye—Good musical with some splendid numbers. No big draw at the box-office, however. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 9-10.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—The kind of show that sends them out smiling and not sorry they spent their all-too-scarce dimes for a show. This one has comedy, romance, thrills and about everything to hold the interest of a small town audience. Not a highbrow play but it pleased. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

EAST AND MIDWEST ADD CONTRIBUTORS

Added to the ranks of the reporters to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department this week are four new contributors, hailing from the Midwest and the East. Their initial reports appear in this issue. We welcome:

Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho.

L. S. Gilligan, Tall Corn Theatre, Kanawha, Iowa.

C. H. Sartorius, Capitol Theatre, Hartley, Iowa.

Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y.

I BELIEVED IN YOU: Victor Jory, John Boles—Somebody in the Fox lot must have believed in this one or we would have been spared the agony. Nameless casts don't help poor pictures. Someone asked me if I were testing unknowns here.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

I BELIEVED IN YOU: Victor Jory, John Boles—About one-quarter of my audience walked out on it and I don't blame them. Boys, be sure and shelve this lemon.—West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff—This production is rated as a three star picture. I do not consider it worthy of this rating. It did not appeal to my patrons. Played June 16.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN TRINIDAD: Heather Angel, Victor Jory—Another flop from Fox. Would not hold up on Saturday which always carries a certain amount of guaranteed business. Played June 2.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—Excellent. This one has about everything the audience can ask for, good story, good cast, good music, and plenty of laughs. Went over big. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel, Walter Catlett—El is a favorite here, and there is always a demand for comedy features. This is just a farce, to me too wet, but many men spoke about it as the kind of picture they like to see, full of laughs, nothing to thing about. There is a definite demand for the good comedy. Production companies give us all too few of them. Played June 15-16.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—We played it old but what is the difference when it is just what the whole town wants to see. It is a great picture, clean, good comedy, romance, pathos. Why can't the companies make more like this. It appeals to the whole family and the exhibitor knows he is right when he plays it. He can guarantee it. Warner Baxter has not had good roles lately. He is deserving of the best and Fox should give more time and money to the selection of better vehicles for his starring pictures. Of course, "Paddy" is okay. Running time, 75 minutes. —Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

SLEEPERS EAST: Wynne Gibson, Preston Foster—They all slept through this one. All four of 'em that came in. I'm glad I had a newsreel or else those four wouldn't have stayed. Still I can't forget that this outfit gave me "David Harum."—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley, Smoky—A wonderful story of a horse, beautiful scenery, good acting and plenty of thrills. Pleased everybody. Brought out some who had never been in the theatre. Running time, 69 minutes. Played June 9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—Just a good program picture and a little snappy song that you will remember and possibly the patrons will be whistling the tune going out. Business above average on this one. Played June 11-12.—Frank A. Finger, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—A different role for John Boles and is good for one day. Miss Trevor sings very well. Pleasing little picture and is clean. Played June 16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor, Harry Green—Nothing much to this one. Slow in starting. The old story of a man living off the woman, comes the hero, the profligate killed off, a mixture of comedy (socalled) and melodrama. The hero hurt, nursed back by the heroine and they lived happily ever after. The cast did their best with a trite story and it probably will get by if you don't promise them too much. Laid in a ghost town of the old mining days is the locale, brought up to the 1934 days of the gold rush.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Otto Kruger, Madge Evans—This is only fair entertainment and will appeal to only certain classes. It is a modern drama, with a bit of comedy, action, romance and tragedy. Many of the scenes are taken in a large New York beauty shop and is strictly adult fare. This has an excellent supporting cast and they turn in some splendid acting to make a good program picture. Played one day to fair business. Running time, 87 minutes. Played June 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—A wonderful picture in every way except box-office. The wild animal shots are wonderful, beautiful scenery, especially the breaking up of the ice floes, excellent acting by the native cast, but it is just not a small town picture. Those who came were enthusiastic about the picture but not many came. I consider I ran this picture for the prestige. Running time, 117 minutes. Played June 2-3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Lupe Velez, Jimmy Durante, Laurel and Hardy—Personally I enjoyed this picture very much. I really thought I had a comedy hit and I heard much laughter all over the house, but after talking with quite a number of patrons, I find the ladies did not care for it, while the men did. It did only an average business or a little less. Jack Pearl is no actor and should never appear in pictures. He may be okay on the radio but no good in the talkies. Laurel and Hardy and Lupe Velez, Mickey Mouse and Jimmy Durante all do swell comedy stuff. It's all in fun and if you want to laugh, see it. I call it a good comedy. Played June 17-18-19.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

LAUGHING BOY: Ramon Novarro, Lupe Velez—I haven't laughed since I ran this one. The kids expected wild and wooly western and walked out. The music lovers expected singing and walked out. I expected to make film rental and did not, but unfortunately the exhibitor cannot walk out. I certainly hope this chant, war whoop or what have you, is Ramon's swan song. A good actor killed by poor plays. Played June 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—This is a very good little picture that will please the majority of your patrons. It is a melodrama with a touch of comedy, action, romance and drama. The locale is the Louisian Bayous in the early 20th century. Ted Healy and Nat Pendleton furnish the comedy and help make this a good program picture. An excellent cast, but no outstanding star names to draw. Business good one day. Running time, 77 minutes. Played June 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—A very good program picture. Story interesting and well acted.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—A very good picture. One of the best crook type stories every filmed, but the drought has our business and they don't like Powell here. He made too many policeman stories. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 10.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—Very excellent entertainment, although people were disappointed in the tragic ending. William Powell in the best role of his dramatic career—even outshadows the great Gable. Put this on your best nights.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—A splendid picture. Great acting by the stars but the picture did not draw the business it should. Seemed to satisfy those we got, but did not draw as a special in this town. Wrong kind of a story. People want to laugh and forget their troubles when they go to a show nowadays. Played June 17-18.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Okay but not a big special. Should do a little extra business and will please generally.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery, Elizabeth Allan—Good murder mystery that went over

MARCH ON with COLUMBIA through 1934-1935!

in spite of London locale. Everyone likes Robert Montgomery and this one holds the interest to the last reel. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert —There's life in the old gal yet. I got the history students in there but the teachers were kind of shocked. Still it did the business and that's what counts.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery— I hope for the sake of MGM and Shearer that this one went in the big towns. It was way over their heads here. But they still come to see Shearer. However, in this case, not enough of them.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery, Herbert Marshall—Norma Shearer's first picture in two years must, of course, prove an event to any thetare. The picture is her typed style, nothing original, but interesting. It is well mounted. Clear photography, fine backgrounds and beautiful gowns made it attractive as well as the acting of the principals. The English is a little too broad at times. The picture held up with heavy competition of a big floor show at a tavern, which means real competition in a little town. Running time, 93 minutes. Played June 17-18-19.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy, Madge Evans —This one is not up to Metro standard. They've spoiled us, though. If RKO had made it we would have said it was a good picture. It didn't mean much at the box-office, though.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy, Madge Evans— Our patrons seemed to enjoy this very much, judging from the expression on their faces while this was unreeling and the frequent outbursts of laughter. Drawing power a little better than average for this time of the year.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laural and Hardy—A good comedy. Pleases the young adults.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—A thriller to above average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Maureen O'Sullivan, Johnny Weissmuller—Stress the fact that it is a new and different Tarzan and not to be confused with any other. It is a masterpiece of scientific production and everything the producers claim for it. Better than average receipts. Played June 16-17-18.— M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore— Very good picture, used on a Family Night, that pleased. This fellow Barrymore will always please if you can get them in on him. He should pay John's salary to keep him out of pictures. This would help Lionel 100 per cent. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 12.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—A swell picture but there just wasn't enough life in it to draw them in for two days.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small tow and suburban patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Wallace Beery, Marie Dressler—Wonderful.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery—A great show but also a great flop at the box-office. Doubled advertising on this and did under average business. Might go okay in a Mexican settlement but no good in my town.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery, Fay Wray—Excellent of its kind. Wallace Beery turns in a wonderful performance. Played June 14-15.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson, Lewis Stone—Good. May Robson really stars. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 7-8-9.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

Maestic

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—Monogram has hit the nail on the head again. This time Ray Walker wisecracks his way through 65 minutes of darn good entertainment, ably assisted by pretty little Jacqueline Wells. Plenty of laughs and it pleased every one 100 per cent. Don't be afraid to step on it, and keep your eye on Monogram this year; they are coming through with pictures that the big producers would be proud to release. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 23.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

SENSATION HUNTERS: Arline Judge, Preston Foster—Played on a double bill and the other picture was good. The less said about this one the better. It did not give satisfaction. We played it old; perhaps it was better when it was first released.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard, Sally Rand—A very good story featuring dancing, with both Raft and Lombard showing to advantage. No gangster stuff for Raft in this one; in fact, he has to be a gigolo in one or two scenes. Oh, yes, Sally Rand displays her renowned fan dance. Business just fair. Running time, 83 minutes. Played June 1-2.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen—Richard Arlen does a good job in this one. Did an excellent business and everyone liked it. Played May 23-24 on Family Nights.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable—Beautifully done as are most Paramount pictures, but evidently too highbrow for my town, for they didn't come in to see it at all.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable—Fredric March at his best here. Grossed big at the box-office and what a pleasure to hear the comments on it in the lobby. Played May 20-21-22.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Miriam Hopkins, Fredric March, Gary Cooper—A cleverly produced drama of the risque type. This class of drama will no doubt be out as a result of the clean-up drive. it is so artistically done that the easy morals are pretty well glossed over. Drawing power first day above average with a much below average attendance the following two days.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

DOUBLE DOOR: Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor— This picture will make them talk. Many will not like it because of the part Mary Morris plays, but it's a good picture of its kind and well acted. Very depressing but also interesting. It will not break any records.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

FOUR FRIGHTENED PEOPLE: Claudette Colbert, Herbert Marshall—This is only a fair picture of the jungle type. It is a drama filmed on a South Sea island and practically the entire show is taken in the jungle. If you must play this, play it only one day and let it go at that. DeMille is falling down on his pictures lately, but what he needs is more elaborate settings. We played this one day to only fair business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen, Judith Allen—Played this one late but they came anyway. It is a good picture for a small town and they like Arlen.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott, Monte Blue—A splendid drawing card. Why do producers think westerns are out? The radio has popularized the song "The Last Roundup," which was excellently done in the picture, a version of Zane Grey's "Border Legion." It is said that Paramount paid 15,000 for the use of the song in this picture so it should mean something to advertise the fact. Monte Blue steals the story. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 8-9.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo and Orchestra, Burns and Allen—Here is a very good comedy that is fast moving and full of laughs from start to finish. Just the type of entertainment that should please all of your patrons. Guy Lombardo and his band furnish the music, Burns and Allen furnish the laughs and the tap dancing by Taylor and Rutledge, and then the dance team of Veloz and Yolanda. This is the show for the whole family. Business good on two day run. Running time, 66 minutes. Played June 18-19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Charlie Ruggles—A very beautiful little picture. Did a swell business and went over very well. Played May 25-26.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle—Business just average on this one, but picture deserves better patronage. Just why this failed at the box-office I do not know, because it is a good picture. Paramount had better bargain for some old stars or they will be limping. Played June 10-11-12.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—Title no go; gives one the wrong impression; sounds too sexy. It is a little of that but lots of excitement, too, with a lion and wild cats starring and ends up with a fire. The patrons do not expect this with such a title. Business fair. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 1-2.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Richard Arlen, Sally Eilers—This is only a fair picture. It is a romance of two kinds of love and the locale in an auto camp, where there is a county fair showing. It has a touch of action, thrills, romance and comedy. It has an excellent cast, but in spite of this it is only a program picture and good for only one day showing. We played this on a midnight show to very poor business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 16 midnight.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth, Burns and Allen— Great. Fields is the whole show and they're still talking about that billiard game. Business wasn't so good but it picked up when a week later I played "You're Telling Me."—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland —Miserable attempt at entertaining people. A waste of time and all that goes with it. No good. Played Apr. 29-30-31.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth, Burns and Allen— Gloriously funny, although Fields steals the show from Alison Skipworth and Mary Boland. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 12-13.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sydney, Cary Grant—Sylvia Sidney again, and are we glad to see her. This is a clever little picture, with Sylvia taking a double part. Did an excellent business and everyone liked it very much. Give us some more like this one, Paramount.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Judith Allen, Kitty Kelly—A musical romance, not in a class with Bing's "Going Hollywood." Bing himself very good, and a new star, Judith Allen, a most attractive girl. We hope to see more of her. We did not like the combination of these Harlem black girls in a white girls' chorus. In fact, "Black Moonlight" could have been omitted completely, although we like Kitty Kelly. Without that, it was a good show, a good drawing card at the box-office. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 10.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—This picture broke our house record of the past two years for low grosses and proved to me just what I have always thought: Raft is not an actor; he can't even talk. Adolphe Menjou was the only real actor in the picture and he worked hard to put over a poor part. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 11-12.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—This is George Raft's best picture. The bullfights were great. Did a big business and everyone liked it. Played June 15-16.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

WHARF ANGEL: Victor McLaglen, Dorothy Dell —This picture is on the order of Mae West's "She Done Him Wrong." I think it is just as good. Played it on Family Nights, June 6-7 to an excellent business.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—Good program picture to fair business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—In the winter this would have been a knockout. The heat hit us when this one came along, but still it did average business.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—All W. C. Fields, but very good. Played on Family Nights and everyone got a big kick out of it. Did an excellent business. Played June 13-14.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—This is a side-splitting comedy if there ever was one. There is only one Fields, his type being unique and I have noticed an increased interest in his pictures by our patrons. Better than average receipts. Played June 9.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO

BEFORE DAWN: Stuart Erwin, Dorothy Wilson—Played this on a double feature and after the first show took it off. The poorest independents are better this this.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley—Fine picture, only it had to be a murder story that not only runs the people away but you just cannot get business here with this type picture. This is a very good one that pleased the few who came to see it. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 19.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

DELUGE, THE: Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson—Too much of the earthquake stuff and then cheap melodrama afterwards. What an opportunity wasted. No names either.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Frances Dee, Bruce Cabot—Here is a picture that is sure to please. Our patrons just eat it up and are calling for more like it. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 18-19.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores De Rio, Ginger Rogers, Gene Raymond, Raul Roulien—A splendid picture, absolutely original in conception, far away from the usual backstage plot. Scenes elaborate, beautifully directed. Nothing but praise for the whole picture, especially the ballet in the clouds which looked convincing. Gene Raymond suddenly seems to have come into his own and where has Fred Astaire been during all these musical pictures? He is a sensation. He is a great comedian and dancer combined. What a help. People are still talking about this musical comedy. The company put out some good paper on the picture, especially the miniature window cards. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 27-28-29.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee.—Terrible. No sense, rhyme or reason and they all told me so. Why, oh, why must they take on Mr. Schnizter to make stuff like that.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY: Wheeler and Woolsey, Ruth Etting—This is a real good comedy that is sure to please all of the Wheeler and Woolsey fans. It is full of pep and spicy dialogue. One laugh after another, some beautiful girls and two musical numbers make this an excellent musical comedy. One of their best. Good entertainment and should do a good business. We played this one day to good business and pleased all. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston—Very good picture of the United States cavalry. Somewhat slow and draggy and devoid of comedy. Pleased what few came to see it. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 21.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

LONG LOST FATHER: John Barrymore, Helen Chandler—Well, this one did not knock them off their seats. The nearest thing to nothing this company has given us and disappointed quite a lot of people. When this star is advertised people look for entertainment. John did his best, but there was nothing to work on. We played it as a double feature bill and they let us live, as the other picture was good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff—If you like to run over an hour of desert scenes and many killings, this is what you need. No comedy, no music; so book your shorts to make it a Program. Played June 21-22.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer, Elissa Landi—Very good if it had not been that it in some ways resembled "Eskimo," to which the audience evidently compared it. Lederer does a marvelous piece of acting, as does Landi. Interesting and more comedy than in "Eskimo," but they are of the same type, which is not so good at the box-office. One such as this is enough in one season just as it is with animal pictures. The resemblance of this type of picture is too close to be run in the same house.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, El Brendel, Pert Kelton, James Gleason, "Skeets" Gallagher—Well there was a lot of this picture. Everyone worked to make it good. Some very good comedy and some not so good. Take it all around, our patrons said it was pretty good entertainment and with good shorts added we got out alive. The second night was sad, they did not come.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel—It pleased here. Played June 14-15.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, El Brendel—Entertaining comedy that pleased my patrons. Good acting and a lot of laughs and that is what they want these times. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Here is one you can't go wrong on. A good story of Annapolis. Good at the box-office. It's a pleasure to run pictures like this.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers—Consider this a very pleasing little picture. Nothing big, but will satisfy all who are looking for light comedy. Played June 17-18.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE: Ann Harding—By all means get the women out when you play this, and if they bring the men along they won't be disappointed. Ann Harding is truly a wonderful actress and her work in this picture is very clever. Played June 24-25.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, Edward Everett Horton—Very good comedy that did not draw. Too many Pitts' pictures. This gal must work night and day, she is in everyone's pictures. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 13-14.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—This is a hard one to report on. Katie Hepburn good but Ralph Bellamy easily stole the show. My patrons didn't like this one much. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 3-4.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—A story of rural Australia with Dix as the bad man. Dunne gets the opportunity to sing quite a few times and in all it is a very good and a clean picture. Running time, 77 minutes. Played June 7-8.—Frank A. Finger, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Ralph Bellamy, Irene Dunne—This is a very good picture. Pleased my people. Play it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—This is an outstanding production of its kind. Our patrons thought it just fair. Does not hold interest as well as a feature that has a story. Did not do the business I expected it would. Running time, nine reels. Played June 15-16-17.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN: Lee Tracy—This is a very funny picture. The story is weak, but Lee Tracy is excellent. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 8-9.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding—An excellently acted picture with Ann Harding and Clive Brooks showing up well. Brook in fact did a difficult part in his usual splendid style. Otto Kruger deserves honorable mention and we must not forget Dickie Moore. The ladies went for the latter in a big way. Running time, 81 minutes. Played June 4-5.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHECHILD, THE: George Arliss—Very good picture. Well acted and good story of the banking house of Rothschild in Europe. Dialogue with the days of Napoleon and many of the wars and quarrels of Europe and the unjust persecution of the Jews. I am sorry to report that after paying high film rental, overhead, etc., had no money left. I met with exceptionally strong roadshow opposition which may account for my losses, but even at a loss a picture of this kind is worth while and I take pleasure in recommending it to my exhibitor friends. Played June 10-11-12.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Jack Oakie, Spencer Tracy—Excellent, perfect and other superlatives. Give us more of this kind. My patrons, of which I had plenty, ate it up. Oakie superbly funny and Tracy perfect. Thrill shots are frequent and interesting. Why can't we have more of this kind from this team? Twentieth Century a great company. Running time, 77 minutes. Played June 17-18.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

NANA: Anna Sten—Too sad. My patrons were so fascinated by Anna Sten they forgot to complain. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Stuart Erwin, Lupe Valez—Here is a picture. The only complaint was that Erwin could have retained his title by having his Pop teach him how to box. I believe also that it could have ended that way. Jimmy Durante swell and Erwin excellent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 10-11.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

Universal

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT: Lew Ayres—Made a mistake in playing this one. It was good several years ago, but means nothing today, although the picture was never played in this town. Practically no business first night and less the second. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 24-25.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles—A very good picture for the better class people, too slow for the fellows who like action. A picture like this is very hard to sell even though it is a good picture. It is just too slow. See where Uncle Carl has announced "Zest" again. I am wondering if he will announce the "Left Bank." Believe he outsmarted Metro when he let them make "Laughing Boy," though. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 20.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Tehatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—The first half of this feature was good entertainment. Later and particularly near the end it became very slow and dragging. Only a fair picture. Played June 2.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles—This musical drama of three generations has much to recommend it and also something to criticize. In showing Boles as an old man they made him entirely too old. I know folks past 80 years of age that do not look nearly as old and feeble as Boles did in this and why could they not leave him live for a while to enjoy his triumph? Why make patrons take death with them on leaving the theatre? Drawing power below average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—Good, clean high class drama with a beautiful story of a musician who composes a symphony with a life time of work, aided by the love and encouragement of a faithful wife. The churches can't object to this. It's the kind of picture you would like to give your women's club or school or church. Appeals more to women. It is almost epic in style and slow in developing. Boles sings again. He is very popular and everyone asks for his pictures. He should sing in all of them. Incidentally he does very fine work in this role. If the strenuous objectors to poor pictures would come out to good ones like "Beloved," they might learn something. The good ones do not seem to interest them. Running time, 82 minutes.—Mrs. G C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—A rather good story and it held their interest. The names weren't very good though, as Paul Lukas and Fay Wray make about 20 pictures a year.—Robert Wile, Granda Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—Good entertainment. Gave good satisfaction. A good clean picture. Played June 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson—Not so hot. Story weak and nothing happens. Patronage good, but I'll credit that entirely to the Clyde Barrow-Bonnie Parker special also showing. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 14-15-16.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—You can leave the above named stars out of the picture and put in Berton Churchill as the deacon and you have the picture. It's a complete washout with the exception of his work. And he had a big load to carry to put the picture over. He is probably stoop shouldered by now with his efforts. A complete failure as far as the audience was concerned. No brains in the direction was apparent.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard—Some action, but just an ordinary western. The scenes were mostly at night and this detracted greatly from the effectiveness of the picture. Played June 23.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard—Here is a good western picture that is full of action, thrills

IN THESE CHANGING TIMES

Names, facts and figures continue to make vivid, dramatic motion picture history.

Each year new people, new policies, new technique cast their shadows across the box offices of the country.

And all the world's exhibitors look annually to the Motion Picture Almanac* for guidance—for a summation and a prediction of these changing times.

The biographical section alone is a big parade of 10,000 names marching across 422 solid pages of black type...countless other items account for the world-wide reputation of the Almanac as the industry's supreme reference authority.

and fighting. Ken Maynard and his horse Tarzan always please my patrons and with a good story they are sure to get a good business. On account of an all day celebration we only ran this one night, Saturday, to the best business in many weeks. Let's have more like this. Running time, 61 minutes. Played June 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor--A rather different musical. A few names would have helped to raise the gross. As it was it was pretty poor at the box-office and the tunes, while good, had never been exploited enough.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—An excellent title wasted. Universal had an idea somewhere, but with poor story construction and disgusting direction it was lost. Gloria Stuart is very attractive and Roger Pryor is okay, but somehow this misses from even being a fair program picture. The music was very good but it did not overcome the weakness of the story. If you have it bought play it only one day. Played June 14.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—Not a big musical, but a nice small one. A few good song and dance numbers. No comments. Running time, eight reels. Played May 5-6.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—Very good newspaper story. Tracy is going good in this one. Well liked here. You can play this any day. Running time, eight reels. Played May 29-30.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—A good program picture. If you like Lee Tracy it will go over okay. Played June 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LET'S BE RITZY: Lew Ayres—Just fair entertainment. No comments. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 19-20.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Slim Summersville, Zasu Pitts—Great. Summerville and Pitts are good draws. Personally I thought it was terrible, but what's my opinion against the customers?—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Slim Summersville, Zasu Pitts—Not so good. This team is stepping fast. Not the best of entertainment by any means. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 5-6.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

MADAME SPY: Fay Wray, Nils Asther—A great picture with lots of action, too. Of course, it is war again but not too much of it so that the patrons will like it. Fine entertainment. Average business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played May 30-31.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton—Good comedy but again no names. This one was really clever and anyone who sees Edna May Oliver gets a laugh. Horton is good, too, but being overdone a bit now.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton—Very, very silly. A few walkouts. Business poor second night. Running time, seven reels.—C. V. Hunerberg, Prnicess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—Here is a western that's good. Has a little music mixed in which pleased some people. Played June 16-17.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Good western, better even than some of his others. Westerns are still liked here if run at low admission. Played May 22-23.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir—One of the season's best. A story of the farm. We told 'em what it was and did a very good business both days. You'll like this girl Jean Muir. She's better than Garbo in small towns. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 22.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

EASY TO LOVE: Alolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—A very good picture which seemed to please. Very spicy and also very entertaining. Excellent cast.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—Plenty good. Barbara Stanwyck turns the trick again in the true poker story. Very well done and everyone likes Barbara. Played May 11-12.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—A very nice and pleasing picture with a musical background that should please most everyone. Hal LeRoy's tap dancing is positively a riot. Splendid supporting cast. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 18-19.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson—A swell little collegiate picture. Hal LeRoy does a fast dance act that almost takes their breath. Played May 9-10 on Family Nights.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon, Glenda Farrell—A very good picture but the desert atmosphere and the murder angle didn't help much. Besides that I had a terrible print and the people complained that sentences were cut off. Had to double feature it, too.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

HI NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Here is a good picture that will satisfy. That boy, Muni, is good in any role. Average business and 100 per cent satisfactory. --A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez, Gene Raymond—This proved one of the best pictures we have had in a long time. It is strictly adult fare, good plot, excellent acting, unusually good directing. It pleased 100 per cent and held up for the three days. Those who saw it boosted it. Running time, 68 minutes.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Very fast moving comedy and they laughed and laughed. But those who didn't come to see it, and they were legion, don't help the gross much.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Here is a typical Cagney show that is chock full of action, comedy and romance. Just the type of picture that will appeal to all your patrons and will add much to Cagney's popularity. It is good entertainment and suitable for the whole family. The trailer sold the show days in advance and will do the same for you. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—James Cagney puts this over in fine shape. Did a swell business and it went over good. Played April 27-28.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY KILLER: James Cagney, Mae Clarke—Another one of those fast, swell pictures that only Warner Brothers could produce. James Cagney better than ever, Mae Clarke plenty good. Margaret Lindsay excellent. As long as Warner can make pictures like this no one need worry, for they certainly make some swell ones. It is worth the price of admission to hear the incidental music by the Vitaphone orchestra. Give us plenty of popular music in your pictures, Warner Brothers, and keep the standard up and up.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay—One of the cleverest comedies ever produced, as good or better than "Convention City." If Warner Brothers produce next season as consistent a program as they have this, it will certainly be a boon to us small town exhibitors. The satisfaction that I have had this year in regard to quality of pictures and the very efficient service rendered by the Dallas office has certainly made it a pleasure to do business with them. So let's hope they continue to look to the exhibitor's interest as well as their own as they have so consistently done the past year. Played June 7-8.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

UPPER WORLD: Warren William, Ginger Rogers—This is a good picture. Business good and patrons satisfied. Played June 23.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

BRAVE TIN SOLDIER, THE: ComiColor Cartoons—Good cartoon, color, music, etc., all okay.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

Columbia

BEER PARADE: Scrappy—Very good cartoon.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

FISHING FOR TROUBLE: Sidney Murray—For laughing purposes, and the kind you want, this is great. This team is as good as ever. More power to them.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire—This is one of the best comedies we have had the pleasure of showing in some time other than musicals. Why can't Columbia make them all this good?—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Something different, so they are welcome.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Interesting.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

UM-PA: Jack Osterman — Very good musical comedy, although slightly silly.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Educational

GYPSY FIDDLE, A: Terry-Toons—A good cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

PARDON MY PUPS: Shirley Temple—A very pleasing comedy. Shirley Temple is the sweetest kid on the screen today.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

POPPIN' THE CORK: Musical Comedies—A very good musical comedy with some really good music. —J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SUNNY SOUTH, THE: Terry-Toons—Not so hot. Have yet to see a good Terry-Toon. Running time, six minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—Excellent in so far as these comedians go. Think it one of their best. Running time, 20 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FIRST ROUNDUP, THE: Our Gang—Just fair. This goes to show that you can't hit all the time. Not half as good as the old Gang.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

FITZPATRICK TRAVEL TALKS: All this series have been good.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

FITZPATRICK TRAVEL TALKS: Perfectly awful. Why do the producers force these on us? Running time, nine minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

FOR PETE'S SAKE: Our Gang—On a par with other Our Gang comedies.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES (No. 3): Gives a welcome diversion on any bill. The patrons go for these and get a great kick out of them. Running time, nine minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

HAPPY WARRIORS: Oddities—A good short. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 10 minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

HEARST METROTONE NEWS: A good newsreel. Running time, one reel.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

JAIL BIRDS OF PARADISE: Musical Revues—Beautiful color, some good music and some comedy makes this a fair musical but not quite up to the standard of this series. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MRS. BARNACLE BILL: All-Star Comedies—It's a riot. Very, very funny.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

PLANE NUTS: Musical Revues—An average Healy and Stooges comic. Dancing excellent. Running time, two reels.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

PLAY BALL: Willie Whopper—Excellent cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

ROAMIN' VANDALS: Musical Comedies—One of MGM musical comedies, about as much music in it as in "Viva Villa." A very good slapstick comedy. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SCOTLAND, THE BONNIE: Fitzpatrick Travel Talks—This travelogue was so good that it attracted a great deal of attention. The Germans in the vicinity wanted me to get one on Germany, but I can't find a company that has one. All the Scotchmen will come out especially to see this if you tell them about it.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

TWIN SCREWS: All-Star Series—A very funny comedy. Good for a number of laughs. Very novel in some respects. Running time, 17 minutes.—William A Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

WILD POSES: Our Gang—Good entertainment. Makes a good filler. Well liked here. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Taxi Boys—This is a good comedy. One of the best of this series. It is of the slapstick variety and will keep your patrons laughing from start to finish. Too bad that the good shorts were the last to be made. Running time, 20 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

CIRCUS HOODOO: Harry Langdon—An unusually poor Langdon comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

JUST AN ECHO: Bing Crosby—Excellent. Bing Crosby swell. He is better in comedies than in pictures. Running time, 20 minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

LAZYBONES: Borrah Minnevitch—Excellent. I think everyone laughed at this one. Animation and idea good. Running time, seven minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

LITTLE BROADCAST, THE: Donald Novis, Arthur Tracy—Very good. Contained enough talent to make a full length feature. Proved to have drawing power. Running time, 10 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NEWS HOUNDS: Pallette and Catlett—Excellent with good comedy suspense. These comedies are good. Running time, 20 minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

NO MORE BRIDGE: Leon Errol—Fair two-reeler. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

OLD BUGLER, THE: Chic Sale—This is a typical Chic Sale picture and he is the one and only predominating character. If he is liked in your community this will prove excellent entertainment—otherwise it is just another sorry comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL (No. 1): Some beautiful colored flowers and orchestra music. A good filler.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PLEASE: Bing Crosby—This is a very good comedy featuring the one and only Bing Crosby singing several popular selections. With a good story and the singing of Bing, this should draw as well as any feature. The print has been cut in places, but good just the same. Running time, 22 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RED HOT MAMMA: Betty Boop—From a recent report, we were afraid of this cartoon so did not advertise it. However, while it is not so good as the others, it isn't too bad either. It is not what you might expect from the title, and as an exhibitor we should not be guilty of placing this number with a "children's" picture to draw children especially. I never did care for "Hell's Bells" but cartoon okay. —Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

ROAMING ROMEO, A.: Harry Langdon—Just another Langdon short. Too silly. Running time, 21 minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

STATION T.O.T.: Headliners—This is only fair entertainment, but would be great for a kiddie matinee as the entire cast are kids running a radio studio. They give an excellent performance, but my patrons did not like them and that is all that counts. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye the Sailor—These are good shorts but what I mean they are really short. It seems just as you start to get somewhere the short ends. Running time, seven minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

RKO

KICKING THE CROWN AROUND: Clark and McCullough—Fair. Nothing to rave about.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LION TAMER, THE: Amos 'n' Andy—This is a very good cartoon comedy featuring the popular blackface comedy team of the radio, Amos 'n' Andy. The dialogue is excellent, but the cartoon characters are not as good. Something seems to be short in it, but maybe it will be corrected in time. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF HENNESSY: Cliff Edwards —This is supposed to be one of the special Van Beuren musicals, but the only evidence of that fact is in the opening titles. Rotten entertainment. Better left unplayed. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small

State Rights

WORLD'S FAIR: A fine one reel short of the Century of Progress, all in color. Gives a very good picture of the fair.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BIG BAD WOLF, THE: Silly Symphonies—A fine entertaining sequel to the "Three Little Pigs." Nobody will criticize this Disney creation. Play it. Running time, nine minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

CAMPING OUT: Mickey Mouse—A good Mickey Mouse comedy that had the audience in stitches. Both young and old liked it. Very original in all its many sequences. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

FUNNY LITTLE BUNNIES: Silly Symphonies—Only fair. Not as good as many of the others. He'll never make another "Three Little Pigs."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

CANDY HOUSE, THE: Oswald—Entertaining. Running time, nine minutes.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS: These are about the goofiest silliest subjects that I ever had on my screen. Just a waste of time to run these. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

OUT OF GAS: Louise Fazenda—All of Universal's comedies have been very good and this is a laugh from beginning to end.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

PIN FEATHERS: Pooch Cartoons—Good one reeler wherever you can use one.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BORRAH MINNEVITCH AND HIS HARMONICA RASCALS: Melody Masters—Excellent. Lots of the patrons stayed to hear this the second time. Melody Masters always click. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BUDDY'S BEER GARDEN: Looney Tunes—A good comedy cartoon that was well liked by young and old alike. Running time, six minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

CRASHING THE GATE: Ruth Etting—Vitaphone is not spending the money on these two reels that they used to. This is only fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DIVORCE SWEETS: Tom Howard—Haven't had a comedy from Educational that contained one good laugh since Andy Clyde in "Dora's Dunking Doughnuts." Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

FISHERMEN'S HOLIDAY: Pepper Pot—Very good sport reel. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FIVE CENTS ADMISSION: Pepper Pot—First short from Warner in a long time that was just a waste of time to run. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ISHAM JONES: Melody Masters—Excellent single reel as are all of this series. This would have been fine in color. Why not give us some of these band acts in color and add the finishing touch to the best shorts that are produced? Running time, 10 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—This is an average Broadway Brevity and being in color will help it to get over. Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—This subject was not up to par. It failed to please. These shorts do not have as many individual acts in them as formerly and so they are not as good. Running time, 18 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

You will want these air conditioning charts to aid you this summer!

AIR CONDITIONING CHARTS

that represent standard practice in air conditioning engineering, adapted for the first time to motion picture theatre use. Originally published in Better Theatres, these charts and their explanations are now made available to theatre managers and technicians in a durable form suited to ready reference. Each chart is readily accessible by itself, while each is accompanied by an explanation that also gives practical advice on how to attain the best atmospheric conditions for any season. These chart sheets therefore apply to operating routine for any time of year, winter or summer. They are contained in a single sheet of cardweight paper measuring 22 inches wide and 17 inches high, so folded according to chart divisions that each readily fits the pocket. Unfolded, the sheet may be tacked on the wall. The folders may be had until the supply is exhausted at 25 cents each. Send payment with order. Use the coupon below.

DEAR HERALD:

We have learned that a large percentage of you exhibitors are very much dissatisfied with the Motion Picture Code. This would indicate that a large percentage of you had read it. We also learn that but few of you are satisfied with it. Personally we don't know very much about it, but we are interesting ourself sufficiently to inquire if you are familiar with the clause having to do with the elimination of pictures.

Your understanding most likely is that you have the right to eliminate 10 per cent of the pictures from the contract if you so desire, but does the Code give you that right? As we understand it, it does, until you reach the word "provided," and the proviso is, as we understand it, that you must exercise the right to eliminate within 14 days from release date of the picture. How many of you have a means of knowing what a picture is within 14 days of release date? Yes, you have the critic's report in the fan magazines which is printed at so much per inch, the same as other advertising. Are you influenced in buying pictures by what some guy says of it who is paid for what he thinks about it (if he thinks right)? Our experience has been that the less attention we paid to "Yes Men" the better off we were. We don't know anything about it ourself, but it might pay you to look it up. We do know this, however, that before we sign any kind of a contract we always examine it to see if the word "provided" is in it, because that proviso pretty generally annuls all that part of the contract that affects our interest. Outside of that, we don't know very much about it, but we still have our opinion just the same.

Learned About Gertrude

We have just learned who Gertrude is, and now our lumbago has left us and the sun is beginning to shine. Her full name is Gertrude Merriam and she is the assistant to A-Mike Vogel of the Round Table Club of the HERALD in the New York office.

In our bonehead, blundering way we seem to have kicked over the kittle and spilled the beans, for something we have done has kicked up a row between Mildred and Jeannette of the Hollywood office and Gertrude of the New York office, occasioned, no doubt, because of our school girl complexion and our Adonis shape (a condition for which we are in no way responsible) and we are not like the sailor who had "a sweetheart in every port," although we are very fond of huckleberry pie and vanilla ice cream. We learn that the girls have all passed the dizzy stage and don't swoon every time a crooner starts crooning a love song on the radio. Those are the kind of girls who lend class and dignity to the HERALD force.

Of course, it is none of our doggone business, we realize that, but quite often our curiosity grabs our better judgment by the collar and seat of the pants and shakes us until we wonder just what country A-Mike Vogel came from. He must have come from a good country because we have him listed as a mighty swell fellow with ability to lead the members of the Round Table Club through the darkness of despondency and around the mudholes of depression, notwithstanding the membership has a high rating for intelligence, and this includes Fred Hines of Whitewater, Wis., even though he did broadcast us in a loud voice once as that "old fossil J. C."

No Reason for Alarm

Here in Omaha we find the theatre boys all hot and bothered and going around in circles because the "Legion of Decency" proposes to clean the dirt out of pictures. We don't know just how far this organization intends going, but if they temper their actions with judgment and confine their boycott to dirty films we can see no reason for alarm, for that is exactly what the public and the theatremen have been yelling for for the past 15 years to our certain knowledge, and ever since the days of Theda Bara, who was universally known as "The Vampire." The public has been urging clean pictures, but their request doesn't seem to have reached Hollywood. The threat of censorship has hung over this industry almost from the beginning, and whose fault has it been that has seemed to make this action necessary? And yet Hollywood hasn't been sufficiently interested in the matter; the exhibitors have been practically a unit for clean entertainment, yet the makers of entertainment don't seem to have found that out yet.

Through the Pocketbook

They say that the best way to a man's heart is through his stomach, and it is equally true that the best way to some producer minds is through the pocketbook, and it seems evident that that is the route this organization intends taking. If the Legion of Decency will not be inconsistent in its actions in boycotting pictures and will lend its influence and support to clean entertainment it will be far more effective than to boycott the entire industry (which we don't think it intends to do). The moral and financial support of clean entertainment will go farther in cleaning the screen than all the proposals of censorship that have yet been offered, and it is to be hoped that our friends will be as insistent in supporting good, clean entertainment as they are in boycotting the bad.

Refusing to support good pictures because some are nasty isn't the course one's best judgment takes. A little spice in pictures should not be objectionable, but filth and dirt are another thing, and if the Legion of Decency is instrumental in bringing about clean entertainment they will have astonished the world and worked a miracle in the industry, for nothing else seems to have accomplished this end. One piece of huckleberry pie is a good thing, and is relished, but to eat a whole pie oftentimes gives one the colic, and let's not give the exhibitors any more colic than they already have, for they have aplenty right now.

We might talk a whole lot more on this subject, but you would probably say that the more we talked the less we'd say, which would probably be true, but don't try to tell us that the public wants sexy, dirty pictures, for we know a damsite better.

Brookfield, Mo.

At Rockport, Mo., we met Mr. and Mrs. Henry Staples, who operate the Paramount theatre. They have changed their theatre somewhat since we were there the last time. They have decorated the exterior until now it is the most imposing looking place in the town. They reported business not so good as formerly, due no doubt to the hot dry spell.

Howard Colon of the Colonial theatre at Hamburg, Iowa, says if they don't get an earthquake he thinks everything will be all right, as they have stood everything else, but L. D. Whistler of the Strand at Sibley, Iowa, says he hopes they do, for he doesn't want to miss anything.

J. L. Yous of the Delphas theatre at Mound City, Mo., is the same old J. L. as of former years. He is so close to the Missouri River that he need never starve as long as the catfish are biting.

W. B. Presley of the Globe Theatre at Savannah is a typical Missourian and has to be shown every time they sell him pictures. He's on the job 18 hours a day regardless of the NRA.

At Maryville we met C. E. Cook, who is familiarly known throughout the northwest as "Doc." He manages the Tivoli, and he manages it, too. We know he is a good doctor as well as a good manager, for he prescribed for us and the prescription had a revenue stamp pasted over the cork. Doc doesn't think the Legion of Decency will materially hurt business except in strongly Catholic and Protestant communities, where he thinks that their influence might be felt by the exhibitors.

There are a lot more of the Missouri boys we have met and would like to tell you about at this time, but Ernie is working under the Government's NRA or B. V. D. plan (we don't know which), and that means that we've got to quit, notwithstanding we have brought Missouri two big rains since we came here and they haven't even thanked us for it. That's just the way these Missouri guys are.

RKO Center Goes Legitimate

M. H. Aylesworth, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., announced this week that he has notified Rockefeller Center, Inc., of arrangements which have been concluded between RKO and Max Gordon, theatrical producer, whereby the RKO Center theatre in New York will discontinue its present film policy after July 8, and, after September 17, be devoted to legitimate musical productions to be produced by Mr. Gordon.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE IRONY OF IT

There must be something essentially wrong with the motion picture business that thrives by catering to the happiness of millions and yet seems unable to make possible even a little bit of this happiness for many of its workers. We refer of course to the unhappy lot of those many theatre managers who exist in the face of intolerable conditions to provide entertainment for others.

Granted there are more than many showmen rolling along under the bluest of skies, but the legion of managers who are kicked around, unwittingly or otherwise, far outnumber their more fortunate brethren.

In its callous treatment of this classification of theatre employee, the exhibition branch of this business is patently guilty of impeding our President's endeavors to shorten working hours. In many instances, 15 hour days are still usual. Managers must toil from early morn to midnight, seven days a week, in defiance of the very spirit of the code that has been created to alleviate this impossible situation. Incredible as it may seem, the worker in the theatre who rates the utmost consideration actually receives the very least. The manager unfortunately has no friend at court.

There can be nothing more ironic than the fact that the very men who are responsible for "Joy Months," "Laff Weeks" and other similar contributions to the nation's gaiety have become, by the demands of these labors, far unhappier than those they slave to amuse.

"SHOW MUST GO ON"

What the able theatreman takes in his stride during the course of a day's duties no doubt would intimidate more than a few executives in other lines of business. Confronted frequently by sudden situations requiring immediate and satisfactory handling, your fast moving manager rarely fails to rise to the occasion and handsomely, to the credit of his profession.

As an instance, we give you Manager Charley Kirkconnell, of the Park Theatre, down in Tampa, who experienced an accident to his lighting system which left the house in utter darkness. Charley's quick thinking in the face of this serious dilemma removed any possibility of panic and turned what could have been a nasty jam into a joyful community sing appreciated thoroughly by the capacity audience.

The story is detailed on another page and published not only as a tribute to this member's mental agility, but also as a striking instance of how capably the showman functions when comes the imperative call—"the show must go on."

IS RADIO COMPETITION?

Some time ago, Earle Holden spoke his mind regarding the sponsored broadcasting programs encouraged by Hollywood participation. And now Manager V. Touchett, of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, voices his protests against the procedure of a major producing company which by letter requested him to spread the word in his section of a forthcoming radio dramatization of a pre-release feature.

The extensive broadcasting cooperation sought for and obtained by so many showmen precludes any hasty assumption that this form of entertainment is a definite box office menace. On the other hand, in various quarters it is recognized as powerful opposition, and thus the subject invites further discussion.

The Round Table pages, need it be said, are open wide for opinions from our readers on this phase of entertainment.

THE SUNDAY ISSUE

Manager Charlie Mensing of the Orpheum, in Memphis, is to be commended for his vigorous single-handed campaign to spotlight the Sunday issue in his town.

Memphis being pictureless on the first day of the week, a leading hotel has for some time been putting on free shows in conjunction with Sunday dinner. Mensing obtained a restaurant license and adapted the hotel's Sabbath procedure to his situation by selling sandwiches in the lobby and allowing purchasers into the show without any extra charge. He was arrested, of course, and fined, but is appealing the case.

Whether Memphis has pictures on Sunday is neither here nor there. The point to be determined by the city fathers is whether or not, in these supposed days of enlightenment, the theatre is to receive the same fair shake as any other legitimate line of business endeavor.

With the tall tales we are now hearing about the "big one that got away," it may be time to repeat the story of the manager who, after an unsuccessful day with the rod, went into a fish store and asked the proprietor to throw him a bass, explaining he did not like to lie—he wanted to tell his wife he actually caught it.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

All in the day's work.

Impromptu "Sing" Keeps Show Going

Due to a fire in the local power plant, the city of Tampa, Fla., found itself in complete darkness. This misfortune of course included the theatres and Manager Charles Kirkconnell, of the Park, found himself in a spot, with a capacity audience and plenty of standees.

The stage feature for the week was the University of Tampa dancing revue, which naturally attracted many of the students to the show. Quick thinking of course was in order when Kirkconnell discovered that the lights would be off for an hour, for even discounting the possibility of panic, he was faced with the problem of refunds and passes.

Charlie, therefore, jumped up on the stage and called for community singing. One of the musicians volunteered to play the piano, his music being lighted by flashlights held by the ushers. The audience immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion, and this Round Tabler reports such an enjoyable party that everyone remained until two in the morning with warm praises for the impromptu affair.

Louie Charninsky Stages Swell "Black Cat" Show

A pretty thorough "Black Cat" campaign was put on by Louis Charninsky down at the Capitol Theatre in Dallas, Texas, when, among other things, he stenciled black cats on the floor of ten big downtown parking stations, in the lobby and at all busy intersections.

Louie engineered a tie-up with one of the daily papers which sponsored a "Black Cat Show" in one of the large department stores. A five dollar prize was given for the most beautiful cat and twelve prizes of passes for runner-ups. Show broke the papers every day. A special trailer was run for a month in advance and while it was on all house lights were out and a picture of a giant black cat was flashed on the wall.

For a street bally two boys dressed in Black Cat costumes paraded the town and one of Louie's usually striking fronts was erected featuring two huge black cat cutouts with two large pictures of Karloff and Lugosi.

LaFalce Ties In Hundreds Of Stores on "Greater Glory"

Frank LaFalce and his crew did a lot of fancy stepping to put over "No Greater Glory" at the Metropolitan, Washington, D. C. The local distributor for Baby Ruth candy bars paid for and put out window streamers in every store handling that confection in Washington and the surrounding area. Hundreds of units of a grocery chain also spotted strips, tying in the title to their merchandise, and similar hookups were made with A. & P. Stores which in addition stuffed all packages with heralds.

Other hookins as effective were arranged, giving the attraction blanket coverage in the entire district. Incidentally, the Metropolitan is now being skippered by Round Tabler Charlie Brennan, who returns to John Payette's division after a spell of service in Hartford. Here's how, Charlie.

Cullen Engineers Radio Tieups on "Rothschild"

Mike Cullen, Loew's & U. A. Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Manuel Greenwald, field representative, put over a series of broadcasts for their showing of "House of Rothschild," one being in conjunction with the serial running in one of the local newspapers. A fashion expert gave a talk on costumes during the Rothschild era and present day styles; a leading rabbi discoursed on the well-known banking family and the civic playhouse put on a dramatization of the picture.

Newspaper trucks carried banners on the serial, one of the merchants tied in with a very attractive window of china used at the time of the picture and stocking window displays were planted in connection with a radio contest in which souvenir books were given away. Another merchant ran ads on a Loretta Young blouse with a plug for the showing at the theatre and a leading beautician offered "Julie" permanent waves.

Novelty Heralds Click for Gilman

From S. A. Gilman, Loew's Parkway, Baltimore, Md., comes an assortment of novelties he pulled on recent pictures. A little four by six teaser herald was distributed, copy asking, "Do you know this little girl's father, she was left by him as security for a gambling debt? If you know him, call (theatre number) and ask for Miss Marker." Picture of Shirley Temple graced upper left hand corner of herald.

Gummed labels the exact size of a brick were made up with a plug for the Temple picture, and pasted on all bricks holding down newspapers at various stands around town.

Still another throwaway was a green six by eleven sheet for "Sadie McKee" carrying part of the diary of the leading lady, enough to make seeing the picture seem worthwhile. Gilman fancies this form of advertising, finding it profitable when not used too often.

Kaplan and Duffus Engineer Welcome

Front page stories and art in all local and many out-of-town papers were numerous in the bang-up campaign put on by Manager Harold Kaplan and ad chief Carleton Duffus, Minnesota, Minneapolis, on the big time show combining the personal appearance of "Roxy" and the feature "Men In White." The stage celebrity's visit was in the nature of a homecoming, having originated in Stillwell, Minn., a short distance away.

With this in mind, the theatremen sold the maestro's home town on a reception to the "local boy who made good," that resulted in a trip "home," a citywide lunch and rally, climaxed with a four-mile street parade after which Roxy returned to Minneapolis with a large delegation of hometowners who witnessed his act at the theatre.

The Stillwell papers went for the party with front page streamers and photos, following the lead of the metropolitan dailies which gave columns to the advent of the well known showman. Shots were run showing Roxy with the man who gave him his first theatre stake and there were stories by his first projectionist, and a dozen other gags were lined up that broke plenty of space. A one-column mat and story mailed to over 300 out of town papers also brought excellent returns.

Big Tieups Promoted

Trailers were carried by ten "A" theatres of the circuit in all important towns in the trade area, and a comprehensive radio drive was in augurated three weeks ahead including recordings by Roxy and the gang. This culminated with a half-hour broadcast on the morning of the opening handled in the same manner as Roxy's regular weekly programs.

General Mills planted a 1200-line ad showing the showman and his crew breakfasting on one of that company's brands, and a prominent bank for the first time gave display space to the attraction. Rubber stamps carrying theatre copy were used on all outgoing mail in the main offices and theatre, and merchants also made similar use of this idea.

Bus and railroad lines planted posters in all stations within a 75-mile radius, arranging excursion rates as a further inducement. The Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association carried stories in their regular bulletin, wrote letters to all lunch clubs and contacted all music organizations on the date, and participated officially in the welcome when Roxy arrived in town. A special Shrine night was also included in the campaign.

Kaplan and Duffus did not neglect "Men In White," as all possible newspaper and exploitation contacts were also made, including windows on the Myrna Loy styles and 3000 folders mailed to doctors, nurses and medical students.

This account covers the best part of the highlights of the grand campaign put over by these boys in which they stressed the combined stage and screen show as the biggest ever come to town. Well done, Round Tablers!

JUDGES TO SELECT JUNE WINNER

Midnight of Thursday, July 5, marked the deadline for the Quigley Award competition for June. Many entries were rushed to Committee Headquarters in the last few hours before the time limit expired.

The Judges — Messrs. Grainger, Skouras and Blumenstock — are convening and their decision will be made known in the issue of July 14.

Campaigns for the July plaque are in order and managers intending to enter this month's competition are requested to forward their entries as soon as completed. —MIKE

Moneyhan Uses Roving Scribe for "Sweethearts"

Frank Moneyhan, publicity man, and Irving Windisch, Warner exploiteer at the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind., put out a strolling reporter who interviewed people in front of theatre a week prior to opening, giving highlights on "20 Million Sweethearts."

One of the leading stores was tied-up for a complete window made up as a broadcasting station, plus enlargements of Powell and Fiorite conspicuously spotted. Other merchant tie-ups consisted of a Dick Powell shirt window, jumbo telegrams in Western Union windows, music stores displays and Old Gold cigarette hook-ins.

As women arrived at the theatre they were presented with Dick Powell stills and as a wind-up to the campaign a special Powell telegram was broadcast by the m. c. at the Variety Club dance.

Lamm Plants Street Bally On "Wonder Bar" Showing

The use of an old-fashioned dray pulled by mules was the street bally Louis Lamm, Capitol, Elyria, Ohio, used for his showing of "Wonder Bar" to plug the "Goin' to Heaven on a Mule" sequence. A huge negro carrying a banner with playdates, etc., stood on the wagon driven by an old-timer.

A little four-leaf Movie-News with merchant ads and a synopsis of the picture was distributed house to house at no cost to the theatre; ads paying nut. Dress shop made up window display of Kay Francis and Del Rio cut-outs with costumes worn in picture.

Screenings on "Women" Arranged by Bishop

Screenings seem to work well for H. A. Bishop, Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, for on "Little Women" a special showing was given to which were invited superintendents of high schools, school mothers and principals, Catholic schools, P-T-A, Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, Ministerial Association and the Local Council of Women, which is what we call coverage.

As each teacher entered the theatre, she was presented with a booklet suggesting the English lessons to be prepared in connection with the picture. A tie-in with every library in town resulted in bookmarks being distributed, and a Yardley toilet goods tie-up netted a window in a leading drug store.

Ed Lynch Conceives Ace Lobby Flashes

There is a lot of selling on coming features by use of attractive lobby displays by Ed Lynch, of the Cameo, Bridgeport, Conn., who goes in for giant size wall posters to highlight his advance showings. One of his most recent was a buildup for "20 Million Sweethearts" (see photo) the background of which was magenta, bordered in light blue with silver metallic trim. Title was in light blue trimmed with silver metallics, catch line above in light yellow, stars in light yellow with black letters.

For "Mandalay," a blue background was employed, with a light blue border, the title in light yellow sprinkled with silver metallics. Above was cutout of Kay Francis, and below was group of bordered stills. Ed's assistant, M. J. Carroll, works with Lynch on these hit displays.

Bill suggests publicity on this as information to be passed along to other managers faced with this kind of opposition. It is being used as ammunition by Zone Director Howard Waugh, and Hendricks no doubt will be glad to furnish further dope on what they are doing in that direction.

Parlante and Nathan Bally "All Quiet"

Joe Parlante, Casino Theatre, New York City, and Al Nathan, Universal exploiteer, didn't have much time to prepare their campaign for "All Quiet" because of a quick booking, but they did manage to get out a pretty nifty looking street bally (see photo) in the form of a truck with a trench, with two soldier-guards and all the warfare "makings."

Joe and Al timed the opening with the starting of a serialization in the local papers and distributed heralds in centrally located hotels. The lobby was dressed with an interesting display of machine guns, helmets, rifles, gas masks and other equipment. Placed on the side of the marquee a cut-out of a soldier's head was illuminated at night with a red glow that could be seen from a distance. All theatre attaches were dressed in army uniforms.

A further bally was a parade of the Junior Naval Militia which marched through the Broadway area to the accompaniment of fife and drum corps. Joe also invited officers of the fleet to attend a special performance and two leading clergymen who had been delivering lectures on the evils of war were contacted and urged to call attention to the picture.

Sieber Constructs Lobby Mountain Scene

Many realistic effects were employed by Manager J. Lloyd Sieber, State, Philadelphia, in his preparation of a "Tarzan" lobby piece that simulated one of the mountain scenes from the picture. Papier mache was the material used and colored to appear lifelike. Palm trees were made up of palm plants and pots covered with grass mats to resemble reed growths (see photo) and the cutout figures of the stars placed so as to appear as a part of the whole ensemble. The title letters were cut out against a background of dark blue, and lighting was supplied with red, green and blue spots.

Lloyd carried out the jungle atmosphere further with a street bally in which an open truck was covered with grass mats, palms, etc. In the rear of the bally, a cave was constructed in the opening of which a stuffed lion was placed. A well developed usher was costumed as "Tarzan" and did his act with the beast. At busy corners, stops were made and heralds distributed.

Local school board indorsed the feature and arranged for announcements to all classes.

Jumbo Postal wire hookin was well done with displays in branch offices and regulation size messages with plug copy distributed house to house and office to office. Book windows in 25 prominent spots were arranged by local news company and tieups that netted newspaper space as well as windows were made with exclusive beauty shops and women's shoe stores.

Newspapers cooperated by running daily features and art spreads, ballyhoo records were run on two stations, blotters given out at all library branches and imprinted napkins in local and nearby restaurants.

"Wonder Car" Parades for Moore's "Wonder Bar"

B. F. "Dinty" Moore, at the Shubert-Rialto in St. Louis, Mo., and Bert Perkins, Warner exploiteer promoted a parade of twenty-five new Ford cars that covered a two-hour route through business district and wound up at theatre. All cars bore copy on "Wonder Bar" and "Wonder Car," as illustrated.

Rotogravure pictures, streamer cards on busses for ten days prior to opening, house to house distribution of heralds from a bannered ballyhoo car and stands carrying copy in selected locations were among the highlights of the campaign.

Front with striking blue backgrounds studded with flicker stars was built against the entrance and under the marquee; hand painted star head cutouts were blown up and used to further enhance the appearance, and lifesize cutout standees filled spaces between the doors. As per radio announcements, colortone photos of Kay Francis were given out at matinee, furnished gratis on a magazine tieup.

In addition to the front, Padgett used a ten day teaser newspaper campaign and through a tie-up with the classified department received a free 30-inch ad that ran for six days prior to opening. A sound truck circling the school districts, distributed circus-type heralds to the students. This is Ed's first contribution and we are hopeful of receiving others as effective.

The other sheet sponsored an auto race, entrants driving collegiate cars, each provided with only one quart of gas—winner being the one to go the farthest distance.

Other hookins were timely and obtained much coverage. Florists, Postal Telegraph, men's and women's shops broke out with snappy windows, and of course, the soda fountains also did themselves very well from the angle made famous by the cartoon.

Taylor Promotes Women's Drum Corps for "Bar"

Charlie Taylor, publicist at Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo and Irving Windish, Warner exploiteer tore loose on "Wonder Bar," engineering a parade of 25 bannered cars, a uniformed Women's Fife and Drum Corps (see photo) and twenty Western Union messengers, all of whom marched to the theatre, stopping long enough to allow the ladies to "do their stuff" with the drums.

From what we can gather, it looks as though almost every merchant in town was tied up; drug stores took advantage of the Lux tie-in, grocers went for the Kraft Cheese-Jolson radio hour and carried strips on all their delivery trucks. Spaldings used a sports window and music stores plugged tunes from the picture; there were Dick Powell shirt windows, and beauty shops stressed the Del Rio and D'Orsay hair styles and for those with sweet teeth there was a "Wonder Bar" candy. Photos showing long lines in front of the theatre indicate the success of the campaign.

There must be a hundred of them.

EARLE M. HOLDEN

I recently wrote Mike Vogel a letter of protest in regard to a radio ad that appeared in what I would consider the number one fan magazine. My letter was published in the Round Table section. It didn't excite any one, but that was to be expected. The very things that are vital to the industry and our business seldom excite. Maybe we are all getting too old to take notice of things that are coming into competition with us, things that should arouse showmen to arms. When a fan magazine takes it upon itself to accept radio advertising which will keep people away from your box office, then I say down with it.

Now every one knows that fan magazines, when they see fit, pan the devil out of pictures. We all know that it is impossible for producers to make all good ones. Some just have to be bad, fair or otherwise. But usually, in the larger cities, the otherwise pictures go to the houses that charge cheaper admissions, and their patrons do not expect the very best in entertainment. I'm not trying to apologize for some of the stuff that has come from Hollywood; it really has been bad enough.

The fan magazines of today are something like the majority of newspapers. They gladly accept our ads, for which we pay good money, usually a higher rate than the average merchant, and then alongside of our ad they place their review panning the picture, which is an invitation for the public to stay away.

Asks More Cooperation

. . . The same thing is true of the present fan magazines. They wouldn't dare to publish a review on some of the stories that appear on their pages, and then tell the reader not to turn to page so and so and read the story thereon, because the story was uninteresting, would they? You bet they wouldn't. But they will cry and pray for a full-page ad from some of the producers and then in the same issue will give a rotten review of the picture advertised. What is fair in that? If the fan mags depend on the theatres for an existence, as Charlie says, and I agree with him, what right have they to pan any picture that is made, when the publishers know in advance that a bad review will keep people away from the box offices of theatres all over the country?

Personally, regardless of how bad a picture might be, I believe that somewhere in the country, at somebody's theatre, that bad picture might have proved a success. Happily, all movie patrons don't think alike; if they did, we could fold our tents and steal away.

I believe that Charlie Bassin means well in his proposals. But I believe that before anything could be done along the lines he suggested, the fan magazines would have to guarantee theatre managers a fair deal, something they are not now giving. And inasmuch as the producers are the chief supporters of the fan mags, it is up to them to get the publishers in line, and then once the publishers have shown the theatre managers they are willing to play ball, then the managers in turn might feel more friendly toward the fan magazines.

Wants Truth in Stories

It is true that lots of people read movie magazines. As to the increase in circulation I cannot say. One thing I do know and that is the average movie fan and mag reader is getting well fed up with all the baloney that is sometimes published in these magazines. You read one night where so and so are the happiest couple in Hollywood and the next morning an announcement of their divorce appears on the front page of your local paper. Too much publicity that cannot be believed is being published in all of the fan magazines. And another thing, there are too many on the market.

As to the suggestions that Charlie makes, the answer should first come from the producers, because they are the ones that support the magazines with their advertising. If I were a producer and a fan mag panned one of my pictures after I had spent good money advertising, I wouldn't hesitate to take all ads away from that publication. If all the producers would band together and do this, some of the unfair reviews would quickly disappear. And it could be done.

. . . Exhibitors should start to wake up. Probably no business is taken advantage of as much as the show business. Motion pictures are a commodity as well as an automobile or any other thing offered for public sale. Yet you don't see these things panned in your papers or in magazines.

FURTHER OPINIONS ON BASSIN IDEA

Much interest has been aroused in Charley Bassin's recent article suggesting closer cooperation between managers and the fan magazines. Recently we had the pleasure of hearing from Herman Weinberg, of the Little Theatre, Baltimore, and Joe Salmon, of the Riverside, New York.

Today, we publish additional letters on the subject from other Round Tablers, and more will be run next week. Other opinions are of course invited. —MIKE.

. . . I don't believe that Charlie Bassin's plan is feasible. Theatremen seem so hard to get together. There's too much jealousy, too much fear that the other fellow will get a little more money at the box office. Too much hatred between the independent and the chain operator, even though the chain operator will help the independent, if appealed to. And in closing, I would say that I believe there is less cooperation between the men who make up our industry than in any other line of business. There always has been, probably always will be.

JOHN McMANUS, Manager
Midland, Kansas City, Mo.

The fan magazine is of material assistance to any exhibitor; small argument can be put forth denying the fact that if people read about any matter written in an entertaining manner they become interested and will purchase same. Should they be fortunate in selecting an entertaining picture they will come back. On the other hand, should the picture not entertain, they will lapse back into neglect of us until such time as their interest has been revived.

JOHN J. McMANUS

Regarding tieing up with the distributors of the movie magazines, this has been done at this theatre for the past two years in the following manner. The distributor furnishes us with a certain number of magazines on which we paste a gummed sticker with the following copy: "Loew's Midland Theatre . . . Kansas City's Finest . . . Home of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists' and Twentieth Century Pictures . . . plus those delightful Hal Roach and Walt Disney Creations." These magazines are placed around in the rest rooms and throughout the lounges, also handed to our patrons on their leaving by a member of the service staff, who says, "with our compliments."

Does Not Encourage Tieup

Another tieup used at times, when the distributor has an uncertain seller is the one of cards. These cards advertise the magazine the distributor wishes sold, and the current picture and theatre's name, we paying for the cost of printing, the distributor handling the distribution.

Am of the opinion that the above is as far as an exhibitor can go with a tieup. We do not want to have displays in our lobbies. We do not want to have trailers on our screen advertising anything but entertainment, and our own entertainment.

Remember, Round Tablers, that we, the exhibitors, sell the picture to the public. We also present same to the public. We cannot afford to over-sell any picture, and we should deliver all our entertainment to the public in the finest manner at hand.

Taylor Ties Up Phone Company on "Operator 13"

A novel twist to the old telephone stunt was used by Bill Taylor at Loew's State, Houston, Texas, for his showing of "Operator 13" when he used two girls, one of them calling numbers saying "Please call Operator 13, she has an important message for you." Girl at other phone answered calls for "Operator 13" and read message from Gary Cooper or Marion Davies.

A young lady, a "daughter of the Confederacy," placed flowers on the statue of General Johnston in behalf of the stars appearing in the picture. Girl received telegram of congratulations from Gary Cooper, which rated break in the papers.

A tie-up with Western Union resulted in a display of old and new telegraph equipment in lobby. Telegraph company sent out messages calling attention to display and including copy on picture. War Veterans were invited to attend showing; Cosmopolitan magazine trucks were bannered and newsstands tied in with displays.

Trilling Plants Dummy Over Front on "Quiet"

George Trilling, manager of the Cameo Theatre in New York City was responsible for an ace three man bally in front of his house during the showing of "Al Quiet." It seems George found that a considerable crowd collected when he shifted the dummy over the entrance, so he kept it up every thirty minutes during the run of the picture. Just a simple gag that did the business.

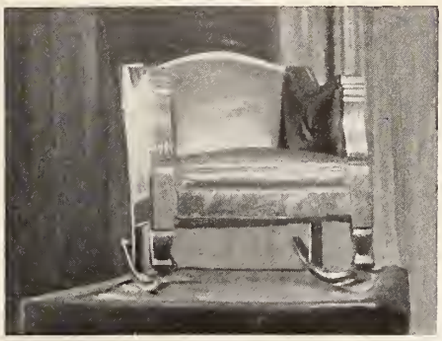
Tom Edwards Uses Bossy For "Dr. Bull" Bally

Tom Edwards, owner manager of the Ozark Theatre, out in Eldon, Mo., revamped the old "bull" bally to suit his purpose when he played "Dr. Bull." Tom got hold of a cow and bannered his back (see photo) with the words "I'm on my way to see Dr. Bull with Will Rogers." Edwards says it created a lot of talk, his patrons getting quite a kick out of it.



Tom gets out a ten by eight monthly program, giving play dates and titles of pictures, the reverse side of which is called "Tom's Movie News," carrying "news from Hollywood thirty days ahead of all movie publications." This is a sprightly little page giving the latest gossip about the stars and pictures. Programs are distributed to towns within a radius of thirty miles.

DANIEL'S "INVISIBLE" ROCKER

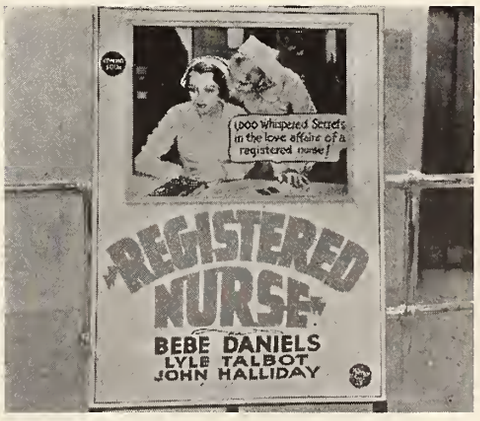
Platform top was beaverboard-covered, sides draped. Heavy chair was placed on 2 x 4 crosspiece, nailed solid. 1 x 2 crosspiece rested in slot on springs, worked by motor. The weight of chair caused constant motion of crosspiece.

Chair was used a week in advance in lobby and during run was planted in nearby window. Crowds continually gathered and were curious to know how it rocked, as no wires were visible. It caused plenty of tall excitement.

Morris Effects Ace Windows on "Dressing"

Walter Morris at the Stanley in Baltimore, Md., cracks often with those good looking window displays judging by a few he sent on for "We're Not Dressing." Among the many was a tie-up with a merchant who displayed cotton dresses in his window with a card reading "When Not Dressing Keep Cool in Cottons," with a liberal assortment of stills from the picture placed at vantage points.



Another little gag was a visiting card of Bing Crosby's the reverse side of which read "Sorry I missed you, will be at the Stanley in my new picture 'We're Not Dressing' starting Friday. Will see you there. (Signed Bing.)" These were distributed at all boys and girls high schools.

For "Upper World" Walter contacted daily newspapers and sold them to use the word "upperworld" in headlines over regular news stories wherever possible during engagement. Folded cards to stand upright were placed in all restaurants carrying copy and tie-up with a department store netted a Max Factor-Mary Astor cosmetic display. The above gags are typical of Walter's speed in his new location—the boy is stepping right smart.

Huffman's Hay Fever Haven

Urging the use of his theatres as a hay fever relief, Harry Huffman at Denver, Colo., has been running trailers promising immediate benefit to any sufferer.

THE ART OF BEDOODLE

AFTER much looking upon the screen and the exhaustion of the patience of many years, it becomes necessary to rise and remark that any time now it would be appropriate for the makers of motion pictures to discover that there is an art of typography.

The bric-a-brac horrors of the Victorian era and the jig saw atrocities of the Jersey mansions of the '90's are as nothing compared with the typographical carbuncles which pass for titles on the motion picture screen.

Million dollar productions, presenting the quintessence of the talent in authorship, acting and direction to be gleaned from two worlds, are being presented on the screen under maintitles that can be compared only with the concrete tombstones bedecked with pearl shell inlays rising from graves edged with inverted bottles found in Ozark cemeteries.

Motion picture titles appear dominated by a taste and super-wisdom which finds the experience of a thousand years and more of the lettered and printed page inadequate to the stupendous purposes of the screen. Titles are anything and everything except words presented in clean letters on a readable surface. Screen titles are made mostly by a Hollywood guild of putty punchers who achieve mudpie marvels in both bas relief and intaglio, only they never heard of either process. The results have all the charm of the pickle sign on "Hill 57."

Perfect examples of the world's best attainments in typography and the use of words in type or hand letter to say things have been available to all persons brave enough to look in a book since the middle of the sixteenth century. Hollywood may get around to it some time. Motion picture typography of today continues under the domination of the laws of the lowly art of bedoodle, the art that gave us the feather flowers under the bell jar on the parlor mantel and the conch shell on the what-not that Aunt Samatha brought home from Bermuda in 1894.

To the type-conscious eye the screen's reflection of the sins of the flesh are as nothing compared with its sins against the sacred and beautiful tradition of good printing.

SPEAKING OF APPLES

THE FILM DAILY, quoting at length from the Columbia sales convention address of Mr. Jack Cohn, in Atlantic City, credits him with saying:

"It's as unwise to condemn movies as a whole because of these few bad pictures as it is to throw out a whole barrel of apples because it contains a few bad ones."

Mr. Cohn is of course quite a considerable authority on the motion picture, but we know about apples, so may we not remark that any apple grower or packer who deliberately included "a few bad ones" in each season's barrel might be subject to some slight criticism by any good judge of apples. Apples can spoil in transit, but a motion picture, so we are told, usually arrives about the same as it left the studio.

Once upon a time, speaking of apples, the packers could can up any kind of spoiled and mis-grown fruit and label it applesauce and sell it. They did it and kept it up for a while and then came Dr. Wiley and the pure food laws. The packers forced it, speaking of apples, just because, speaking of apples, the public really didn't want that kind of apples, speaking of applesauce, of which we are speaking.

MISS HARDING SPEAKS

Writing in the syndicated Hollywood column of the Universal "Hearst Service," Mr. Jerry Hoffman recorded for issues of July 3, as follows:

> Imagine the fury of Ann Harding on returning from location to see the sexy billboards advertising her in "The Life of Vergie Winters!" Ann, who never has been associated with anything censorable or objectionable, found it more than she could bear. "Vergie Winters" is a clean movie of costume period. The billboards showed her in a low cut gown, reclining in a man's lap, a pose which had nothing to do with the picture. Eyes blazing, Ann stalked into the executive offices of the RKO studios and issued an ultimatum: "Unless everyone of those billboards is torn down wherever they are, I'm through with this company. Right now, too!" The next morning all the posters in Hollywood were down.

WHAT PRICE PUBLICITY?

SPEAKING of publicity, an advertiesment for the Des Moines Sunday Register rotogravure section, published in Time for July 9, says:

> FLAWS OF VENUS. Soon to be released by the Register and Tribune Syndicate, the four hundred best shots unveil amazing skeletons in Hollywood's closet, long hidden by unsung cinatomists of the studio with gauze, make-up, shadows and angle shots. Harlow's nose is sharp; Chatterton's has a bump on its tip; Lupe's is short; Jeanette MacDonald's long; Colbert's broad. One movie queen is flat chested, another too chesty. Anatomy runs riot, merely prefaces the exposé.

One may wonder, in view of the motion picture's considerable investment of money, skill and constant endeavor aimed toward the creation of glamour, just what committee of publicity geniuses made available the photographic material with which this newspaper promises to shatter the idols before the eyes of the fan public?

THIS WEEK - - - -

TALKING RIGHTS

That motion picture rights to material include dialogue, hence talking film rights, was decided by Superior Court Judge Leon Yankwich in Hollywood this week in a suit brought by Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg against Harold Bell Wright, in connection with his "When a Man's a Man." The plaintiffs had acquired the film rights to several Wright stories prior to the advent of talking pictures. . . .

GIVEAWAYS BANNED

Definitely on the black list are giveaways, theatre lotteries in Chicago, according to an order in which Harry M. Costello, in charge of crime prevention, declared such practices violate the city code. The action has come following complaints by merchants. . . .

LUNCH, FILMS

One more step toward victory has gone Charles Mensing, Memphis exhibitor, in his battle for legalization of his paid-for food and drink, plus free films evasion of local blue laws, as the grand jury refused to indict him for the offense for which he has been thrice arrested, fined. Other theatres will probably open Sundays following the jury's failure to act. . . .

"NIE" RETIRES

Planning retirement to a Hollywood home is Harry Neimeyer, 60-year-old veteran critic and dramatic editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, whose large following is the result of fair, unbiased reviews, long written under the name of "Nie." . . .

NEWSPAPER SPACE

Reacting to the benefit of all Kansas City theatres is the competitive battle for theatre advertising waged by the local Star and Journal-Post. Neighborhood houses especially are gaining valuable space in the Journal-Post, following their agreement to run in an amusement directory section at $3.50 per week. Cooperative tieups are moving from the first runs to the neighborhoods. . . .

FILM COURSES

To save millions yearly spent by theatrically minded people in film, radio schools, the department of education of New York state has inaugurated a series of free evening courses for adults in the two subjects, to carry through the summer. Anyone over 17 is eligible for the course, which will be conducted with the cooperation of major film, radio companies. . . .

DAYS OF OLD

New Jersey's "land of lakes," about West Milford, will pay tribute, during eight days from August 5, to the motion picture industry, since in its 150 square miles of mountains and lakes were set many a "thriller" of the early days of the screen, when its hub was at Fort Lee, N. J. Some of the most suspenseful scenes of the great open spaces featured in Pearl White's "The Perils of Pauline" were filmed there. . . .

CANDIDATES

Fighting for provincial legislative posts in Ontario, Canada, two local motion picture notables met defeat last week. Ernie Marks, owner of the New Martin, Oshawa, lost to W. E. N. Sinclair; Ray Lewis, editor of "Motion Picture Digest," seeking to represent Toronto, was defeated by Arthur Roebuck, attorney recently prominent in film cases. . . .

U. A. IN LONDON

For first run British and American films United Artists has taken over the Pavilion theatre, former legitimate house in London, to be opened in September after extensive alterations. The theatre, declared U. A. president Joseph M. Schenck in London, is part of the company's interchanging star and film policy. . . .

CAREER ENDED

Alec Francis, one-time lawyer, English army man, British stage player and screen performer of noted ability in character roles since 1910, passed suddenly in Hollywood late last week at the age of 65. Early years of diversified activity, then the call of the stage and the budding motion picture brought him to America and the Fort Lee, N. J., studios. His success was immediate—and lasting. He had important roles in films too numerous to mention.

HOLLYWOOD STYLES

Hollywood style-conscious is Australia, reports Arthur W. Kelly, a vice-president of United Artists, writing from a survey trip on that continent. The art of screen makeup, cosmetics, perfumes fill the eye and ear, via press and radio, of the Australian women, writes Mr. Kelly. . . .

"LOOKING FOR WORK"

"I'm just looking for work. I'm not trying to stage a comeback," last week in Hollywood declared once-famed, wealthy film actor Charles Ray, following his bankruptcy action. He sees his chance coming in the swing of the film cycle away from the smart and sophisticated, back to the homespun manner "before the picture grew up." . . .

MEXICAN PRODUCER

The list of Mexican film producers has reached a total of 17 with the establishment in Mexico City of Compañía Impulsora Cinematográfica, backed by American-Mexican capital, and headed by Paul Bush, automobile distributor. Sound films for the Mexican market is the object, with Robert Quigley of Hollywood as combined director-scenarist. . . .

CONDITIONS

"Things look good in Europe," last week, back in New York, declared Walter Wanger, arranging plans for independent production here. "There's plenty of activity there," he continued. "Every Hollywood producer should make the trip, there's no question about that." . . .

C.O.D. EQUIPMENT

Following the bankruptcy of Manhattan Playhouses, local circuit, and large losses sustained, New York theatre equipment supply dealers are planning to place all accounts on a C. O. D. basis. Indicative of the damage done was the reported loss to one firm of $11,000 on the account. . . .

TEN DISTRIBUTORS GRANT RIGHT TO CANCEL FILMS ON MORAL GROUNDS

All Releases Prior To July 15 Included

Organized motion picture production and distribution this week made its response to the movements represented in the Legion of Decency campaign by giving to the communities of the United States home rule in motion picture censorship—or selection—for all product released prior to July 15. After that date the recently established Production Code Administration takes responsibility for the screen.

From the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., issued, for Thursday publication, announcement that any exhibitor anywhere could cancel any picture, of the period, against which a bona fide public protest had been made.

From the offices of the ten member corporations issued letters of instructions to sales managers, division and branch managers, the same announcement with detailed instructions for application of this remarkable and revolutionary new policy.

In substance the motion picture industry through the Hays office says to America that no exhibitor, regardless of block booking—the great big bad bugaboo of recent propaganda by the Motion Picture Research Council and muchly cited by other exponents of reform movements—is required to play a picture, released before July 15, that his community does not want. The distributing corporations, in telling their field forces about it, set up the conditions under which the exhibitor may apply this "home rule" practice in his commercial relations.

Other developments of the week in connection with the Legion of Decency and the motion picture are summarized on the next page:

THE HOME RULE proclamation by which the motion picture industry seeks to meet the moral issues of the day is a product of many exhaustive conferences held at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in New York. Through the offices of the distributors communicating with their branches in the key cities a somewhat more complete and technical presentation to district and exchange managers is in transit, and is presented in this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD on a subsequent page. Herewith is the release issued by the Hays office in New York for publication today:

Amplifying Will H. Hays' statement of two weeks ago, which concerned the action taken to amend and strengthen the system of industry self-regulation established by the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, the following companies, members of that Association, announced yesterday that each would grant to exhibitors the right to omit the exhibition of any of their motion pictures released prior to July 15, 1934, against which there is a genuine protest on moral grounds:

Columbia Pictures Corporation
Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.
First National Pictures, Inc.
Fox Film Corporation
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation
Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation
RKO Distributing Corporation
United Artists Corporation
Universal Pictures Corporation
Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

This means that in any community in which there is genuine concerted objection to the showing of a particular picture on moral grounds an exhibitor who has contracted to exhibit that picture will be given the right to omit its exhibition without obligation for its rental.

The reason for the limitation of this cancellation privilege to pictures generally released prior to July 15 is because that is the date upon which the new regulatory provisions go into effect. After that date the Association's Production Code Administration will function with increased authority and the Board of Directors of the Association will assume final responsibility for all future motion pictures distributed by members of the Association.

To identify all films bearing the approval of the Association's Production Code Administration, a distinctive seal has been adopted and will be shown on the screen directly after the main title of all pictures. This seal, which every picture released after July 15 by members of the Association will bear, will be evidence of the industry's pledge that every precaution has been taken to insure compliance with the Production Code of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America.

RULES SET FOR CANCELING FILM

Following is a literal translation of the rules and regulations for effecting the distributors' new policy permitting exhibitors to cancel a picture on the grounds of a publicly announced moral protest. These rules were dispatched on Wednesday by the sales managers in New York to their branch managers in the field.

The exchange manager is empowered by the home office to grant the cancellation of a picture distributed by his company if he is convinced that there exists a bona fide public protest upon moral grounds made in good faith.

Pictures eligible for cancellation on those grounds must have been generally released before July 15, 1934, and if the elimination is granted, the exhibitor need not exhibit or pay for such picture. However, the exchange manager shall reserve the right in each instance of cancellation to substitute another picture for the picture cancelled. If the exhibitor had purchased all of the distributor's pictures, then, obviously, the distributor would not have a picture to substitute. But, if the exhibitor purchased only a part of the distributor's program, then the exhibitor must accept an additional picture to replace the cancelled production.

Immediately upon receiving notification from the exhibitor that the exhibitor requests a cancellation because of a general protest upon moral grounds, the exchange manager shall investigate and determine whether or not there actually exists such a publicly announced protest.

If the investigation does not convince the exchange manager that a bona fide protest exists, and if he is unable to convince the exhibitor that he has no grounds for cancelling, then the matter shall be referred to the Local Grievance Board. Even though the Grievance Board shall be called upon to determine the facts, the new "morality" cancellations are in no way governed by the code.

However, the new cancellation policy voluntarily adopted by the distributors provides that if, under the code, an exhibitor has the privilege to exclude 10 per cent of the number of features he has contracted for, he must first apply against such 10 per cent any picture that is cancelled on the grounds of a moral protest.

If the number of pictures so objected to on moral grounds exceeds the 10 per cent elimination privilege under the code, the cancellation of such additional pictures will be permitted, regardless. Also, if an exhibitor does not have a 10 per cent cancellation privilege under the code, he shall be entitled anyway to cancel such pictures as are objected to upon moral grounds.

This means that all exhibitor clients shall have the privilege of cancelling when there exists a publicly announced protest, regardless of whether or not they are entitled to cancel under the code. But, when an exhibitor has not used up his code cancellation privileges, then he must apply the "morality" cancellation to such unused code cancellation privilege.

The exchange manager, in case of a dispute with an exhibitor over the legitimacy of the protest, shall suggest and consent to referring the dispute to the Local Grievance Board, but such Board shall only determine the following facts, and shall not rule on the question of the morality of the production: (1) Whether the picture was generally released by the distributor before July 15th; (2) Whether there exists a publicly announcd general protest upon moral grounds; (3) Whether such protest is genuine and was made in good faith.

In addition to confining its findings to the three facts described above, and refraining from rendering any opinion concerning the moral questions which may be involved, the Grievance Board shall not order the distributor to cancel any pictures so involved. The Grievance Board is merely invited to determine the facts.

All objections must be based upon a publicly announced protest of a general nature made in good faith and actually existing in the place in which the exhibitor's theatre is located. The protests must be made by residents of the community. An exhibitor in one town would not be entitled to apply for a cancellation on the grounds of a public protest made in another town, even though the town is a neighboring one.

Producers were preparing to launch new self-regulatory machinery of the Production Code Administration at midnight on Sunday, with Joseph I. Breen acting as "umpire" and with Will H. Hays on the ground in Hollywood until the system was actually started.

Radio and advertising "space sellers" attempted to sell a countrywide "good will" advertising campaign to the industry.

Darryl Zanuck, in Rome, cabled for appointment as an industry spokesman to explain why "clean" pictures should not be included in any church boycott.

Legions of Decency were being formed in England and South Wales.

Exhibitors in some quarters continued to discuss a shutdown as a result of church boycott.

William Randolph Hearst, writing to his newspapers, declared that "the era of cheap indecency is over—on the screen."

Protestants started formulating a plan to show motion pictures in churches on Sunday evenings in retaliation against theatres showing "unclean" films.

Several Catholic dioceses start publication of "black" and "white" lists.

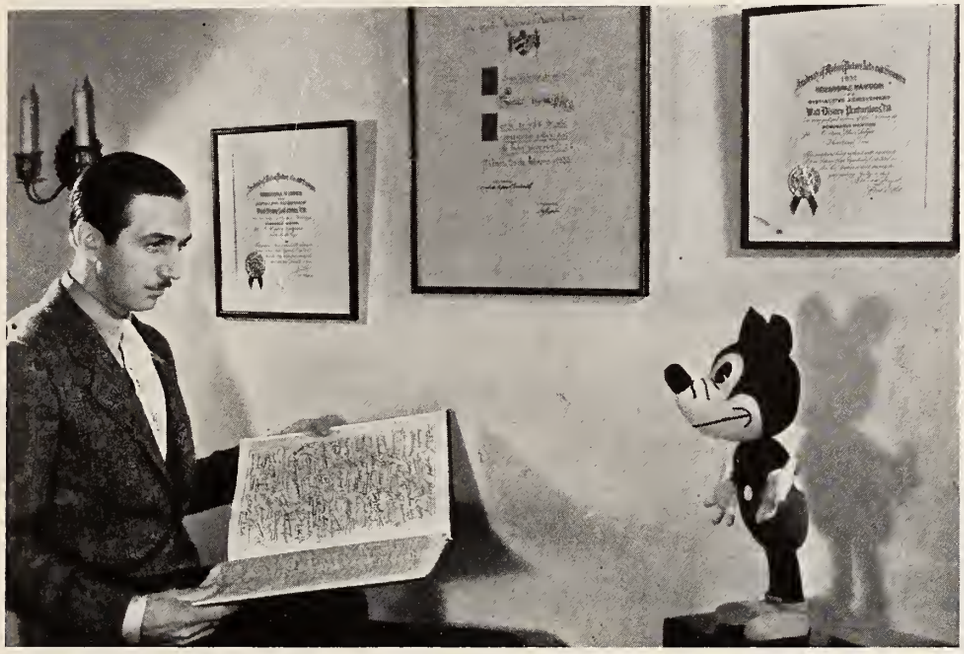
National Legion of Decency organization talked of to replace localized independent efforts.

Estimated that 8,000,000 Legion pledges have been signed, with 12,000,000 predicted by September 1st.

Federal Council of Churches—representing 25 Protestant faiths—ready to actively participate in the movement.

Proposals made to extend campaign to literature and the stage.

Campaign in the field extended in Albany; Augusta, Ga.; Baltimore; Berkeley, Cal.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Buffalo; Chicago; Cincinnati; Columbus, Ohio; Concordia, Kan.; Detroit; East St. Louis, Ill.; Englewood, N. J.; Fall River, Mass.; Hershey, Pa.; Houston, Texas; Kansas City; Lima, Ohio; Los Angeles; Louisville; Milwaukee; New Philadelphia, Ohio; New York City; Niagara Falls; Oxford, Ohio; Providence; San Francisco; St. Louis; Seattle; Washington, and Wilmington.



Wide publicity in the public press will be sought by the Hays organization for the new cancellation policy. Every daily newspaper in the country will be asked immediately to tell their readers that no exhibitor hereafter need show a production released prior to July 15th when there exists in the community a bona fide protest on grounds of morality.

The Hays campaign will be conducted to acquaint the public with the exhibitor's new responsibility, the producers pointing out that in addition to giving theatres the opportunity to cancel productions already released, they have themselves assumed the responsibility for production standards after July 15 under the new Hollywood self-regulatory system of certification of script and negative.

27 MUNDUS RELEASES ESTABLISH INTERCHANGE WITH BRITISH STUDIOS

Physical Service by UA; May Add Domestic Product; Announcement Parallels Wilcox Visit; Schenck to London

The first important step of the current era addressed at an adequate inter-relation between motion picture production in Great Britain and the United States comes in the announcement of the Mundus Distributing Corporation, with a schedule of twenty-seven pictures for the new season, beginning releases July 23.

The present schedule consists entirely of British pictures, although it is said to be possible that the Mundus machinery of sales and distribution, operating with its physical service out of United Artists exchanges, may later include some domestic pictures.

Wilcox Visiting America

The announcement comes concurrently with a visit to New York of Herbert Wilcox of British and Dominions, London, and an excursion to London by Joseph M. Schenck, both figures in the negotiations and construction of the new organization.

The project may be taken to represent the American industry's first adjustment to the rising importance of the British market as a consumer of Hollywood wares, with also a new attitude of acceptance toward screening worthy production from British studios.

British grosses on American pictures of the last year have in poker parlance given the British industry both cards and chips with which to declare themselves into a share in the whole of the great international English speaking world market.

The Mundus corporation offices at 729 Seventh avenue in New York and its affairs are being administered by Earl W. Kramer, general manager, who has just announced his schedule of 27 pictures.

Titles and Stars

First to be distributed is "Cash," starring Robert Donat, seen in "The Private Life of Henry VIII." For release two weeks later is "Blue Danube" with Joseph Schildkraut, and third is "Men of Tomorrow," with Robert Donat and Merle Oberon. Release will follow each fortnight.

The Mundus releases will include the work of such producers and directors as Alexander Korda, Herbert Wilcox, Rowland V. Lee, Jack Buchanan.

Others of the 27 films are "Night of the Garter," Sydney Howard and Winifred Shotter; "Over-Night," Robert Donat; "Venetian Night," Joseph Schildkraut and Brigette Helm; "That's a Good Girl," Jack Buchanan; "Wolves," Charles Laughton and Dorothy Gish; "Girl From Maxim's," Frances Day; "Chance of a Night Time," Ralph Lynn and Winifred Shotter; "Almost a Divorce," Sydney Howard and Nelson Keys; "Counsel's Opinion," Binnie Barnes and Cyril Maude; "Plunder," Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn; "General John Regan," Henry Edwards; "Wedding Rehearsal," Roland Young and Merle Aberon and "The Love Contract," Owen Nares and Winifred Shotter.

Also, "A Night Like This," Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn; "It's a King," Sydney Howard; "The King's Cup," Dorothy Bouchier and Harry Milton; "Mischief," Ralph Lynn and Winifred Shotter; "Betty in Mayfair," Anthony Bushell and Winifred Shotter; "Say It With Music," Percy Marmont and Jack Payne and Band; "Leap Year," Tom Walls; "The Ghost Walkers," Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn; "The Trouble Cruise," Sydney Howard; "Girls Please," Sydney Howard and Jane Baxter, and "The Blarney Stone," Tom Walls.

Complete press books, accessories and exploitation campaigns for each production will be available.

"New Cinema World"

"We have come to the discovery of a new world—or maybe it is a re-discovery—the English speaking world as a unified motion picture domain. The industry is now in the initial steps of the process of adjustment to and occupation of this new cinema world." In this Herbert Wilcox of London, having completed distribution arrangements for a line of British production in America, summarized the findings of his current New York sojourn.

"At last," observed Mr. Wilcox, "there has come a recognition on both sides of the Atlantic that our common language and other ties create for us no less a community of interest in the expressions and concerns of the motion picture than they have for many decades in the kindred arts of literature and the stage.

"It is curious that this has had to come so slowly for the motion picture, but it has come. It is obviously one of the many consequences of the invasion of the spoken word.

"Commercial consequences follow the technological evolution. Now it has come to be discovered that an American picture may do quite as handsome a gross in Great Britain as at home in America, and in turn that a competent British picture can earn for American theatres in terms that make it important as a contribution."

"The point is that it has now so come to pass that by force of the importance of the British market, British production has at last been put into a trading position of importance."

Mr. Wilcox on Tuesday night presented in preview his "Nell Gwyn" at the Astor theatre to a large audience of motion picture personages and the reviewers of the industry and lay press. The showing was followed by a supper party for the whole invited audience held at the Astor Hotel, with a menu quite as heartily British with its firkins of sack and old foaming ale, as the picture itself. Within the week Mr. Wilcox is sailing for home, for a period of some six weeks, after which he is to return to New York to organize his American activities.

"Nell Gwyn" is to be released by United Artists as a United Artists picture, in no wise connected with the Mundus project in which he is also interested.

"British production to succeed and take its place in this new world market, which for us means a place in American programs, especially, must go forward on an entirely new concept," remarks Mr. Wilcox. "We must make our own British contribution but we must avail ourselves of all that is best in the technology of Hollywood. Personally, I shall be content with a decidedly limited output, say six or eight pictures a season, made to new standards, world standards."

Among Mr. Wilcox's production projects is Dickens' "The Old Curiosity Shop" which will be directed in England by D. W. Griffith.

MGM HAS 3,000 HOUSES LINED UP FOR TRAILERS

New Service Begins January 1 When National Screen Deal Terminates; Has New Trailer Department at Coast Studio

Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer's distribution forces in the field have returned to the home office in New York some 3,000 contracts signed by exhibitors for the new Metro trailer service which will begin on January 1st upon the expiration of the company's contractual trailer arrangements with National Screen.

National has in recent months distributed some trailers produced by MGM on its outstanding productions. At the beginning of the year MGM will undertake the production of its own trailers entirely. Warner Brothers have been so engaged since last year.

Plans Individual Treatment

Believing that the present system of mass trailer construction by one manufacturer for virtually all of the large companies has resulted in a flood of trailers which are so standardized as to invade their appeal to theatre patrons, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer management decided to withdraw from the group arrangement in which the large distributors participate with National, and to install in the studio at Culver City a separate short subject organization for the production of its own trailers on the basis of individual treatment and construction.

The few trailers which Metro has produced itself as a test, and which were distributed by National Screen under an existing exclusive franchise, were said by Metro officials to have proven quite successful in the field, and, according to the company, served to verify the management's opinion that the sales effect of the present day trailer will be strengthened considerably if individual treatment is substituted so that the trailers are as varied in theme and construction as the productions they advertise.

Will Make Them as Shorts

Under the present system, the producers in Hollywood forward to the trailer-maker in New York some assorted negative bits from which the trailer manufacturer selects various sequences which are then interspersed through advertising matter about the attraction and the play date.

Most of these scenes being used in the standard trailer do not actually appear in the completed feature production, this because the studios forward to the trailer-maker negative bits taken from material deleted before the production is completed. The reason for this procedure is to make the trailer available for the exhibitor sufficiently ahead of the actual showing of the feature in theatres.

Metro plans to construct its trailers right on the lot in California much in the same manner as a regular short subject, with special scenarists and film editors collaborating in rounding out a regular short "plot," instead of a piece of advertising ballyhoo in celluloid. "Trumpet blowing of adjectives will give way to a trailer which in itself will have sufficient entertainment to create a desire to witness the feature performance which it represents," according to Metro.

New Organization for Shea Buffalo Holdings

The reorganization of the Shea theatre properties in Buffalo, owned by the late Michael Shea, has been completed, with Buffalo Theatres, Inc., superseding the Shea Theatre Corporation and other subsidiaries except Erie Operating Company.

Stock in Buffalo Theatres, Inc., is held by the McNaughton Realty Company, Paramount and MGM and by Vincent R. McFaul, who was Mr. Shea's vice-president and general manager. Mr. McFaul becomes president and general manager of the new company. Erie Operating will continue, at least for the present, to manage the Shea community and suburban theatres.

Harry Pollard, Director, Dies Suddenly on Coast

Harry Pollard, well known actor and director, died in Hollywood on Saturday of a heart attack. He was 55 years of age and had been ill for six weeks.

Mr. Pollard appeared in several silent films with his wife, Margarita Fisher. Among the pictures which he directed were "The Prodigal," "The Leather Pushers," "Show Boat," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Shipmates," and several of the "Cohens and Kellys" series for Universal.

Reports Cleveland Gain In 1934 in Admissions

The paid admissions at approximately 80 first run and neighborhood theatres in the Cleveland territory increased to a total of $3,523,025 in the first five months of 1934, compared with $2,147,876 in the same period of 1933, it was noted by the Cleveland Trust Company in an advertisement in the Cleveland Press.

NIRA N. Y. Case Deferred

Actors Group Expanding

The American Federation of Actors plans the organization of two more branches in the Midwest, according to Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary. The new groups will be located in Chicago and Milwaukee. Walter Ryan has been named Detroit representative.

Detroit Buying Group Realigned

A new company, Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., has been formed in Detroit following the dropping of Mid-States Theatres, Inc., the local booking combine project which has been subject to considerable argument and speculation among local exhibitors. It is understood all question of the legality of the organization has been removed.

The new organization is capitalized at $50,000 and incorporated under a law passed in 1931. Indicating the present status of the organization, Ray Moon, general manager, said:

"In the past, certain factions have raised a question concerning our right to exist. Formation of the new company removes all possible doubt, as the law . . . completely protects us."

Former officers of Mid-States have been elected to head the new organization as follows: James Robertson, president; Fred De Lodder, vice-president; Barney Kilbride, secretary; Frank Westman, treasurer, and Mr. Moon. All former members of Mid-States retain their membership in the new combine. The new group, according to Mr. Moon, will have complete control of buying and booking for its members, Mid-States merely having booked film after its exhibitor-members had contracted for it. The company will be responsible for payment of film bills as well.

Walsh Takes Theatres In Paramount Arrangement

George Walsh, under a new arrangement, has become a Paramount operating associate with a percentage of the net and a guaranteed salary, with approximately 14 upstate New York theatres under his supervision. Mr. Walsh had for a long period been connected with the Comerford circuit, with headquarters in Scranton, Pa.

In taking over the group of houses, he will buy his own film, arrange his own bookings and operate from headquarters in Poughkeepsie. The houses are located in Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Peekskill, Middletown, Syracuse and Glens Falls.

Take Peerless Process

Demetre Duponte of Cinecolor Ltd., has purchased the rights to use of the Peerless film process for England, France, Italy, Belgium and possessions. The new apparatus is said to process negative as well as positive film without unreeling.

leased prior to July 15 will remain in effect throughout the life of the picture, which is usually two years.

Small town exhibitors and neighborhood theatres will benefit more than the large operations which have already shown most of the current releases. However, the same right to eliminate is given every theatre, regardless.

Although the Local Grievance Boards will be used to determine the legitimacy of the local public protest upon which the exhibitor seeks cancellation, the new cancellation policy is in no way governed by or related to the motion picture code. Nor will the Grievance Boards be asked for a decision until it has been determined that the exhibitor and the exchange manager cannot agree.

Prior to adoption of the NRA code by the motion picture industry, last December, there existed no uniformity in cancellation arrangements between distributors and exhibitors under individual sales contracts. In many instances contracts did not contain any cancellation clause. In others, the elimination privilege varied numerically. The exhibitors had been fighting for years for a standardized cancellation clause giving greater elimination.

Attacks by local religious, civic or municipal groups against the showing of a picture of questionable moral fiber were defended by the exhibitor with the remark that "iron clad" block booking contracts would not enable him to withdraw the production complained of. The agitation conducted by groups outside of the industry against the block booking "evil," so-called, grew to tremendous proportions as a result—even though the defense of the exhibitor was not always a true explanation.

Privileges Under the Code

Then came the code which, beginning with pictures released after December 7, 1933, gave to exhibitors a 10 per cent elimination privilege under the following conditions: (1) The exhibitor must purchase all the pictures offered him by the distributor at one time; (2) The rental of the pictures must average no more than $250 each; (3) The exhibitor must not be in default under the contract.

The only other clause in the code under which an exhibitor can get relief from showing a picture against which a protest had been made on moral grounds is the clause wherein the rental to be paid is determined on a percentage basis and a day is specified in the contract for the showing of that picture, and the exhibitor seeks to be relieved from the obligation of showing the picture on such designated date for the reason only that the subject and character of the picture are unsuitable for exhibition on the specified date. The Local Grievance Board would determine the justification of the exhibitor's complaint, but the distributor would not lose that date, and the exhibitor would be compelled to show the picture later.

Basically, this clause was intended to relieve the exhibitor from showing an improper picture on Sundays or on socalled "family nights," when a family audience predominates.

It appears, then, that this week's decision of the distributors to grant exhibitors the privilege of eliminating a picture on grounds of morality might serve the dual purpose of alleviating both the church agitation against unclean productions and the agitation of the social reform groups against the block booking "evil," socalled.

On Sunday at midnight the industry in Hollywood will actually set in motion the new machinery for making pictures to conform with the morality pattern devised by the churches. Joseph I. Breen, assistant to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., becomes production code administrator under a plan of strict censorship of scripts and negatives of member companies and a system of licensing, for exhibition, only productions of the proper moral standard.

At the same time the distributors in New York will make effective their decision to accept cancellations from exhibitors on pictures which local opinion decrees unclean, as explained on page 10.

Under the new production setup of self-regulation, which was announced several weeks ago following a conference in Cincinnati between leading Catholic churchmen, Mr. Breen and Martin Quigley, publisher of Quigley Publications, members of the MPPDA promise not to exhibit a picture unless passed by Mr. Breen in Hollywood, nor unless there is affixed thereto a subtitle following the main title declaring that the production has met all the requirements of the producers' own code of ethics (adopted in 1930).

In addition, each producer will receive a certificate of approval, a tentative draft of which follows:

Certificate No. .....

THIS IS TO CERTIFY THAT .....
(Name of Producer)

In the Production of .....
(Title of Picture)

Has complied with the self-imposed regulations of the industry as administered by the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to maintain right standards in the production of motion pictures as a form of entertainment; and said picture is hereby approved.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I, JOSEPH I. BREEN, Director of the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Production Code Administration to be hereunto affixed this ..... day of 193 ....

Director, Production Code Administration.

SEAL (MPPDA).

These certificates probably will be printed in bound volumes, with stubs to be retained by Mr. Breen's office. California certificates will begin with Number 1, eastern certificates with Number 01, the stub to include the title, distributor's and producer's names and a notation as to whether the picture is a feature or a short subject.

The subtitle seals to be attached to the film will probably read as follows:

This Picture Approved By the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America Certificate No. . . . . .

On the foregoing caption there will be superimposed the seal of the MPPDA.

Will Hays arrived in Hollywood Monday night to be on hand for inauguration of the new system, which is generally accepted as the industry's most important move toward self-regulation and follows a decision made by the member companies not to exhibit any picture which violates the tenets of the production code.

Should Mr. Breen's division in Hollywood fail to give a certificate of approval to a picture, the producer may submit his film on appeal to the board of directors of the MPPDA in New York, which alone has the power of veto. Should the board sustain Mr. Breen's verdict of rejection, the picture cannot be released until the objectionable matter is removed.

While there have been reports that any member company releasing a picture without removing disapproved material and without receiving a certificate of approval would be fined $25,000, no official verification has been forthcoming.

The new service under Mr. Breen will be made available to non-members of the MPPDA, but it cannot be made compulsory for such companies as in the case of MPPDA affiliates.

Previously, there existed in Hollywood a local rotating committee of three heads of studios belonging to the Hays organization. They had the power to sustain or reject any decision on a picture made by the Coast division of the MPPDA. Such vetoing power is now transferred to the board of directors in New York, composed of the corporate heads of the large companies.

Meanwhile both Mr. Hays and Mr. Breen were meeting daily with studio chiefs to explain to them the machinery of the new plan. A final general meeting will be called over the week-end.

Production Slows Down

Studio heads themselves refused to discuss the church situation, but the extent of the readjustment behind the scenes was becoming more apparent daily, with production activity continuing on the decline, due for the most part to slower and more careful preparation of scripts and pictures to conform with the new demands. There were but 33 features and seven shorts in process of filming during the week throughout Hollywood, with historical subjects, adventure stories and outdoor dramas finding a new high place in schedules, replacing the type of stories which had caused the church protests.

The Hollywood production code committee of the Hays organization came forth this week with facts and figures to prove that some 260 original stories, novels and plays considered for filming in 1933 were rejected under self-regulatory measures.

In the process of adapting dramatic material to the requirements of the production code, it was said that about 160 story proposals were rejected by the producers last year on the advice of the MPPDA's Coast personnel, while another 100 proposed stories were eliminated in the East.

The average number of basic changes made in scripts or story treatments as a result of conferences between the studios and the MPPDA was estimated at 1,200 yearly, besides some 3,000 less important changes.

Even after filming is started, it was said, 600 important changes are made in order to make certain of compliance with the production code's requirements. The estimate includes only the results of formal conferences with the Association's office. Innumerable changes are claimed to have been made by scenario writers during adaptation. The Hollywood branch of the MPPDA this week submitted the following table of production code operations for 1933:

A project which would encourage the addition of motion picture programs to Sunday night services in churches of all Protestant faiths is included in a plan by which the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America hopes to promote the production of better films.

FEDERAL COUNCIL PLANS OWN PLEDGE

Reverend Worth M. Tippy, head of the Council's department of church and social service, who has been cooperating in the nation-wide drive against objectionable pictures, announced the plan in New York Tuesday in explaining the proposed creation of a film service bureau to operate under the council.

The bureau would select suitable pictures for presentation in churches desiring them.

Council to Select Pledge

Full support of American Protestantism will be given the Catholic movement on Friday when the Federal Council, meeting in New York, will decide on the type of pledge to be used by some 25 Protestant faiths affiliated with the Council. One pledge would require an unconditional boycott of objectionable pictures, another would permit the signer to use his own judgment. Millions of recruits to the drive are predicted.

"Protestant churches can reach at least 60,000,000 people in this fight," warned Dr. Tippy, who is directing the Protestant forces in the campaign. Four million Protestants can be enrolled immediately, he said.

Dr. Tippy said that 75 per cent of the membership of the Hays organization favor cleaner films. "The bad pictures come from the remaining 25 per cent," he added, warning that between 5,000 and 10,000 Protestant churches are equipped to show clean pictures in opposition to theatres showing objectionable films.

Attending Friday's meeting will be representatives of the National Conference of Jews and Christians, headed by Newton D. Baker, and other denominational divisions, besides delegates from the YMCA and YWCA. Sessions will be held at the Federal headquarters, 105 East 22nd Street, New York.

Hearst Calls Industry Faithless

William Randolph Hearst, publisher of many American newspapers and indirectly engaged in motion pictures through his Hearst Cosmopolitan Productions, which releases the Marion Davies pictures through MGM, caused to be inserted in all of his publications, last weekend, a full three-column display editorial about "the fight for clean pictures," in which he charged the industry with being "faithless to its responsibility, indifferent to its obligation." As a result of such faithlessness and indifference, he added, the motion picture "is incurring today the penalty of its negligence."

Mr. Hearst said in his editorial that he was the anonymous "American Father" who had signed a letter appearing in his Los Angeles Examiner on October 5, 1933, foretelling "with accuracy the events which are now taking place in the industry." In his anonymous letter, Mr. Hearst had predicted that "There will surely soon be a revolution against the degeneracy, the immorality, the indecency of the stage and screen."

Says Box Office Will Decide

Now, said the publisher, that prophecy proves to have been "a sufficiently pointed warning. But warnings were of no avail," he added this week, "nor will anything avail in the way of improving the character of film productions except the course which the churches and the moral American masses are pursuing."

Mr. Hearst held that "nothing will reform the screen except the box office," although he did not believe it wise for the churches to condemn all pictures. "The most effective course," he said, "is to approve the good and condemn the bad."

"The era of cheap indecency is over—on the screen. Let us now have a period of merit and morality."

Press Quotes Commendations

All the Hearst newspapers reported later that the church heads approved of his stand, quoting commendations from Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago; Reverend Timothy Rowland, editor of The New World; Reverend Dr. George Craig Stewart, Episcopal Bishop; Reverend George W. Dixon, vice-president of the Chicago Federation of Churches; Reverend Charles Meade, Methodist Bishop of Kansas City; Uldine Utley, girl evangelist; Reverend Walter Howlett, of the Federation of Churches; Reverend Wilfred Parsons, S.J., editor of America, a Catholic review; Right Reverend W. Bertrand Stevens, Episcopal Bishop of Los Angeles; Right Reverend Hugh Walker, Los Angeles, and others.

The New York Times assigned a special correspondent to report on the effects in Hollywood's studios of the church agitation. They found the cinema colony "still groggy from the shock it has received from the 'clean up' ultimatum."

"The present crisis is admittedly the most serious confronting Hollywood since the talking picture, requiring an overnight adjustment of financial and artistic values," reported the conservative Times, which added that "the edict of better pictures from the standpoint of morals is already accepted on the coast."

The newspaper predicted possibilities of independent companies "operating outside of the Hays roost" stepping in "and perhaps even running away with the show." Even before the results of the reform are known, it was said, "bootleggers propose to go on turning out a brand of pictures not countenanced by the 'New Deal.'"

Cite Seasonal Decline

Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of one week ago, showing a regular seasonal 12 per cent drop in theatre attendance in large cities, was quickly seized by newspapers as evidence of the effect of the church movement on the box office.

Theatre men along Broadway, who are familiar with the daily box office records reaching home offices from the field, denied that any appreciable decline had been felt in admissions from the church campaign.

Advertising space sellers for publications and radio have attempted to interest the industry in countrywide advertising campaigns to create goodwill on forthcoming outstanding productions.

National Broadcasting Company is understood to have proposed to the large distributors and circuits a national radio buildup for the motion picture.

One of the leading advertising agencies saw visions of the industry spending a half million in publications, while another enterprising advertising medium proposed a nationwide billboard campaign in which all the companies would participate supposedly to offset the effects of the church agitation.

Too, there were reports that the stars of Hollywood would take to the road visiting theatres to explain the producers' position. All these reputed proposals, and possibly many more, were heard, digested and filed away.

Analyzing the economic phases of the church campaign, the Wall Street Journal of Dow, Jones reported Tuesday that motion picture executives do not believe the movement will have any permanent effect on earnings. "This is not because they do not think the campaign will be effective, but because they are entirely willing to meet the demands of church leaders in their productions," said the financial publication.

"Many responsible executives in the larger companies have for some time been openly against the growing trend toward more liberal treatment of sex in films," the publication continued, and "in removing this element from films, the amusement companies will not be destroying an essential of box office appeal."

While Darryl Zanuck was in Rome cabling the Hays office in New York for authorization to seek an audience with Pope Pius to discuss the Legion of Decency, Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, was receiving in the private Papal chambers a second blessing for the campaign.

Mr. Zanuck told newspaper correspondents upon his arrival in Rome that he hoped to convince the Pope that not all motion pictures made in the United States are objectionable. In this

TEACH "AMERICAN," CECIL DE MILLE ASKS

In a move ostensibly to avert a shortage of competent acting talent, Cecil B. DeMille has dispatched a plea to leading educators of America for improved methods in teaching what the Paramount home office publicity department is pleased to describe as the "American language."

The letters, which were sent by the Paramount director to the heads of 16 leading universities and colleges, emphasized his contention that Hollywood "is sadly lacking in competent, available talent." The main difficulty, he found, was in diction, a fault which he said the public schools fail to correct.

Said the Paramount publicity department:

"It was for the purpose of protecting the future supply of talent that the plea was issued, and for the purpose of insuring the use of pure and correct American where the actor first learns it—in the public schools."

Perhaps Mr. DeMille envisions the day when the Barrymores, the Dresslers, the Howards and the Colmans will be, in good, pure American, "deseeing, dewing and dosing" all over the lot.

Among those who have been asked to teach better "American" are Dr. James Bryant Conant, Harvard; Dr. James Rowland Angell, Yale; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Columbia; Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Stanford, and Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, University of Chicago.

NATIONAL LEGION SEEN AS NEXT STEP

manner Mr. Zanuck expected to have the Legion urged not to blacklist good pictures. However, Mr. Zanuck was not expected to receive the approval of the Hays organization for his proposed Papal visit.

From London came word of the formation of Councils of Action to engage in the crusade.

In South Wales, where there are 90,000 Catholics, the movement has been joined by the Nonconformists.

National Legion Seen Next

Father George F. Dineen, rector of St. Ignatius Church at Chicago, who is a member of the national committee of priests overseeing the Legion of Decency, was reported to have asserted that organization of a national Legion, in place of the present individual local setups, is the next step to be taken by the Catholic Church.

Efforts of the Legion will be redoubled, he said, and a course in motion picture appreciation will be introduced as a study in parochial schools.

An estimate made last week places the number of Legion of Decency pledges signed to date as high as 8,000,000, with the prediction that by September 1 some 12,000,000 parishioners of all faiths will have executed the pledge. The estimate of pledges signed was later confirmed by America, Catholic weekly, which said that Bishops in 42 dioceses throughout the country have asked their parishioners to join the movement. In addition, many Catholics in the remaining 61 dioceses are cooperating.

Father Wilfrid Parsons, S. J., editor of America, declared that the drive against indecent pictures is not for the purpose of obtaining censorship. "Quite the contrary," he said. "The responsibility does not belong to the state, and we are throwing it back to the producers, where it belongs."

Indications that "salacious" literature and indecent burlesque shows and stage performances are next in line for a "housecleaning" came this week from numerous church sources.

In New York, prominent Catholic, Protestant and Jewish clergymen and laymen banded together to bring books and plays of an objectionable nature under the ban.

Despite indications late Tuesday that the plan of Warner Bros. and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania to close all theatres in the Philadelphia sector might be summarily dropped pending further developments in the Legion of Decency campaign, Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre executive, said that the two-weeks closing notice, posted last Thursday, for the 75 Warner-Stanley theatres in Philadelphia "still stands."

Most Favor Conciliation

The two rival independent theatremen's groups in Philadelphia—the MPTO and Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association—on Monday appointed committees to confer with Warners on the proposed move to close local houses until the local church boycott is modified. Exhibitors in the sector had been divided on the question of shutting down, with the majority in favor of a conciliation.

"We are innocent," asserted Charles Segall, newly elected president of the MPTO, "but we must bear the burden of the boycott. The churches have not condemned pictures in this territory but have condemned us."

A meeting of the MPTO heard M. E. Comerford, pioneer theatre man, express the opinion that the matter would right itself. He definitely opposed the idea of closing.

In the field, the church campaign was being extended along all fronts, with renewed activity in Albany, Augusta, Ga., Baltimore, Berkeley, Cal., Bridgeport, Conn., Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Columbus, Ohio, Concordia, Kan., Detroit, East St. Louis, Englewood, N. J., Fall River, Mass., Hershey, Pa., Houston, Kansas City, Lima, Ohio, Los Angeles, Louisville, Milwaukee, New Philadelphia, Ohio, New York, Niagara Falls, Oxford, Ohio, Providence, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle, Washington and Wilmington.

Demands for resignation of Mr. Hays as president of the MPPDA were heard from some radical churchmen. A spokesman in Hollywood told an Associated Press reporter that the suggestions that Mr. Hays resign were "absurd."

Called "Last Resort"

In Albany, Father James Kelly, chairman of the country's first Legion of Decency, continued his fight to "boycott the box-office." He called the boycott the "last resort" as he completed organization of Legions in cities and parishes throughout Bishop Gibbons' diocese.

From Atlanta and Augusta, 20,000 Legion pledges were mailed to Catholics throughout Georgia as the drive opened in that state.

Catholics in Bridgeport, Conn., joined the movement this week at the urgence of Bishop Maurice McAuliffe, of Hartford, who told parishioners to "stay away from the movies until the box office tells the story." He warned parents that they were responsible for their children's moral welfare.

Baltimore's Archbishop, Right Reverend Michael J. Curley, made an appeal for Jewish participation in the movement. "I want to say very frankly that there is a board of control of ten men who dominate the output of motion and talkie pictures, and six of these are Jews. I want to appeal to the Jewish race, to the Jewish producers to help in this cause and clean up what's a mighty evil condition," said the Archbishop as he left for a holiday in Ireland. He added that the churches cannot act as censors, but that the responsibility for screen product rests with the producers. The church anti-film movement is growing to a considerable extent in the Baltimore territory, Archbishop Curley advised.

Interfaith action was launched in Berkeley, Cal., where Jews joined with Protestants and Catholics in the fight.

Buffalo's 232 Catholic parishes and 36 missions were pledged to the Legion by Bishop William Turner, while Dean S. Whitney, of St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral, declared that it may not be necessary much longer to keep children away from pictures, inferring that theatres may be compelled to close as a result of the campaign. In the same city, Father Alfred Barrett, S.J., moderator of the Student Sodality, told churchgoers that elimination of double features, "so prominent in neighborhood houses," is a major objective of the Legion of Decency. Father Barrett's uncle is Amedee Van Beuren, RKO short subject producer.

The church situation in Chicago became acute during the week. The local Legion's new "board of censors," created to "furnish necessary information to those signing the movie pledge," issued a list in which it approved of 52 current features, listed 41 as being "offensive in spots," and 31 as being "immoral and indecent." The list is intended only for that diocese.

The Chicago campaign planned by the Catholics actually started in 410 churches. Some 100,000 members of the Holy Name Society are being enrolled in the Legion as active workers for pledges. In the fall the campaign will be carried into schools, while 500,000 students represented at the convention of the Student Spiritual Leadership promised support.

The student convention urged a National Catholic Review Board in Hollywood to pass upon every film. The campaign to be conducted by the students will be extended to "salacious" literature.

Cardinal Mundelein, of the Chicago diocese, expects 1,250,000 parishioners to enroll. To these will be added 1,000,000 Methodists, Bishop Ernest Lynn Waldorf pledging support of his church to Cardinal Mundelein.

Chicago radio listeners this week heard Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, broadcasting at the World's Fair, hail as a distinct advantage in the church campaign what she termed voluntary censorship on the part of the industry.

In Cincinnati, Reverend Charles Olson, pastor, speaking to the congregation of the First Universalist Church, voiced approval of the Legion, which, he said, should go further.

Columbus activities included an attack on Will Hays by the Reverend Henry Hoesman, of the Hope Lutheran Church. He said that Mr. Hays should be "ousted." A pessimistic prediction of the future of the Legion was voiced by Reverend Otto Ebert, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church. Dr. Beverley Skinner, Ohio censor director, received 25,000 signatures on petitions asking for complete rejection of undesirable pictures by the censor board, rather than passage after "pruning."

Called "Diabolical Destroyer"

Concordia, Kansas, became headquarters of a Legion drive launched this week throughout northern Kansas by Bishop Francis J. Tief, who urged parish priests immediately to enlist the support of all Catholic church organizations in the diocese and to study the reactions of exhibitors to their campaign of "protest against this diabolical destroyer of Christian virtue."

Davenport, Iowa and the diocese thereabouts joined the Legion.

In Detroit, A. J. Norris, non-theatrical authority, expressed the opinion that the church campaign would be a boon to the non-theatrical business.

The East St. Louis, Ill., Better Films Council, headed by Elsie Clanahan, started a drive to enlist local churches in its work.

At Englewood, N. J., 3,200 persons signed the Legion pledge.

From Fall River, Mass., came a vigorous denunciation of Will Hays. Bishop James J. Cassidy, Catholic, demanded his resignation, declaring he had been "false to the trust imposed on him" as a champion of clean films and is a "co-betrayer with the movie industry of the sacred rights of parents to protection of the morals of their children."

Meeting at Hershey, Pa., the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union heard Dr. Ross Stover, of Philadelphia, place the blame on the producers.

Protestants of Houston, joined the Catholics' Legion drive. The Methodist and Baptist pastors' conference, meeting separately, each ordered 15,000 pledge cards. In the same territory, the Catholics already have distributed 20,000 pledges.

Kansas City, Mo., became active in the Legion campaign, with exhibitor members of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association expressing the opinion that the crusade is the most serious

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A DRAMA, ludicrous despite its deadly seriousness, currently is being enacted in Hollywood. It is typical of the thousand threads which cross the boulevards of the cinema city.

Some five years ago, Frederick Stephani, a German baron, former revolution-maker and at present a Paramount scenarist, was running guns into Central America and fomenting revolutions for the benefit of American capitalists. He earned the enmity of a mustachioed, dark-browned Nicaraguan general (who now works as a bus boy in a small Hollywood hotel) by supplying guns which ruined the general's chances to become president. Stephani razed the Nicaraguan's favorite town with American dynamite, killed most of his army and forced him to flee the country. The general swore to square accounts some day.

Both drifted to Hollywood, meeting on Hollywood Boulevard the other day for the first time since they exchanged bullets. Stephani said he's willing to forget. The general said he has already forgotten. But somehow they don't seem to believe each other.

Seated in Mr. Roach's office was a well groomed gentleman who reflected the conservative business type. Hal introduced him to Cobb as an experienced bookkeeper looking for a job and the noted humorist lost no time in questioning the hopeful applicant. A deal was struck, Cobb asking his new employee if he needed a few dollars to tide him over until payday. Cobb understood the reason for the hearty laughter which followed when he was told that the bookkeeper was Edward F. Hutton, chairman of the board of the multi-million dollar General Foods Corporation and prominent in the affairs of the Zonite and Chrysler corporations.

Adjiten General of the Army
Washington, D. C.

Dear Agiten General, Sir:

My husband was induced into the surfact 18 months ago and I ain't received no pay since he was gone. Please send my elopement as I have a four months' old baby and he is my only support and I kneed every day to buy food and keep us in clothes. I am a poor woman and all I have is gone. Both sides of my parents are very old and I can expect anything from them. Do I get any more than I am going to get? Please send me a letter and tell me if my husband made application for a wife and child and please send me a wife's form to fill out. I have all ready written to the President and got no answer and if I don't here from you I will write Uncle Sam about you and him.

Yours very truly,

P.S.: I am told that my husband sets in the Y. M. C. A. every night with the piano playing in his uniform.

Alarmist newspapers are trying to worry the nation over the possible effect that some motion pictures may have on President Roosvelt during his stay on the briny deep. Their "scare heads" told how there were included in the motion picture library of 40 pictures being screened on the U. S. S. Houston for Presidential enjoyment, some half dozen productions which were branded by the Catholic Legion of Decency as being either "immoral and indecent" or else "offensive in spots because they are suggestive, vulgar, sophisticated or lacking in decency." One good Democrat commented that the "condemned" films were probably intended for the sailors.

A stranger galloped over the picturesque hills of British Columbia some few months ago to the stout ranch house of Alastir Forbes, wealthy bronzed British rancher of Canada. Introducing himself as "Joseph Lamonte," he told Mr. Forbes he was commissioned by "Mr. Goldwyn of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer" to locate a ranch for purchase—price no object. "Mr. Goldwyn" later materialized on the telephone and lured the rancher from the quiet of his Canadian woods to a noisy Seattle hotel and thence to Portland and Reno. Their discussions about paying Mr. Forbes $100,000 for his property were eventually interspersed with promises of enormous returns to him through "inside" racing tips.

It was the old story. The smooth conspirators took Forbes for $30,000. He complained to the federal government and arrests followed. The story was told this week in federal court in New York.

If Mr. Forbes' knowledge of things cinematic had not been so sadly neglected he would have known that Mr. Goldwyn is not associated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, that he is a United Artists producer, and, even more important, that Mr. Goldwyn would hardly be expected to invite the rigors of the rough outdoors, preferring the softness and luxuriousness of his rich drawing room to the rancher's stock and stable.

One of the colorful incidents in the business life of Joseph Patrick Kennedy, former motion picture general, financier and now at the head of the country's securities exchanges as chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, was an independent venture which was his first move after leaving Harvard. Stalwart red-headed Joe and a friend bought a sight-seeing bus with $600 and for three years Kennedy was a "barker" on the bus on the famous Paul Revere route running from Boston to Lexington. That netted him $5,000, which started him on his career as a capitalist.

Mr. Kennedy averted a serious tieup on battleship construction during World War days when he was director of operations at the Fore River plant of Bethlehem Steel. Destroyers were being built, the time element being most important. The influenza epidemic of 1918 threatened to paralyze the job and Mr. Kennedy installed a system of dormitories for the 50,000 workers to keep them on the grounds away from quarantine.

Many years ago six pals graduated from Harvard. Five of them immediately made good in the literary and dramatic world. The sixth, who had gone in for designing and color, became a window dresser in a Boston department store. His salary was $11 a week.

One day the five friends decided that the sixth was being held back by the lack of experience that he could not afford to get. Accordingly they pooled their resources and sent him to Europe, where he studied drama under Max Reinhardt and perfected a unique plan to apply the psychology of color and sets to the enhancing of dramatic action.

The sixth man is Robert Edmond Jones, of the Radio Studios in Hollywood, a conservative New Englander in his late forties. He is regarded as one of the greatest set designers in the world and a keen psychologist of color and drama.

The United States is one of the few important countries without a national theatre system. Soviet Russia has made the greatest advance, having 26 state theatres of the drama operating at once in Moscow. Seen coming out of the Washington residence of the Soviet Ambassador last week was smiling Eddie Dowling, a close friend of Mr. Roosevelt's. Mr. Dowling is interested in obtaining federal funds with which to develop a national theatre system in the United States. His visit to the Soviet Ambassador was for knowledge. Something is on the fire.

CLUBS ATTACK PRIZES

problem currently confronting theatres. On the other hand, Miss Hazel Myers, board chairman, said that the Kansas censors have been so "efficient" that such a drastic religious campaign does not appear to be necessary. Signing of Legion pledges got underway in the Kansas City diocese following the reading of a pastoral letter from Bishop Thomas Lillis. Thousands of pledges were distributed at church doors.

Kansas City ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church joined the campaign, although a Jewish leader in that city voiced disapproval.

Leavenworth (Kansas) Catholics started a Legion drive.

Candidate Attacks Censors

Speaking at Lima, Ohio, John Elden, seeking the Republican nomination for governor, told the Citizens' Non-Partisan League that the state censors had "pitifully failed to clean up the movies."

At Los Angeles, the California Motion Picture Council of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the Parents and Teachers Association served notice on exhibitors that unless they desist from their efforts to bring children into the theatre by offering special prizes and premiums, legislation would be urged to keep children out of the theatres altogether.

The Milwaukee Holy Name Society started a campaign against unclean films, while local clubwomen charged the city censor board with failure to prevent the showing of unwholesome pictures.

The Ohio Christian Endeavor Union, meeting at New Philadelphia, Ohio, voted support of the Catholics' movement.

New York City—probably the largest Catholic diocese in the country—is about to become actively engaged in the Legion of Decency campaign, according to reports which indicated that Patrick Cardinal Hayes will address a pastoral letter to all parishes before the weekend explaining the motion picture situation and urging the signing of pledges. There are 1,273,000 Catholics in the New York diocese and 1,500 priests.

Inter-faith Organization

An inter-faith organization to further the church movement was formed at a meeting at Holy Cross rectory in New York. Two Catholic, two Protestant and two Jewish clergymen were selected to formulate plans for extending the crusade to the stage, burlesque and literature. Immediately after the meeting, Father Joseph McCaffrey, pastor of Holy Cross, called for a meeting with Hollywood producers, having decided to "go over Will Hays' head because he has shown no desire to cooperate." Father McCaffrey told the press that he believed Mr. Hays "should resign his office."

Additional support for the movement in New York came from Reverend Samuel Henry Prince, of King's University, Halifax, who said the motion picture situation is "an American scandal," and from Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Protestant leader, and Dr. S. Goldstein, of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. Dr. Goldstein said: "As Jews, we are more interested than others in the endeavor to make sure that only wholesome pictures are shown in American theatres, since, as is generally known, so large a part of the persons in the motion picture industry are Jewish."

At Buffalo, the Federation of Bar Associations heard condemnation from speakers. "Evil motion pictures are a crime cause," it was said.

The United Presbyterian Church, in conference at Oxford, Ohio, endorsed the movement and voted approval of the Legion.

Two Theatres Closed

In Providence, at least two theatres were closed because of a boycott.

The Rochester, N. Y., Catholic diocese joined the Legion.

From St. Louis came word that Protestants and Jews had joined 500,000 Catholics in the crusade. Reverend Theodore Graebner, of Concordia (Mo.) Seminary, urged the stationing of a church censor at every Hollywood studio.

Dr. Mark Matthews informed the national conclave of Knights Templar at San Francisco that "moral, intelligent Christians will change the screen if the producers do not."

The Seattle censor board was increased for more diligent investigation of films.

The Catholic diocese of Tucson, Arizona, joined the Legion campaign.

"Unclean" pictures were condemned at Washington, D. C., by the National Education Association of teachers, meeting in annual convention.

Washington Protestants joined the Catholic crusade.

At Wilmington, Del., Reverend Francis Tucker, of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, warned his parishioners that they should refrain from attending theatres "until such time as Hollywood cleans house."

Not Related to Code

The National Recovery Administration at Washington Monday explained in an official statement that the producers' self-imposed censorship, to be inaugurated July 15 by Joseph I. Breen, was in no way related to the industry's NRA code or to the Administration of the code.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, Division Administrator of the NRA in charge of amusement codes, said that newspaper stories appearing in Hollywood over the weekend which implied that Mr. Breen was an NRA "code administrator," and that the NRA was involved in a proposed censorship plan, were "absolutely incorrect."

"Mr. Breen has no connection whatever with the NRA," declared Mr. Rosenblatt. "Any references in this or other dispatches to a 'producers' code' are not to the code of fair competition for the motion picture industry, but are to the production code of ethics formulated by and for members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which has no connection with the NRA."

In any event, and while Mr. Breen is not a code officer, nor a member of the National Recovery Administration, Mr. Rosenblatt evidently forgot to explain that the producers' code of ethics is binding under the film code by the provisions of Part 1, Article VII, which says that the industry shall pledge itself to and shall adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to attain "right moral standards" in production.

Thayer, Cincinnati; Bert Jolley, Indianapolis; Howard Donaldson, Detroit; Charles Wagner, Milwaukee; Harry Schiffrin, Des Moines; Henry Gleis, Omaha; Paul A. La Roche, Kansas City, and Dwight Mills, St. Louis.

Following the Chicago meeting Harry A. Ross, president, and D. A. Ross, vice-president in charge of branch operations, will go to the Coast to arrange for another session at a later date.

Johnson May Drop NRA Executive Job

General Hugh S. Johnson, National Administrator of the National Recovery Act, indicated Tuesday to Universal Service that he had asked President Roosevelt to relieve him as NRA Administrator and to appoint a commission to administer the Recovery Act.

General Johnson said, however, that his proposed departure would not be immediate. The President has not answered his request, he said.

"It may be a month or two before the emergency phase of the NRA is past," the Administrator is quoted as saying, thus allowing its activities to be turned over to a commission.

"If I could avoid being a member of the commission, I should like to do it," he said. "Probably I shall stay until Congress meets in January, although I should like to avoid that."

Kansas City Price Stabilizing Fails

The latest attempt to stabilize price and policy among Kansas City independent suburbans has met with failure, due to refusal of five exhibitors to sign an agreement eliminating 10-cent admissions and restricting duals to once weekly.

Jay Means, Independent Theatre Owners president, heading a committee of independents attempting to put the agreement through, said this week he has "shelved" the plan temporarily.

In the absence of a voluntary agreement, it is felt in the Kansas City territory that the new clearance schedule and contract stipulations for the 1934-35 season will bring about the trade reforms sought.

BRITISH QUOTA ACT REVISION LOOMS AS ACTION ON "QUICKIE" COMPLAINTS

One Suggestion Would Require That Any Hollywood Producer with $5,000,000 Budget Expend $875,000 on British Production

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Semi-official indications came this week from the Board of Trade that exhibitor complaints about "quickies" were being noted. Revision of the Films Act, in the form of a more stringent definition of Quota films, begins to look more and more like an impending event. The "shadows before" are looming heavily over exhibitor meetings. They are probably causing a certain amount of gloom in Wardour Street. It is all to the good if they are; the evil of inferior Quota pictures has its root there and not in the studios.

Ready for Action

It is old news that exhibitors resent the cheap Quota film. The Blackpool conference, which passed a resolution on the point, may have seemed merely to underline a standing grievance. To think so is to misinterpret a situation here which has now definitely changed its character. It is no longer a question of what to do about the quota quickies but how to do it.

At Leeds the other day exhibitors seriously discussed whether it might not be good policy to default on their program quota of British films. Their idea was to go to court and pay any fines imposed, rather than show the inferior films available and incur much bigger cash loss at the box office. Such action is probably unlikely; if in fact it were taken on any scale, there would be a public exposure of the defects of the present Act which would force action by the Government.

Quality Clause Proposed

Suggested revisions of the Act are a "Quality" clause, under which any film made just for footage would be disqualified from registration; a provision that Quota film costs must exceed a certain minimum; and a proposal that film importers should be compelled to allocate to British production a percentage of their total production expenditure corresponding to the prevailing Quota percentage here.

Under this proposal a Hollywood producing concern with a $5,000,000 budget would be compelled to spend $875,000 on British production if it brought all its American films to London. When the quota went to 20 per cent, the obligation would be $1,000,000. Scarcely practical politics, but the suggestion shows how the wind is blowing.

A Board of Trade official has intimated that the situation is being "watched closely." He also hinted that the discovery of an effective test of Quota film quality would probably be followed by official endorsement. This plain warning to importers will be emphasized in the near future by a discussion in the House of Commons, where a number of awkward questions are to be asked. These undoubtedly will further advertise the fact that the spirit of the Films Act is being evaded by many foreign producers. All this publicity helps to create the atmosphere necessary to further legislation.

American executives thus are given yet another warning about their policy of buying British films for quota at the price of $5 a negative foot. The danger sign has been obvious for a long time and now it simply cannot be disregarded. All that the policy of "joking" the Films Act has achieved has been to stimulate an agitation, which probably will succeed, for the renewal of the Act, which expires in 1938, in a more stringent form.

U. S. Policy Called Shortsighted

American policy towards the Quota, with the exception of one or two producers, has been short-sighted from the beginning. It has led to an absurdity. Independently made British films take bigger money at the box-office than any but outstanding imported films, yet American companies here are losing heavily on British films. They could have been so made as to have been a valuable additional source of revenue to them. It looks as if importers will shortly be up against a definite alternative. Either they must make British films for profit or find themselves without the Quota cover necessary for their output.

In British Studios

"Virginia's Husband" goes on the floor at the Walton-on-Thames studio Monday as the next British production for Fox. Maclean Rogers directs, for George Smith, and Enid Stamp-Taylor is featured. Fox also has commissioned Anthony Kimmins to make "Lucky Star" at Sound City. A third Fox production due on the floor, at Ealing studio on July 23, is "The Shakespeare Murders." Albert Parker will direct. Later T. Hayes Hunter will start his Fox contract by directing Ernie Lotinga in a comedy vehicle.

At Lime Grove, for Gaumont-British, Alfred Hitchcock has been shooting gangster scenes for "The Man Who Knew Too Much." Peter Lorre, starred, leaves for his Hollywood engagement immediately on completion. "Evensong," with Evelyn Laye, is ready for cutting. Tom Walls started work on "Save the Queen," a Ben Travers story which he directs as well as playing lead. Yvonne Arnaud is the leading woman.

At Islington (Gainsborough) studio, lighthouse interiors are being completed for "The Phantom Light" with Donald Calthrop and Gordon Harker. Jack Hulbert and Anna Lee have made scenes for "The Camels Are Coming," Tim Whelan directing.

T. Hayes Hunter has started direction at Beaconsfield on "The Green Pack," a British Lion version of the last play written by Edgar Wallace. Locale, London and West Africa. Leslie Hiscott has completed "Gay Love" with Florence Desmond and Sophie Tucker.

At Elstree Frederick Zelnck has begun shooting on "Mr. Cinders" for B. I. P. "Girls Will Be Boys" with Dolly Haas, Marcel Varnel direction, is being completed. Norman Lee is half-way through Leslie Fuller's comedy vehicle, "The Medicine Man." At Welwyn, Walter Summers has started shooting on "What Happened Then" with Richard Bird.

Warner-First National has changed the title of Betty Compton's vehicle from "The Richest Girl in the World" to "Too Many Millions." Harold M. Young directs.

Americans Reported About to Pay for Shortsighted Policy of "Joking" Quota with Inferior Product; Default Proposed

55-Hour Week Suggested

A working week of 55 hours (instead of 60) and 48 for women is suggested by the National Association of Theatrical Employees as amendment to the recent wages and hours recommendations of the Joint Conciliation Board of the trade. 48-hour week is asked by the electrical unions.

The British Board of Film Censors, it is believed, will shortly make a declaration of policy regarding films in which cruelty to animals is indicated. The Board already is demanding cuts in such films, but there is a possibility that it may even ban such films.

A national campaign recently has been conducted, by societies having animal welfare as their object, and direct approaches have been made to local authorities to have "cruel" films barred from exhibition.

British producers won't suffer; their record in this particular is cleaner than that of any other country.

Warner Studio Enlarged

Warner Bros.-First National Pictures Ltd. has drafted a scheme of ambitious extension at the Teddington studio, which it recently purchased outright. New mills, scene docks, projection, cutting and dubbing rooms, wardrobe, theatres, offices and restaurant are planned for immediate erection.

Later, Warner will add another production stage.

NRA COMMENDS INDUSTRY FOR HARMONIZING UNION RELATIONS

General Johnson's Office Says There Has Not Been One Instance of Failure to Arbitrate Differences in Exhibition

The National Recovery Administration credits the motion picture industry with having effected a complete harmonizing of industrial relations under the labor provisions of the code between some 14,000 theatres and at least 50,000 theatre employees.

The motion picture code is the only NRA document in which every employer and every union organization of workers in an industry are committed to arbitrate before resorting to lockouts or to strikes, and, as a result, code labor differences between exhibitors and their employees, usually involving wage or hour disputes, have been peacefully adjusted in 20 large cities where the differences threatened serious results.

General Hugh Johnson's NRA headquarters at Washington claims that since the motion picture codes became effective on December 7th, 1933, there has not been a single failure to arbitrate successfully worker-employer differences in exhibition. In most of the arbitration settlements increased wages or increased employment resulted.

Arbitration of exhibitor labor disputes with workers has been effected in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, Centralia, Ill.; Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Mason City, Ia.; Houston, San Antonio and Tyler, Tex. In Pittsburgh alone labor unions filed complaints with the NRA against 78 theatres charging that wages being paid were below the code's scale. The workers received a ten per cent increase, which was said to be typical.

Other complaints were adjusted in Boston and Brockton, Mass., St. Louis and elsewhere.

Although the number of disputes between exhibitors and unions were proportionately fewer under the code than in other codified industries—and this because ironclad contracts between the unions and theatres have for years provided high wage scales and low working schedules—nevertheless the percentage of complaints filed against theatres by unions for alleged violation of code labor provisions has been high. Fifty per cent of all of the questions sent by readers to MOTION PICTURE HERALD's "Code Question Box" department pertain to problems affecting theatre labor under the code.

Meanwhile, the NRA was preparing to launch a study of wage scales and hours for projectionists, especially in the East.

Young Carolinians Protest Theatre Making Them "Adults"

Emil Bernstecker, manager of the Carolina theatre, Greensboro, N. C., recently received a delegation of about 100 boys and girls who protested this business of being aged at the box office.

It seemed the theatre management had done a sleight-of-hand manipulation which had made synthetic adults of the approximately 2,000 13-to-15-year-olds in the city. Formerly, all up to 15 had been admitted as children for 10 cents, but under the new arrangement the age limit for children was moved back to 13. It was suspected that the box office had something to do with it, so Billy Stern, young-man-about-town, circulated a petition and got signatures of 300 contemporaries who protested being made "adults" three years before they expected.

The delegation got together, met at the theatre and demanded of Mr. Bernstecker, "How come?" Mr. Bernstecker started explaining deeply into the economics of theatre operation, but made little impression. Meanwhile Billy Stern was doing a little lobbying. He was passing out chewing gum to his fellow-protesters and it was good politics.

The group kept asking questions, Mr. Bernstecker kept answering and delving deeper into theatre economics, and Billy kept on passing out gum to keep up his delegates' spirits. Finally, when both sides had about run out of questions and answers, the delegates put out the main question, "Well, are you going to let us in for a dime?"

"No, I can't let you in for a dime," Mr. Bernstecker replied.

"I still don't think the show is worth a quarter," a prominent delegate remarked, and the meeting adjourned.

Columbia Rebuilds Hollywood Studios

A building program designed to bring the present studio facilities in the front line with the world's most modern studios has been started by Columbia Pictures Corporation in Hollywood.

Virtual rebuilding of the company's Hollywood plant on earthquake-proof lines is involved and it is this phase of the reconstruction that has been underway for several weeks.

With one small unit completed and in use—a two-story writers' building within the patio of the administration building—Columbia's program continues with work already started on the second unit, a building designed to accommodate the electrical, special effects, inserts and trailer departments.

The third unit will constitute a seven-story building which will house the casting, production and art departments; the research library, still-photo, wardrobe, make-up and property departments of the Columbia organization.

An eleven-story administration tower makes up the fourth unit of the project, with a three-story office building and two new double stages, all on the Gower Street property included in the present studio limits.

In addition, a two-story addition to the film laboratory is being rushed to completion. This will house a complete negative developing and drying plant, adding 50 per cent to the film developing capacity.

National Labor Board Issues Ruling in Consolidated Case

The National Labor Board rendered a decision last week in the case of Consolidated Film Industries, New York, in which it ruled that the company shall establish a preferential reinstatement list for striking employees and that both the company and the employees shall submit to the industrial arbitrator all differences found impossible of agreement.

A strike in the company's Fort Lee, N. J., plant recently involved 46 employees, and resulted from the company's rejection of the employees' demand for either an increase in wages or arbitration of matters in dispute.

SHORT FAILS TO WIN TEACHERS TO COUNCIL

Little Attention Paid Motion Pictures at NEA Convention Except as to Classroom and General Clean Film Pledge

The enlistment drive of Dr. William Harrison Short in behalf of his Motion Picture Research Council, addressed at the school teachers of the nation through the convention of the National Education Association, evaporated without results in sultry Washington last week.

Meanwhile it transpired that endeavors to interest Dr. Alanson Bigelow Houghton, former ambassador to the Court of St. James', in succession to the prickly crown of the presidency of the Research Council, had also failed.

Wondering Who'll Be Next

This week Dr. Short and his cabinet spent mostly in New York wondering who might next be cast in the role so recently abandoned by Mrs. August Belmont, who went a-summering up in Maine and resigned the presidency just as the Motion Picture Research Council's publicity went into the deep eclipse shadows cast by the rise of the Legion of Decency. It was the hope of the cabinet of the council strategists that they might be able to announce the casting of a new president with effulgent name by Monday next.

Meanwhile the Research Council's current publicity problems are tied up with the concurrent problem of new financing and a program for the future.

Little Attention Paid Films

Except from the standpoint of the classroom and a pledge of support to other organizations engaged in the clean films movement, little or no attention was paid to motion pictures by the Education Association at the convention. The only important motion picture feature was an address on moral standards by Robert P. Wray, of Pennsylvania State College, Mr. Wray declaring that while girls are more aggressive in lovemaking on the motion picture screen than in real life, the morals of the pictures are about equal to reality in respect to kissing and considerably above average in respect to democracy and parents' treatment of children.

A lengthy address before the teacher delegates by Dr. Charters, of Ohio State University, who had presided over Research Council pre-convention sessions, failed to arouse much enthusiasm among the teachers.

Teachers "Condemn" Block Booking

Anxious to get away from Washington's record-breaking sizzling temperatures, the convention finally adopted a resolution condemning "without reservations" block booking, although it appeared doubtful if any of the educators had any clear conception of just what was meant by the trade term.

The resolution first found that motion pictures are one of the most important means of education and then pledged the Education Association's support to other organizations "demanding a high type of motion picture for the boys and girls of America." The resolution further recorded the educators' sympathy with the movement to bring about reform in the industry and encourage clean pictures. Block booking was blamed for the "unsavory character of contemporary moving picture programs."

Meanwhile in New York the Motion Picture Research Council postponed indefinitely the election of a president to succeed Mrs. Belmont.

Czechoslovakia Removes Quota

by JOACHIM K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

American companies are expected to return to Czechoslovakia after a two-year absence as a result of the removal of the 20,000-crown import license and quota restrictions.

The 20,000-crown tax—about $600—was levied against every American importation and the quota law required that one in every seven pictures distributed by American companies should be of Czechoslovakian origin. The law was passed after considerable agitation by local producers.

During the two-year absence of American distributors, agitation for loosening the restrictions has been growing among exhibitors who found their revenue reduced.

Kansas Exhibitors Will Discuss Policies at Meet

The Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association will seek action against guarantee and percentage demands of distributors when it meets in convention in Kansas City, July 17, at the Muehlbach Hotel, at the call of A. F. Baker, president. The board of directors has already gone on record against existing percentages, and plans a complete review of the situation.

Other topics to be discussed include competitive policies, admissions, double bills, price reducing practices and film rentals. Code operations will also be scrutinized. A campaign to oppose adverse legislation, which appears in the offing in the form of a sales tax, will be organized as well. Officers for the coming year will be elected. Mr. Baker has declared he is not a candidate.

Ike Katz President of Southern Exhibitors

Ike Katz of Montgomery, Ala., has been named president of the newly-formed Georgia-Tennessee-Florida-Alabama Theatre Association.

Other officers are: W. L. Coart, Atlanta, treasurer; A. J. Benedict, Atlanta, secretary; Mrs. C. B. Ellis, Atlanta, Sam Borinsky of Chattanooga and H. H. Waters of Birmingham, state vice-presidents.

Three Trustees Made Permanent

The three trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount Publix Corporation—Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson—on Tuesday were named, under the new federal bankruptcy laws, as permanent trustees of the company by Judge Alfred C. Coxe in U. S. district court, New York.

Mr. Richardson had indicated some weeks ago that were he continued in the post the pressure of his own business affairs would require that he resign. At the opening of the Tuesday session, however, Arthur A. Ballantine, of the law firm of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, said Mr. Richardson was willing to serve.

The three have been temporary trustees since the recent application of Paramount for permission to reorganize under the new bankruptcy laws. Their continuance in office is regarded as hastening the company's reorganization. All developments under former bankruptcy statutes had been held in abeyance pending appointment of permanent trustees.

Foremost among deals thus held up has been reorganization of the Saenger theatres, scheduled for court approval several weeks ago. Another delay has been occasioned in Detroit. George W. Trendle's offer for a permanent operating agreement, submitted some time ago, presumably will be among the first considerations of the trustees.

Other matters still unsettled include claims contested by Paramount trustees, in this group being one of $229,842 of the Indemnity Insurance Co.; $58,749 of the Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles, and the First National Bank of Boston for $225,000. All the claims had been postponed until after July 10.

FRENCH QUESTION U. S. PROTESTS ON NEW QUOTA AND TAX DECREE

Point Out That 24 More Dubbings Are Permitted and Expected; Three-Months Embargo Was Not Invoked; Product Plentiful

By PIERRE AUTRÉ
Paris Correspondent

Cinema circles of France are surprised by the vehement attacks made by the American producers against the new French quota decree. By the French the decree is considered as almost a victory for American and other foreign companies.

The Parisian office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America termed the decree "the worst blow ever delivered against the American industry."

Americans Conferring

Will American motion pictures be seen at all in France six months from now? That is the question which representatives of American companies ostensibly are studying, with conferences as to whether to stay in business, says a Parisian American newspaper.

But here is why the French themselves are surprised at the Americans' vigorous complaints. It is pointed out:

In 1933 only 70 dubbings were allowed for each six months. This number is now increased to 94.

A three-months embargo on all foreign pictures was expected, also a tax of 100 francs a meter on negative. There is no embargo on foreign pictures and the import taxes on negative are only 6 francs a meter.

Import taxes on foreign printed negatives are doubled. For an 8 reel negative importers will have to pay 15,000 francs instead of 7,500. This increase, however, will concern only dubbed pictures, because for the original versions positive prints are imported, the French say.

The average cost of a dubbed version is about $10,000, so that the importers will have to pay 10 per cent of the dubbing cost as taxes instead of 5 per cent.

Dubbing Cost Up 4.76 Per Cent

With the new taxes a dubbing will cost $11,000 instead of $10,500, which means really an increase of 4.76 per cent on the cost of dubbing. That is all the real effect of this new tax.

It is true that the fact that the decree is limited to six months is a real problem for foreign firms which do not know what will happen after December 31. But it was the only way for the Government to act.

It is entirely false that cinemas may lack pictures. Most of the cinemas have booked their programs in advance for at least six and eight months. All these pictures are now ready to be released.

A total of 73 dubbed pictures, among them 49 American, were released during the first six months of 1934, while in the first half of 1933 there were 48 released, among them 27 American, which means an increase of nearly 50 per cent. Ninety dubbed pictures are allowed for the second six months of 1934 so that there will be at least 163 dubbed foreign pictures for the year 1934. To these figures must be added a minimum of 100 French pictures and 25 French versions made in foreign countries, especially in Germany, making a total of nearly 300 pictures for 1934, and it is certain that this number will be exceeded because the figures for the first six months of 1934 concern only released pictures, and many of the new pictures—dubbed or native ones—have already passed censorship but will not be shown before next October.

Moreover, it is not true that it is necessary to take five months to dub a picture. Six weeks is a maximum.

$1,800,000 To Dub 180 Films

Foreign firms for dubbing 180 pictures a year spend about $10,000 a picture, or $1,800,000 for 180. French companies, to produce 100 pictures in a year spend about $66,666 a picture, or $6,666,666 for 100 pictures.

Of the $1,800,000 spent yearly for dubbing foreign pictures, most is to pay the American or German negative and positive film for prints, to pay the foreign recording apparatus and royalties, to pay foreign technicians who work in the special dubbing studios. Not more than 20 or 25 per cent of this money goes to French artists and French writers.

So when foreign firms spend $1,800,000 for dubbings in France, not more than $45,000 stays in France for French people.

A "bad" French picture on the Champs Elysées in Paris is often a very good one in Marseilles. It is certain that, except in the 30 Paris cinemas where patrons will accept foreign talkers, there are very few houses which can show them in the Provinces.

The foregoing is the opinion expressed in French circles. Nobody thinks that American firms intend really to close their offices here. American firms will use all possible ways to obtain a free market without taxation and that is their privilege. But French producers want to fight for their business and that is also their right.

Raymond Lussiez, president of the French Syndicate of Theatre Directors, is on the side of the American firms in this fight.

France Bans Imports Of Raw Film from U. S.

France this week imposed a temporary but absolute ban on all importation of American raw sensitized film, according to cable dispatches.

The embargo was said to be designed to force American companies to manufacture in France all film for sale in that country, instead of having it imported.

Harry Arthur To Take Over St. Louis Houses

Harry C. Arthur will personally supervise operation of the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres in St. Louis when Fanchon & Marco takes over the houses, following approval of the sale to the bondholders' committee. Dissolution of the receivership is expected this week, when acquisition becomes effective.

The Ambassador and St. Louis will show F. & M. stage shows with pictures and the Fox and Missouri will be put on a single feature policy. Double bills will be continued at the Grand Central. It is planned to increase prices if other owners cooperate.

DARROW COUNSEL FOR INDEPENDENTS IS SEEN

Lowell Mason Says So but Veteran Lawyer Denies It; ITOA Loses Round in Court Fight Against Film Code

Declaring that it "had substantially completed the work for which it was established" in March, President Roosevelt on June 30 ordered immediate dissolution of the Clarence Darrow National Recovery Review Board. Overlooked, however, in the rush incident to the President's departure from Washington for Hawaii, it was explained that the order was not made public by the White House until July 5, and the three surviving members of the board—W. W. Neal of North Carolina, Samuel P. Henry of Philadelphia and Fred P. Mann of North Dakota,—were without knowledge of their impeding discharge when they announced July 1 that they would recess for 10 days to give the President an opportunity to decide whether he wished them to continue with the investigation of more than 100 codes against which complaints had ben filed.

Jobs Seen for Darrow and Mason

The net result of four months' work by the board appears to have been three reports with recommendations, including one for dismissal of Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, which have not been followed, and jobs for Chairman Darrow and his former assistant Lowell Mason, who served as chief counsel to the board, as counsel for the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of New York and other groups dissatisfied with the motion picture code.

The ITOA was preparing to launch "the fight of its life" against the code, Mr. Rosenblatt and the "Big Eight." Already the organization, according to its attorney, Milton Weisman, has spent upwards of $15,000 in its battle against what it alleges are the unfair provisions of the code, and the "fight is only just beginning."

At an ITOA luncheon last week it was stated definitely that Mr. Darrow had consented to lend the exhibitors the benefit of his legal advice and that he personally would conduct the proceedings.

A few hours after the luncheon, however. Mr. Darrow, who had not been present, denied that he would act on behalf of the exhibitors.

"The independent exhibitors have, and will continue to have, my moral support in their fight against the motion picture code," the veteran lawyer said. "Anything I can do to help them as a friendly advisor I will do gladly, but I have given up the practice of law and I will not take any active or official part in their opposition to the code."

Mr. Mason had told the exhibitors that Mr. Darrow had consented to act as their mentor, without remuneration.

ITOA Motion Denied

The ITOA's motion to remand its action against the Code Authority back to New York state supreme court was denied last week in New York by Federal Judge Goddard. In the event ITOA now does not proceed to argue its original motion for an injunction to restrain the Code Authority from refusing to permit non-assentors to the code to file complaints with code boards, the Authority may move within 30 days to have the case withdrawn for failure to state a cause of action. Judge Goddard Tuesday reserved decision on the ITOA request for a temporary injunction.

This week ITOA was to file two other suits against the Code Authority, one seeking to restrain operation of the code on the grounds of fraud and coercion preliminary to revision of the document and the other asking the removal of Mr. Rosenblatt as division administrator, for alleged bias. Both actions were to be filed in U. S. district court, New York.

In Washington, General Hugh S. Johnson approved an application of the Code Authority for permission, from time to time, to incur expenses not to exceed $5,000, "to cover the cost of engaging counsel to defend litigation against members of local clearance and zoning boards, local grievance boards and the Code Authority, and executive secretary." The appropriation is not to be in addition to the original budget.

The Administration also announced officially the reopening of the code for assents until August 15. Twenty-one Cleveland independent theatres immediately filed application for assent.

Salary Report Near

The long-awaited salary report—said to be a 50-page document—is to be submitted to General Johnson this week by Mr. Rosenblatt, and general conclusions will be made public as soon as the report can be run through the Government Printing Office, possibly early next week.

No public hearings on code amendments are contemplated, Mr. Rosenblatt said, in commenting upon reports that a hearing had been tentatively set for the latter part of July. It was explained by the Division Administrator that "while some recommendations for amendment are pending, they are purely pro forma, relating to budgetary matters, and will not require public discussion."

Tardiness of local code boards in getting through new clearance and zoning schedules this week was reported holding up deals.

The Chicago zoning system was scheduled for a hearing this Thursday following complaints against the present setup launched by Balaban & Katz.

A flood of complaints, charging that the new clearance and zoning schedules being set up by the Cleveland clearance board are opposed to the schedules arrived at as a result of the settlement of a law suit brought against first runs in the Ohio city two years ago, is being forwarded to the Code Authority in appeals.

Kansas City likewise was protesting the provisions of the new clearance schedule that subsequents must maintain a fixed price or be set back five cents in the price scale, and independents have drafted an appeal.

Milwaukee County's proposed clearance and zoning schedule was in the pruning process with another meeting of the local board scheduled for early this week.

Goldman Forms New Pennsylvania Circuit

Formal announcement of William S. Goldman Theatres, Inc., a new independent circuit, to operate in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland, was made Wednesday by William Goldman, former Stanley-Warner executive, in Philadelphia.

The new circuit may start operations with approximately 25 houses. Mr. Goldman is touring the territory to line up situations, which will include theatres already established, and building locations.

"THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY"

Hollywood REPORTER

"OLD-FASHIONED WAY" . . . A RIOT; Fields-Morrison Steal The Picture

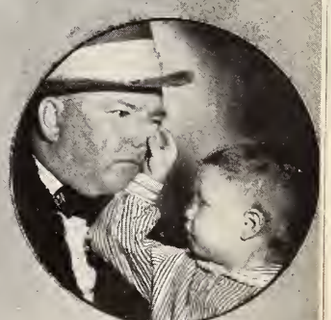
(Paramount)

Not only is this picture to be rated as a W. C. Fields laugh special, but it introduces a brand new screen personality in the form and voice of Joe Morrison, who will give the fans something to look forward to in a big way. Get behind this one with everything you've got, because it's entertainment from start to finish and there are laughs in it for every member of the family.

Come to think of it, there is no story—just names and a situation that serve as an excuse for having W. C. Fields amuse you for seven reels, and the less excuse there is for him, the funnier he is. As the Great McGonigle, Fields is quite priceless, and is given an opportunity to go through his old juggling act, just as good as new. The really great thing that the picture accomplishes is to bring Joe Morrison to the screen. This will prove to be a boon to Paramount, the exhibitor and the public. Morrison is the lad who started the vogue for the "Last Round-Up," but all is forgiven with his performance here. His voice registers beautifully and stops the show. Besides which, his personality is grand and he photographs like a million dollars. He should be a big help to his company in the future.



According to the list of credits, "Cleopatra Pepperday" is played by Jan Duggan. We hope the name is correct, because we want to give credit to the right person for a particularly funny sequence, the rendition of that old ditty, "Gather Sea-shells." Baby LeRoy is a riot for a few short moments—just enough to make you want more. Tammany Young gives a stand-out performance as McGonigle's amaneunsis. In fact, the entire cast, large as it is, deserve individual acknowledgment for their good work.

William Beaudine must have had a time for himself directing this, because his own good humor is reflected in the way the gags go over. There is one in which the laughs are sustained for a full ten minutes. Weston and Cunningham have devised the situations and they are plenty amusing. Gordon and Revel have given out with another hit song, "Rolling in Love," and a "Mother" song that will undoubtedly be taken "serious" because it turns out to be so good. The Reynolds' photography is right up to par every moment.

Nell Gwyn

(British and Dominion-United Artists)

Drama

With the lightsome touch of a merry Englishman in a good humor telling a summer's tale of so long ago that poignancy is gone and naught but the entertainment remains, Mr. Herbert Wilcox has brought to America a new version of that earthy jewel of British history, Mistress Nell Gwyn—that "sweet Nell of old Drury," one-time orange girl and latterly the favorite of King Charles II.

It appears, as you will remember, that King Charles had at least two well established and recognized mistresses and that Nell, broadcasting her wiles from the stage, drew the attentions of His Royal Highness against the somewhat obviously bitter opposition of the Duchess of Portsmouth, who was the while not only the king's playmate but also an agent of France. Of this and its not too tightly knit complications Mr. Wilcox has fashioned his screen tale.

The producer appears to have had America and the Hollywood spice-it-up pattern very much on his mind through the sequences of "Nell Gwyn," and between this week's New York preview and the August release by United Artists it may be fancied that there will be applied here and there some slight retouching more closely to attune some portions of he dialogue to the production mood of the current period and its problems.

The story of course comes mostly out of that treasure document, the diary of Samuel Pepys, who is given a part in the screen drama—and, if we may say so, far less of a part than any Pepys enthusiast would desire. Audiences, however, may most reasonably be expected to greet with interest Anna Neagle's interpretation of Mistress Nell Gwyn, and more than likely to anticipate with interest her further appearances on the American screen. Miss Neagle has that something, and not too subtly evidenced, which in the opinion of many professional previewers makes for box office stardom of a competent order.

A special interest attaches to the interpretation of the role of Charles II by Sir Cedric Hardwicke, eminent on the British stage. Sir Cedric is exceedingly kingly in the role, the role of a naughty king, but so much more king than playboy monarch. Sir Cedric's Charles II performed most capably in bed, even to the death bed, but in both with dignity. One may wonder, in passing, if it was Mr. Wilcox, with that glint of Irish humor that lurks behind innocent blue eyes, or just historic authenticity which brought the king to his death on a bed carved with "Honi soit qui mal y pense"?

Stamboul Quest

(MGM)

Drama

While there is nothing new or novel about the woman World War spy entertainment idea, the manner in which "Stamboul Quest" tells its story is so fresh and interesting that to consider it as merely another woman spy yarn would be a serious error.

While it is a wartime story—the time being 1915, the locales Berlin and Stamboul (Constantinople)—war is merely a symbolic background. There are no battle scenes, no roaring guns or trench slaughter horror. Actually the story is the human drama of a woman spy, her danger, despair and fear when love conflicted with duty. As such it has plenty of the appeal that creates and holds both male and feminine interest. Additionally the basic premise has been given effective contrast. There's a lot of comedy in dialogue and action. Sometimes it is of the hokum variety. The melodrama is tense and gripping. The manner in which suspense is continually used to hold attention and conceal the climax gives the picture its great difference-making punch. As natural in this type of picture, there is a sex suggestion but it has been handled in an intelligent manner.

By use of prelude and epilogue, the story is told in semi-retrospect. Annemarie is an ace German spy who believes she is doing her duty as much as the men in the trenches. Early in the picture, the different entertainment premise is established. She reports to Von Strum that Mata Hari is mixing romance with duty. He permits Mata's identity to become known to the French. Everybody knows the result. As exotic Annemarie treads a similar pathway, many interesting and amusing things occur to make her career just as dangerous as but vividly different from that of the famous Mata Hari.

Burlesque comedy and spy-trapping thrill introduce Beall, an American, and romance as he falls head over heels in love with Annemarie. Despite a lot of kissing and "I love you's" in their evening rendezvous, the Mata Hari allusion takes on added significance. Von Strum, suspicious of Ali Bey, Turkish commander in Stamboul, orders Marie there to find out. She thinks she has given Beall the slip, but has not counted on American resourcefulness and perseverance, and he's on the Stamboul-bound train. There Annemarie sets out to get the goods on Ali, and naturally has to deceive Beall a bit. He thinks she's just doing a little cheating with Ali. To preserve her dangerous love, the girl has to reveal who and what she is. Immediately Beall wants to get her out of this terrible danger.

But the menace of Mata Hari's fate looms in Annemarie's mind. She knows all about this Prussian ruthlessness. As Von Strum, tipped off by Karl, arrives on the spot, Annemarie tells him that Beall is also a spy and has him thrown into jail. However, she arranges that a Frenchman will be shot that night instead of Beall. Then Ali falls for the lure of Annemarie's promise of gold, a date when the war is over, and reveals that he's in league with the British. He thinks that he has had revenge on his betrayer in letting Beall be shot, but he forgets that the Turkish and German general staffs worked pretty much hand in hand. Then the epilogue picks up the prologue. The war is over. Beall comes to the convent that has sheltered the nerve-shattered Annemarie and of course it's to be love and happiness in America.

Ingenious showmen will find many commercially exploitable angles in this picture. The growing popularity of Miss Loy is definite box office value. George Brent is surprising in a comedy character. C. Henry Gordon is effective as the heavy menace. There is an intriguing and mystery-hinting sound to the title. It suggests the brand of applicable showmanship. Make it a point to arouse the interest of women in the picture by playing up the thrill and lure of dangerous romance.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Scarlet Letter

(Majestic - Larry Darmour)

Drama

Produced in an atmosphere that faithfully reflects the tone of Nathaniel Hawthorne's story of early New England and Puritanic customs, lives, religions, morals and laws, this picture has showmanship values for intelligent handling.

It is both a periodic historical picture, an occasion that is the basis of many extant blue laws, but it is also a gripping character portrayal of a woman who loved, sinned and suffered. Yet it is not grim or depressing. Because of the manner in which modern comedy technique has been applied there is a continual contrasting lightness, which in burlesquing some of the manners and customs gives the show a peculiar interest-holding quality.

The picture is well acted. This fact should have more than ordinary consideration in publicizing the show, inasmuch as the people and conditions with which it deals are of 300 years ago. It is of that era when the torture of public shame, the pillory and ducking stool was the method of making the populace respect the edicts of the elders. As it unfolds, the clock is simply turned back three centuries.

Hawthorne's story is generally well known. Hester Prynne, young wife of old and fanatically righteous Roger Chillingworth, is left alone. Lonely, she finds comfort in the words of the minister Dimmesdale. Their friendship becomes intimate and she bears a child. Unwilling to condemn the child's father, knowing that to accuse the supposedly holy man would be fatal, and still because she loves him, she suffers all the diabolic Puritanic tortures and is compelled to wear a scarlet "A" on her bosom, the symbol of an adultress. With meekness and humility, and being of great service to the community, she endures her shame for years. Eventually Chillingworth returns. Inspired both by a desire for revenge as well as love for the girl and her child, he investigates every possibility as to who is responsible for his wife's ignominy. Finally, he is convinced that the minister is guilty and by mental suggestion and

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Old Fashioned Way"

(Paramount)

HOLLYWOOD, June 29.—Hilarious comedy throughout. It never let the preview audience fully recover from the first laugh explosion until the fadeout. Shades of Sennett and Christie slapstick, with W. C. Fields' label predominating.

Fields characterizes the great McGonigle, head of a band of traveling troupers who collect offerings of over-ripe fruit and leave behind a string of unpaid bills. Fields' daughter, Judith Allen, and Joe Morrison, wealthy college youth with histrionic hopes, both are in the show and romantically inclined.

Morrison's father tries to break up the romance and send him back to college. Fields has his hands full keeping the sheriff away from the door, but by playing ball with the wealthiest old gal in town who wishes to become an actress and is engaged to the sheriff, Fields browbeats the sheriff into letting the show go on.

Riotous fun occurs at the dinner table when Baby LeRoy dips Fields' gold watch in molasses and plasters him with whipped cream.

Morrison brought spontaneous applause for a vocal number with a voice and presence something to rave over. Jane Duggan is outstanding as the rich widow.

William Beaudine's direction is smooth and vigorous. Gordon's and Revel's music is tuneful and catchy. The cast is excellent. Customers should like this one plenty. Running time, 72 minutes.

open accusation drives the distraught divine to public confession and self-effacement. Then old Boston remembers the good that is the girl's, all the sacrifice, service and fortitude that was hers, and receives her again with honor.

It is suggested that a little study of early New England history be indulged in, as an aid in publicizing and exploiting this picture. It certainly is a showman's show, in which the material in the story justifies special contact with historical societies, libraries, museums, and so on, in bringing to the attention of present day audiences the conditions under which its characters had to live. Intelligent support should seek to remove any impression that "The Scarlet Letter" is a drab costumed tragic drama.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Ladies Should Listen

(Paramount)

Comedy

Lively, fast moving farce comedy, with a title of more than ordinary commercial exploitation value, this picture is both smart and gay enough to be worthy of any exhibitor's attention. For quick understanding, it's a series of situations, intimate without being unduly risque; vivid enough to stimulate the imagination but clever and clean enough to keep it on the right side of the line. It moves speedily. Dialogue is brisk and there is plenty of rapid-fire action.

Modernly timed, located in Paris, the yarn presents deLussac as a South American nitrate concession option peddler, who, through no fault of his own, suddenly has three women and a pair of male menaces on his neck. Primpish Susie, an exotic old maid, throws herself at him. DeLussac is her ideal of a regular lover. Her antics first result in bringing telephone operator Anna into the show, as a self-constituted protector of deLussac, and later arouse complications between Julian and her enduring fiance, Paul. Bedazzled by all the attention, but not entirely adverse to accepting it, Julian's life becomes more hectic as vampish Marguerite makes her appearance. His apartment is the rendezvous for all three; Susie and Marguerite arduously affectionate and Anna striving her utmost to keep Julian unscathed. In the climax, it's revealed that Marguerite and the villainous Ramon are just a pair of wouldbe blackmailers, interested solely in the nitrate potentialities; that Paul is never going to let Susie get away from him, and that in Anna, Julian has an efficient protector.

There are quite a few easily adaptable exploitation ideas in this picture. One is a thunder-making machine which Grant uses to frighten his fair visitors into his arms. It's good for an outside lobby stunt, running ad lines over a loudspeaker system. The title is unique for both a teaser and telephone campaign. More than the ordinary amount of attention should be paid to the cast. Horton and Nydia Westman are established comedy characters. Cary Grant, however, aided by Miss Drake's straight work, keeps a step or two ahead of them. Worthy of note in the cast is the name of Charles Ray. His appearance brought forth applause from the preview audience.

Play it up as a giddy farce, with a real appeal for both men and women adults; get some of the picture's lively color and thrill in the advance notices.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Hell Cat

(Columbia)

Drama

With a touch of melodrama and sufficient action to keep things moving at a lively pace throughout, this film has the entertainment ingredients for run-of-the-mill audiences. Comedy and romance blend in a yarn of the boastful and energetic newspaper star reporter, who arouses the ire of a spoiled young girl of wealth, and is the object of her lively efforts to get even for supposed impertinence.

The title has an intriguing ring; the individual exhibitor will be best able to judge whether the actual wording of it should be emphasized in his community. The two leaders are Robert Armstrong and Ann Sothern. Miss Sothern (Harriet Lake of the stage and first seen on the screen in "Let's Fall in Love") is reasonably effective in her role of the spoiled young woman of wealth, and can stand the exhibitor buildup for future appearances. Benny Baker supplies the comedy for the most part, and several other familiar names are among the support.

The selling should be built about the story and its complications with the idea that the smart lad, who thought he knew all there was to know about women, actually falls for the girl he detested, as she, in disguise, plays him for a fool, offers some opportunity for copy lines which may be made amusingly attractive.

Armstrong, star reporter, is working on a major exposé of a gambling racket when he is assigned to cover the latest flareup of Miss Sothern, daughter of wealth, who seems to have little to do but annoy people and attract unfavorable newspaper publicity. When Armstrong and Baker, his photographer, go to Miss Sothern's house to interview her, she kicks the camera and slaps Armstrong. He administers a good shaking, and prints the picture of the girl kicking the camera. She vows vengeance when she is made the laughing stock of her fast country club set.

Disguising herself with a blonde wig and a deep southern accent, she enlists the aid of Minna Gombell, who dislikes Armstrong's egotistical manner, and obtains a job on the newspaper, where she sets her plans to take full revenge for the insult and the shaking. Armstrong, not recognizing his recent antagonist, finds himself falling in love with the blonde girl from the south, posing as Miss Gombell's cousin. Twice Miss Sothern frames with her wealthy friends a party at which Armstrong is to be made ridiculous, but twice assignments make him call off the appointment. He is held up by the strong-arm representatives of the head of the gambling syndicate, but manages to get in the clear. On the last of a series of raids, on a gambling ship, which is to clinch his story and the exposé of the ring, Armstrong takes Miss Sothern along at her urgent request. At the docks, she sees her own large yacht, and boarding it, conspires with captain and crew to ridicule Armstrong. She calls for help, he races to her assistance and is led a merry chase about the ship. Miss Sothern at last changes her clothes, presents herself to him in her real identity, but fails to enjoy the laugh as the crew sweep down on both of them, the ship under the crooked captain carrying a cargo of smuggled Chinese. The two are rescued and the romance is completed.

An adult attraction, it is best played midweek.—AARONSON, New York.

Jane Eyre

(Monogram-Verschleiser)

Dramatic Romance

Serious and realistic dramatic romance is the keynote of this picture. No attempt has been made to modernize the generations-old Charlotte Brontë novel. In character, action, dialogue and moral, the spirit of the people dealt with, as well as the times in which they lived, have been accurately preserved. From the beginning a sincere attempt has been made, through the character of Jane Eyre, to play upon the finer emotions and stimulate sympathetic reactions. While story atmosphere and motivation are entirely dissimilar, the basic entertainment quality parallels that of "Little Women."

It is a story of a woman. It traces her life from early childhood to maturity. While many of the gayer, happier incidents are depicted, the general tendency is to accentuate her life's bitterness, disappointments, tragedies and final triumph. As such, it is the type of entertainment ordinarily strongly attractive to women, and, under proper presentation, a feature worthy of support of men. Always it is of the standard coming within the requirements of those demanding homier, less sophisticated screen offerings.

The locale is rural England, the time about midway in the past century. First little Jane is an unwanted, cruelly treated stepchild. Then, for several years she is in an orphan asylum as an iron disciplined inmate and later a teacher. Despite the spirit-chilling environment, she seeks to train her charges by love and kindness and when she defends her right to do so is discharged.

As governess in the manor of Charles Rochester, she knows her first real happiness in the kindness of her employer, that of her associates and the appreciation of Bertha. Romance arising between her and Rochester, actually menaced by Blanche Ingram and weirdly by something she does not know or understand, she is about to be married to him when she learns that his insane wife is alive. She flees the house. At the same time, annulment of the marriage is delivered and Rochester goes in search of her. Fire breaks out. In attempting in vain to save his now ex-wife from burning to death, Rochester is seriously burned and blinded. Later, Jane, working in a mission, plans to go to India to forget her disappointment. Learning of Rochester's fate, she returns to him, to marry and care for him for life.

In cast, story and production value, this picture is quality entertainment. It requires an unusual quality of showmanship. There is little on which to base ordinary topical exploitation. It's the kind of attraction that probably best will be sold by unusual, thoughtful, sincere, printed advertising. An idea for such a method may be gleaned by a re-reading of the advertisement written by Stanley Chambers, re-

"THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY"

VARIETY

Old-Fashioned Way

William LeBaron production for Paramount release. Directed by William Beaudine. Screen play by Garnett Weston and Jack Cunningham, from a story by Charles Bogle. Music by Harry Revel. Lyrics by Mack Gordon. Photographed by Benjamin Reynolds. Cast: W. C. Fields, Joe Morrison, Judith Allen, Jan Duggan, Nora Cecil, Tammany Young, Baby LeRoy, Jack Mulhall, Oscar Apfel, Otis Harlan. Previewed at the Alexander, Glendale, June 28. Running time, 67 mins.

Crammed full of hoke and cleverly depicted old-time melodrama, The Old-Fashioned Way, with W. C. Fields in one of his most hilarious parts, ought to be sure-fire at any box office. No bets have been overlooked to provide a succession of guffaws and Fields, with the able direction of William Beaudine, has done a swell job.

As The Great McGonigle, Fields heads his repertoire troupe through the sticks, always managing to keep just one jump ahead of the sheriff, getting into all sorts of misadventures and finally proving himself a greater actor than his cash patrons are willing to admit. Highlight of the McGonigle performance is a reproduction of some of the scenes from the oldtime meller, 'The Drunkard,' and an after-piece by the star in which he resorts to some of the vaudeville legerdemain and conjury of the early days.

Supporting cast is well chosen, with Joe Morrison, a likely juve uncorking a voice that drew appreciative applause from the preview mob. Mack and Revell have supplied a couple of songs that promise to become overnight hits, among them a ballad titled, 'A Little Bit of Heaven, Known as Mother,' and 'Rolling in Luck,' both interpreted by Morrison in expert fashion.

Baby LeRoy has a fat part and helps make Fields miserable in a country boarding house, as does also Jan Duggan, when she forces a singing audition on the Great McGonigle. Judith Allen gives a pleasing performance as Fields' daughter, and Jack Mulhall as a disgruntled member of the cast, and Oscar Apfel, as young Morrison's dad, are satisfactorily cast. Others are oke.

Camera work is up to snuff, and 'The Old-Fashioned Way' should have no difficulty satisfying all types of audiences, particularly where droll comedy and hilarious situations fill the bill.

CAN THOSE TOMATOES, BOYS!

This is a drama, Friends, not a vegetable mart. Just give us a chance and we'll entertain you as you've never been entertained before.

THE VILLAIN STILL PURSUED HER!

Treasure Island

(MGM)

Adventure

Selling this picture is merely a matter of utilizing the entertainment and commercial values it offers. First there are Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, both box office names. While they, in conjunction with the title, will be given the most consideration, the names of Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Lewis Stone and Chic Sale cannot be overlooked. Second is the story, Robert Louis Stevenson's great adventure classic. For generations children (both sexes) who are now grown ups and children still children have thrilled to it. They know Long John Silver, Jim Hawkins, Billy Bones, Ben Gunn and all the pirate crew. Almost everyone has envied Jim's adventures. As screen entertainment, retaining that powerful quality, it should be a popular class and mass attraction. Thirdly, incorporating the other two, is the production itself. It's pretentious and authentic; preserving all the imagination-thrilling scope and color of the basic story. As such, it is, in addition to being human interest entertainment, a prestige builder.

The story of "Treasure Island" is well known. An old buccaneer dies. He tells a little boy about a map. Then comes a treasure hunt, pirates and lusty adventure. The boy and the king pin pirate become pals. There's bloody battle, death and danger, and the pirate caught. They're going to take him back to England for a hanging on Execution Dock, but the boy who has the treasure lets the pirate go.

The showmanship of "Treasure Island" is evident. A valuable piece of screen property, it opens up contact advertising and publicity mediums seldom available. On the literary standing of its story alone, it is a potential magnet for many who haven't attended the theatre in years. On its cast, production and entertainment value, it's both a showman's idea of everything to sell and an audience's idea of a clean, stirring picture.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

She Loves Me Not

(Paramount)

Comedy

Fun, in carload lots, most of it nonsensical, some of it satirical, all of it zippy, zestful and gay, is the showmanship and entertainment essence of this colorful, tuneful yarn of collegiate misadventure. It's just plain amusement; smart and novel enough for the class customers—foolish and exciting enough for the masses. Old Princeton University, steeped in dignified pride and prestige, is the locale of the hilarious carryings-on. The youthful crowd responsible for all the happy foolishness, all the modern, up-to-date comedy which carries a wide assortment of romantic, dramatic and serio-tragic accompaniments, are typically collegiate. It's a student life farce, sans athletic thrill and do or die for old Nassau heroism.

There's fun in the story, the action, acting, situations and repercussions which they evolve. True, there's no sense to it. It never could happen. But nevertheless, up on the screen, it's amusing, laugh-laden entertainment. Besides being daringly clever, it's clean, never, despite its continual threat, coming close to the danger line.

The idea is just as funny as what happens. Curly, night club chorine, fleeing a brawl and clad only in her dancing scanties, busts into Paul Lawton's room. A girl in the dormitory, particularly such a thinly clad stranger, threatens all sorts of dire complications. But stay she does; to get the rah-rah boys into pecks of trouble, real and imaginary. She busts up Paul's romance with his snooty society sweetheart; because of her there are three or four catchy musical numbers; she throws the dean into hysterics; makes the dean's daughter sympathize and fall in love with Paul; unloosens all the frenzied hoorah of a great motion picture producing company—a scene which is a graphic lesson in high-powered ballyhoo, and finally rallies the entire Tiger student body to her cause, wins a fabulous film contract and as the romance between Lawton and Midge is sealed, leaves Princeton to the calm, quiet solitude it knew before her appearance.

The publicity campaign should completely reflect all its snap, dash and colorful verve. There are names old and new (Kitty Carlisle and Lynne Overman) to talk about. There's the glamour and excitement of youth to play up strongly. But, best of all, there's a rollicking comedy show.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Paris Interlude

(MGM)

Romance

Quite a few handicaps, the most vivid of which is lack of powerful appeal, must be overcome in arousing popular interest for this picture. Essentially a dramatic romance, the yarn telling of two odd loves is given a topical newspaper man character atmosphere, dolling up the basic plot with sequences depicting the Lindbergh landing in Paris, a slow moving ultra-modernistic fashion show and quick glimpses of a gaudy Artists' and Students' Ball. These specialties, more than fundamental story or cast name values, appear to be outstanding assets. Chic appeal is to the modernes.

The locale is Paris, with most of the action taking place in the Brass Monkey Bar, presided over by wise-cracking Jimmy. Sam, ace reporter and his leg man, together with all the other American and most of the natives in Paris, eagerly await Lindbergh's landing. After that, Sam falls in love with Julie, an Iowa tourist, while Cassie vitriolically berates Pat for being such a slave to Sam, who gets the credit for the work which he actually does. Sam is ordered to accompany Lindbergh home, leaving the day he has promised to marry Julie and instructing Pat to tell the girl that their affair was just one of those things. Then Pat, protecting Julie, falls in love with her, and amid a lot of drama the story moves on to the fashion show and finally the Artists' Ball. Sam is reported dead in China. Julie has another romance with Rex, which Pat and Cassie break up by having Pat appear in a serio-compromising situation. Julie decides that as long as Sam is dead she'll marry Pat. But then that worthy appears a battered wreck of a man, to complicate the matter. Pat goes back to his hero-worshipping ways, spending the money he saved for marriage in bringing the man who menaces all his dreams back to life. Here there is real suspense, that cracks sharply as Cassie ironically convinces Sam that he isn't doing right by himself or anyone else and the show winds up with him giving his benediction to Julie and Pat, who, after a hectic career at all kinds of living with the least work has become an eagerly sought short story writer.

The picture needs plenty of support. Much can be done with ballyhoo along the topical lines, but it looks as if the best thing to support it would be a smart fashion show in which contact is made with one or a group of mercantile establishments. Paris, the Lindbergh flight, and the Artists' Ball also offer exploitable angles.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Old Fashioned Way

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Comedy

This is comedy. Its title is of peculiar significance to showmen. It's old-fashioned, anything for a laugh, comedy. To attain that end, one of its highlights is W. C. Fields giving Baby LeRoy an enthusiastic kick.

There's not much rhyme or reason to it. Actually, it's a hectic conglomeration of old and new gags in dialogue, situation and action. It is just the occasion for one more foolish thing after another to happen. Probably that's the reason that after looking at it for a few minutes more than an hour, the preview audience couldn't have laughed any more.

The occasion for all the merriment is The Great McGonigle and his troupe of thespians playing the sticks in the gas light era. It has the Great One always just a jump ahead of the sheriff but convincing enough so that he can remain that jump ahead. It permits Baby LeRoy to pester Fields, tweak his nose, drop his watch in the syrup, sock him with a cream puff and get the kick. It brings in the surprising would-be soubrette, Cleopatra Pepperday, to make the man's mad life madder. It rigs up some kind of romance between his daughter Betty and Wally Livingston that's responsible for whatever little logical continuity there is. For good measure it tosses in "The Drunkard," a tabloid melodrama, done in the Screen Souvenir style. And the whole thing, for no reason at all, is topped off by an exhibition of Fields' comic juggling.

"The Old Fashioned Way" is just an all-laugh show. It's one that you can invite the whole family to. There's fun for everyone. Unusual enough to be an accepted big theatre attraction, it's also down to earth and unsophisticatedly small town.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Beau Bashful
(Universal)
Fair

Fair comedy is offered in this effort, featuring Herbert Corthell, Grady Sutton and Sylvia Picker, in which Sutton plays the bashful swain, egged on by prospective father-in-law Corthell to propose to daughter Miss Picker. Corthell plays the indignant father, figuring his resentment at the proposal will force Sutton to elope with his daughter, thus saving the cost of a long engagement. It eventually works, but not until the complications in the expected manner.—Running time, 21 minutes.

William Tell
(Universal)
Amusing

An amusing and clever number of the Oswald animated cartoon series, this recasts the famous story of William Tell via the fertile minds of the animators. According to this version, Mrs. William Tell was the means of ridding the people of the brutal governor, for when he was pursuing her husband after the apple episode, it was she who routed him with her trusty rolling pin. An entertaining cartoon.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Red Rider
(Universal)
Western Action Serial

With a large proportion of fast riding, hard hitting and gun play, and with a lead name which has a considerable popular following, the exhibitor should find in this new serial something to sell to the younger masculine element of his patronage. The first three chapters of the 12-episode serial, titled respectively "Sentenced to Die," "A Leap for Life" and "The Night Attack," gives full promise of a lively and active story to come. Heading the cast as the Red Rider is Buck Jones, one of the most popular of the western players, whose name, tied in with an active western serial, should bring results. In chief support are Grant Withers, Marion Shilling, Walter Miller, and several western standbys. Jones, sheriff, aids the escape of his pal, Withers, who is sentenced to die for a murder he did not commit. Jones quits as sheriff and goes on the trail of the murderer, in order to clear Withers. The complications begin early and the interest is well maintained. It looks at this point to be a serial which the exhibitor definitely can sell to his younger patrons especially. Each episode runs approximately 20 minutes.

BRITISH PICTURES SHOWN IN LONDON

GIVE HER A RING

Produced by British International Pictures and distributed by Pathe. Directed by Arthur Woods. Features Wendy Barrie, Clifford Mollison, Zelma O'Neal, Bertha Belmore and Olive Blakeney.

The London Hippodrome musical comedy success is well adapted. The song numbers are good and cabaret sequences have been skilfully exploited for production and camera values. The plot turns on tangled assignations, made by phone operators with attractive-sounding subscribers, and is put over peppily. Girls, song, dance and wisecracks combine in a bright British effort.—B. A.

THE GIRL IN THE FLAT

Produced for and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Redd Davis. Features Stewart Rome, Belle Chrystal, Vera Boggetti.

Here is mystery drama. A girl, overcome by drink at a wild party, recovers consciousness to find her host has been murdered. The real criminal, also a girl, plays on the heroine's fear of her lawyer-fiance to cover her own tracks, but the lawyer lover gets busy, clears his own girl and reasons out the identity of the guilty party, who shoots herself. Meant for British consumption, it is usable here as a quota booking.—B. A.

Soup for Nuts
(Universal)
Entertaining

There is diversified entertainment in this subject, featuring Bob Hope, the Saxon Sisters, Vivienne Segal, Al Goodman and His Ensemble. Hope, master of ceremonies at a night club which has no patronage, persuades the proprietors to engage real talent, despite the wife's jealous fear of feminine competition. Vivienne Segal and various other radio names put on a show until the wife's jealous nature again gets the better of her and the club returns to its former state of somnolence.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Wax Works
(Universal)
Good

An entertaining cartoon in the Oswald series, this subject has Oswald finding a foundling on the doorstep of his museum. After they have gone to sleep, the baby awakens, stirs all the famous waxen figures to life and winds up in trouble in the Chamber of Horrors. Just as they are about to turn the baby to wax, Oswald goes to the rescue—and himself awakens to find he has been dreaming.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Hollywood Scene

FOUR FILMS POINT TO NEW TRENDS
FIVE PICTURES START, SEVEN FINISH
WOULD LIMIT AGENTS' COMMISSION
ROGELL TO TEST LONDON SERIES

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

FOUR productions of the last few weeks, "La Cucaracha," "The World Moves On," "One Night of Love," and "Our Daily Bread" seem destined in some way to affect future picture trends.

Their future, box-office-wise, may be a matter of conjecture, but their influence is bound to leave imprints. All four attempt to break precedent, and along four divergent pathways.

"La Cucaracha," a two-reeler in new Technicolor, reveals not only the most perfect color expression to date but also dovetails expertly with the film's dramatic motivation and emotional impact. "La Cucaracha" may well be the forerunner of the celluloid spectrum for full length films. Here is seen the artistic and technical use of color to heighten drama and romance, with color having real reason for being.

New Application of Color

Color in previous experiments seldom reached even a modicum of perfection. The eye was usually on the method, the technique, the mind distracted by red, yellow or blue flashes. Here in "La Cucaracha" emphasis is on the persons, the plot and the heart interest, with color giving rich, lush values and glowful setting for the drama.

If the pioneering of Jack Whitney, as entrepreneur, and Robert Edmund Jones, as creative artist, is successful in making their new color experiments commercially realizable, then oil paintings in movement on the screen are apt to become part and parcel of screen programs.

For highly imaginative subjects, for dream sequences, for romantic cut-backs, or glimpses into the future, color may yet find its rightful place on the screen without completely superseding the present black and white technique, for which there is ample field on the screen, as pen and ink or etching have in the realm of art.

The second film that marks a departure is "The World Moves On." Here is the striving to implant an idea, to give epic proportion to climactic world events, to reveal a love story and to hold out the gospel of faith as the sustaining force in a troubled world.

Opera and the Masses

"One Night of Love," with Grace Moore singing operatic selections, aided by Erpi's new "hill and dale" method of sound refinement and tone purification, as the third innovation, opens up a new trade route also. While opera, as such, has never been popular with the American film masses, the foreign production of "Be Mine Tonight" with Jan Kiepura startled production and distribution leaders by its box-office responses.

Inspired by the native American appeal of Grace Moore, her beauty and charm, Columbia has produced a dramatic film, different in its conception of opera singers and operas but grafted on to the masses' love of good music.

The fourth production, "Our Daily Bread," without doubt will stir controversy and provoke talk in and out of the industry.

Produced, written and directed by King Vidor, it is a conscious expression of a timely economic problem and a presentation of a solution. No story in the accepted American sense is built and sustained. It is a recording of the present "back to the land" movement, occurring all over the world, told realistically without recourse to extraneous dramatic trickery.

In its unfolding, it gets away from the futility expressed in continental films of the same category. It extols the philosophy of work and hope.

Here is an attempt on a big scale to reveal fundamental strivings for food, shelter, clothing, without sugar coating of romance, kisses and moonlight.

Five Productions Start

Fourth of July week saw five productions start. Seven were completed. Two of the new ones are Monograms. Paramount, MGM and Warner each have one. Of the finished pictures, Universal has two, the remaining five being equally divided among Fox, MGM, Paramount, Liberty and Warners.

"Girl of the Limberlost," a Gene Stratton Porter story, is the more important of the two Monogram starters. In this picture, the leading players are Marian Marsh, Louise Dresser and Ralph Morgan. The second picture is "King Kelly of the U. S. A.," in which Guy Robertson, Irene Ware, Edgar Kennedy and Franklyn Pangborn head the cast.

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the Greta Garbo picture, "The Painted Veil," went before the cameras. Herbert Marshall and Beulah Bondi head the supporting cast.

Paramount began active shooting on "Pursuit of Happiness," which features Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett and Charlie Ruggles.

At Warner, "Gentlemen are Born," with Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson, Dorothy Dare and John Halliday as the principals, took the stages.

Practically all the finished pictures may be counted in the better than ordinary class. Universal's completed pair are "One More River," featuring Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton and Colin Clive, and "Romance in the Rain," featuring Roger Pryor, Heather Angel and Victor Moore. The Fox unit is "She was a Lady," in which Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Walter Connolly and Louise Dresser are the principals.

"Barretts of Wimpole Street" went to the cutting room at MGM. This picture costars Norman Shearer, Fredric March and Charles Laughton.

At Paramount, "Now and Forever," with Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple and Sir Guy Standing, was completed.

Warner finished the musical extravaganza "Dames," featuring Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell and also Zasu Pitts.

Liberty Pictures wound up shooting on "School for Girls," which features Sidney Fox, Paul Kelly, Lona Andre and Russell Hopton.

Exhibitors who often have accused the Hollywood agents as being partly responsible for boosting artists' salaries, will be interested to learn of a current movement to limit agents' commissions to the first week's salary, instead of having them draw down 10 per cent for the duration of any engagement.

Proponents of this revolutionary action compare the artists' agents to employment agencies in other commercial fields. Agents may have anticipated legislation along the lines outlined as most of them have set up complete managerial service to qualify them for the 10 per cent commissions, by handling the client's personal affairs, finances, income tax, investments, family budget, and in many cases, legal service and publicity.

175 NEW YORK THEATRES UNDERGO POOLING, MANAGEMENT CHANGES

Independents Figure in Deals Concerning More Than One-Third of Theatres Involved; New Loew's-Warner Bid Seen

New York's independent and major theatre interests are now engaged in a program which will radically change the outward aspects of the metropolitan theatre map. Nearly 175 motion picture houses are experiencing a change of management, or face that possibility soon, and more than one-third of this number are in various stages of negotiation by independents.

These deals, involving acquisition and rearrangement of theatre properties, point to reawakened theatre development and expansion, which had been retarded by the generally tightened business conditions since 1929.

Fox Metropolitan Deal Largest

Largest of all the deals, although still in the speculative stage, is the much discussed negotiation by Warner Brothers and Loew's, Inc., for acquisition of the 87 theatres which comprise the Fox Metropolitan circuit—a deal which will have to be approved by the courts under the circuit's reorganization plan.

It is to the independents, however, that official observers in New York are looking with the greatest interest, for with the small circuits and operators widening their activities, acquiring more theatres and, in many instances, pooling circuits jointly under single operating machinery, unified organization such as that enjoyed by affiliated circuits is construed as the ultimate result.

Coincidentally, the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York is launching a fight against many ramifications of the Motion Picture Code, and as the member theatres are brought under more unified control they expect the power of the ITOA to be increased.

The two largest independent theatre deals in the Greater New York area involve realignment of more than 40 theatres under two single operating arrangements. Joseph Seider is president of a new theatre company with a pooling plan including 21 theatres. Prudential, Mr. Seider's company, recently bought an interest in two theatres on Long Island, and completed a pooling arrangement with A. H. Schwartz of the Century circuit in six Long Island towns, with theatres in Queens, Melrose, Huntington Station, Floral Park and Hamilton Station being turned over to Century, while Prudential gets two Century houses in Riverhead.

20 Manhattan Theatres Involved

The other major independent deal is that recently negotiated by Elias Meyer and Louis Schneider, who for some years have operated the M & S Circuit, by which the controlling interest in approximately 20 Manhattan Playhouses has been bought by them and operation of the group conducted under Belle Theatres, Inc., Delpho Theatres, Inc., and Knickerbocker Theatres, Inc. Capital of the first two corporations is listed at $10,000 each, while Knickerbocker has a capital of 150 preferred shares at $100 and 10,000 common no par shares.

Several other deals are pending. Among those completed or shortly to be consummated are those of Leon Rosenblatt, operating 10 houses in northern New Jersey and Staten Island, who is negotiating for four more Jersey houses; Rapf & Ruden, who have acquired their fourth house from Warner in New Jersey, and three more Long Island deals, involving eight theatres, worked out by Skouras Theatres and Century Circuit, under which arrangement Skouras will operate all groups.

Haring & Blumenthal have been reported as disposing of their eight houses in the metropolitan area with deals including one under which Warner is expected to acquire four New Jersey theatres. The four other houses, it is understood, are being sought by other independent interests.

Solidifying New Jersey Holdings

With acquisition practically accepted for eight theatres, Warner intends further to solidify its New Jersey holdings. More negotiations are understood to be well underway with a number of independents for theatres which will give Warner virtual domination in territories where it now operates. Five Bratter & Pollack and the three Rapf & Ruden houses will go under Warner operation within the next few weeks.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum, too, is moving to strengthen its Greater New York theatre holdings, the latest move being negotiations for at least 10 theatres of the Consolidated circuit and possibly all 26 houses.

RKO has assumed operation of four of the Lee Ochs theatres and taken over all contracts outstanding. Deals also are said to be pending for other independent houses.

Indications are that George Skouras is definitely set to continue New York theatre operation in spite of the fact that he may lose about 40 Fox Metropolitan Playhouses if Loew's and Warner are successful in their joint bid for the theatres.

Substitute Bid Awaited

The bid of $4,000,000 of Loew's and Warner for the Fox Metropolitan group may be withdrawn, it was indicated this week at a hearing before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack, and another bid substituted. The possibility that the bid might be raised to $4,500,000 also was being discussed. In any event, it was considered probable that a successful conclusion of the joint bid for the houses may be reached before the end of this week.

One of the chief delays has been the fact that the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee has objected to several provisions affecting the "details" of the proposed transaction made by Loew's and Warner. It was the preponderant opinion in New York Wednesday that there would be no change in the price offered for the theatres and that any changes in the offer would revolve solely around these provisions which have been troubling the Fox bondholders.

One version of what may happen is that Loew's and Warner will agree to a purchase of the committee's deposited bonds, about 85 per cent of a $12,500,000 issue, for $4,000,000. Under such an arrangement, Loew's and Warner then would proceed with their own reorganization of the circuit.

Right to Study Grosses Fought

Among the points over which the Loew's and Warner attorneys have been in disagreement with the Fox bondholders' subcommittee has been the question of whether the bidders have the right to examine, as requested by them, a schedule of grosses and operating expenses of the indivdual houses of the Metropolitan circuit. Loew's and Warner have contended that this information was essential to them in order to prepare a schedule of values through which they might arrive at a maximum or final bid. The bondholders' committee refused to supply this information, although other data previously refused the bidders was turned over to them.

Attorneys for Skouras and Randforce, operators of Fox Metropolitan, objected that giving out the earnings statements would place the houses "at the mercy of the companies with which the bidders are associated" in event the sale was not consummated.

The possibility of government intervention in the sale of Fox Metropolitan to the two bidders on the basis that the transaction might set up a monopolistic combine now appears to have vanished, despite the fact that representatives of the Department of Justice have sat in at court hearings on the proposed deal.

Outside of Greater New York, the only theatre interest contemplating expansion appears, again, to be Loew's. The company expects to close shortly for a one-third interest in the operating circuit developed by the late Michael Shea in Buffalo, Niagara Falls and North Tonawanda. Now owned jointly by the Shea estate and Paramount Publix, it is understood both groups will relinquish sufficient stock to aggregate the one-third which Loew's is about to annex. Twelve houses are involved.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH

Paramount

As its contribution to the current homey standard literary classic picture vogue, Paramount has selected the Alice Hegan Rice novel. It's a down to earth, human interest yarn of ordinary folk, and, like the other novels now being adapted, has been read by millions and is still considered a good seasonal best seller. The screen adaptation is by William Slavens McNutt and Jane Storm. Miss Storm did the screen play for "Doctor Bull" and "Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen" and was associated with "Adorable" and "My Lips Betray." Direction is by Norman Taurog, recently credited with "We're Not Dressing."

A newcomer with rich stage background, Pauline Lord, will be seen in the leading role as Mrs. Wiggs. A well known actress, who played in all cities and hamlets in the United States, her greatest success probably was the title role in "Anna Christie." Picture name value, however, is to be found in the principals and supporting cast. Comedy purposes are answered by W. C. Fields and Zasu Pitts. Romance is in the hands of Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor, who has appeared to good advantage in several Fox pictures. Charles Middleton is the hard-hearted menace to the welfare of the Wiggs Family. The five children, about whom the real human interest of the story revolves, are Jimmy Butler, George Breakston, the hero of "No Greater Glory"; Edyth Fellows, currently in "His Greatest Gamble" (Radio-Richard Dix); Virginia Weidler and Carmencita Johnson.

The story, timed to the gold rush days, is the saga of the Wiggs family. Experiencing all earthly travail while husband and father is chasing the elusive Alaskan nuggets, their drama is the occasion for the Fields-Pitts comedy romance. Also it's the object lesson for the youthful lovers, Miss Venable and Taylor, and the melodrama of the foreclosing mortgage holder, Charles Middleton.

Its showmanship, other than cast names, is that now being generally applied to clean pictures based on standard works and the new deal in picture making, homespun with strong heart appeal.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE

Fox

This is a different kind of story for Janet Gaynor. It presents her as a comedienne. Essentially a light romance is the yarn of an heiress who becomes a servant in order that she may learn how the folk downstairs live and to fit her to be the wife of the ideal whom she hopes to meet. The picture is based on a novel by Sigrid Boo, originally published in Europe, but widely read in America. The screen play is by Samson Raphaelson, who recently completed "Caravan" and also cooperated on MGM's forthcoming "Merry Widow." Frank Lloyd, responsible for "Cavalcade," and remembered for "Berkeley Square," "East Lynne" and many other successes, is the director.

The cast is of more than usual showmanship importance. Janet Gaynor has the lead. With her is teamed Lew Ayres, who appeared with her in "State Fair." In support will be seen Ned Sparks, in many Warner pictures and a hit in "Lady for a Day"; Walter Connolly, who was with Miss Gaynor in "Paddy, the Next Best Thing" and also seen recently in "20th Century" and "It Happened One Night"; Louise Dresser, who was with the leads in "State Fair," later in "David Harum" and "The World Moves On"; Astryd Allwyn, who has been seen in minor parts in several pictures; G. P. Huntley, recently in "Death Takes a Holiday" and "Little Man, What Now?"; Siegfried Rumann, who made his screen debut in "The World Moves On," and Catherine Doucet, Dorothy Christy, Harold Minjir and Buster Phelps.

Important as the cast is, there is definite showmanship value to the story. It's that of a wealthy young girl who, disillusioned as to her social importance, becomes a servant girl for a few months. There she learns for the first time what real life and love are, bringing an understanding and viewpoint that result in happy romance. Treatment is in a light comedy vein. This naturally suggests that the smash showmanship will be presenting Janet Gaynor's box-office value as a comedienne.

SHE HAD TO CHOOSE

Majestic-Darmour

This is a modern comedy romance story, flavored with an atmosphere of collegiate youthfulness, the action taking place against the background of the nationally known California institution—the "drive in barbecue" restaurant. The original is by Mann Page and Izolla Forrester. The screen play is by Houston Branch, who did "The Match King" and "Silk Express" for Warner. Direction is by Ralph Cedar, co-director of "Roman Scandals."

Principals in the cast are all well known young actors. Buster Crabbe, Isabel Jewell and Sally Blane have the leads with Regis Toomey and Fuzzy Knight in most prominent support. In addition to these players, minor and atmospheric roles are played by scores of college and high school boys and girls. One of the potential showmanship features, that has a peculiar exploitation relation to the story background, is a choral music number, "There's a Tavern in the Town."

The story tells of a jobless Texas girl who wanders into the fast merriment of the collegiate patronized "barbecue" run by the ex-football star, Buster Crabbe. Action gets under way with a holdup in which the girl becomes an unwitting heroine, and then romance develops. Complications result when the football-barbecue king finds himself being madly pursued by a wealthy girl, Sally Blane, while her brother, Toomey, takes it upon himself to captivate the heart of Isabel Jewell. With that for a set-up, the climax works out in a whirlwind of action with a surprise punch.

Novelty of the idea and the youthful atmosphere of the yarn, accentuated by the antics of the crowd headquartering at the drive-in suggests a brand of showmanship to arouse the enthusiasm of the young folk.

THE GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST

Monogram

The prestige of the author, Gene Stratton Porter, the quality of the story and the strength of cast bespeak the showmanship of the story. The late Gene Stratton Porter was the author of many best-selling stories, whose sales in book form ran into many millions. Of them all, "The Girl of the Limberlost" often has been declared the most popular.

A valuable piece of entertainment material, directly in line with the current vogue for wholesome pictures, its screen adaptation is the work of Adele Comandini, whose "Jane Eyre" has just been completed for release. It is being directed by Christy Cabanne, whose latest pictures are "World Gone Mad," "Midshipman Jack," "When Strangers Meet" and "Money Means Nothing."

The cast is headed by Louise Dresser, currently in "Servants' Entrance" and remembered for her part in "State Fair"; Ralph Morgan, recently in "Strange Interlude," "Rasputin and the Empress," "The Power and the Glory," "Humanity" and several other Fox pictures; Marian Marsh, last seen in "I Like It That Way"; Henry B. Walthall, now in "Viva Villa"; Helen Jerome Eddy, now in "Doctor Monica" and "Riptide," Eddie Nugent, Gigi Parrish, a 1934 Baby Star, Robert Ellis, Barbara Bedford and Betty Blythe.

The story of "The Girl of the Limberlost" is the dramatic, romantic, human interest character portrayal of a girl whose sweetness and charm brought her love and happiness despite the intense hatred of her mother, who always believed that the impending birth of her child prevented her from saving her husband's life. The sincere depth and power of this theme, plus the beauty of the natural setting in which it is told, is a definite clue to the manner in which this entirely new picture should be brought to public attention.

BROADWAY BILL

Columbia

In cast names and theatrical story content this production affords many potential showmanship angles. Contrary to title tone, the yarn is not a story of the Great White Way. Rather, it's a story of a race horse and race track people. The original is by Mark Hellinger, columnist. The screen play is by Robert Riskin, recently scenarist on "Lady for a Day" and "It Happened One Night." The director is Frank Capra, who also made those successes for Columbia.

Because of recent pictures, from a box office and publicity standpoint, the importance attached to the leading players assumes more than ordinary significance. Warner Baxter, currently in "Stand Up and Cheer" and "Grand Canary," is starred. Opposite him is Myrna Loy, whose work in "The Thin Man," "Stamboul Quest" and "Manhattan Melodrama" have given her a new patron-attracting power. Principal supporting roles are occupied by Lynn Overman, now in Paramount's "Ladies Should Listen," Raymond Walburn and Clarence Muse. Others who will be seen are Margaret Hamilton, who played a supporting role in "Another Language"; Douglas Dumbrille, Harry Hohlman, Edmund Breese, George Cooper and Forrester Harvey.

Given an unusual comedy twist, the human story, in which the horse, Broadway Bill, is the center of interest, concerns a young man dissatisfied with family and position. Under the promise that if his idol Broadway Bill flops on the big time tracks, he'll return and settle down to industry, he takes the road. The adventures with which he meets, the things that happen to him and his horse, leading up to the big race, build to a surprise climax, under Capra's handling.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended July 7, 1934, from 101 houses in 19 major cities of the country, reached $949,097, an increase of $18,913 over the total for the preceding calendar week, ended June 30, when 103 theatres in 19 cities reported an aggregate gross of $930,184.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Out of a pile of papers recently I dug the following. It apparently had been there for some while, was separated from the letter it undoubtedly came with, hence I cannot give it proper credit except to say it evidently is from a Bluebook School man. Apologies, therefore to its author. Here it is:

"With regard to the questions we have been answering on fire shutters, ports etc., it seems to me what follows might be of interest. The subject is one that includes much more than ports and shutters. Here is something I have on file:

"In the course of many years devoted to motion picture projection we have received and studied many codes and regulations for the conduct and operation of motion picture theatres. Primarily these were supposed to be for the protection of audiences and workers in the theatre.

"Some were evidently compiled and drawn up by persons without the slightest knowledge of what it was all about. Others again were merely a patchwork made up of sections of other codes which read well and looked impressive. In the majority of cases, safety was regarded merely as a slogan, instead of a reality to be obtained.

"Many contained ridiculous and impractical clauses which were apparent to everybody who had ever worked in a theatre, but which to the persons drafting the code seemed highly desirable. For example there is one code in existence today which states that 'projection rooms must be constructed with solid concrete of ample thickness,' then further stipulates that 'it shall be lined with asbestos paper or board.' The rest of the regulations as to the fittings in the room are decidedly lax.

"Another stipulates that the observation ports for projection must be limited to four inches in width but raises no objection to the spot and flood light ports three feet wide in the same room. One code insists on exhaust fans but does not permit fresh air inlets, and so on.

"Looking back on the freaks of legislation it is indeed encouraging to read the excellent piece of work done in the legislation of the province of British Columbia in Canada, which went into force in 1929 and has splendidly stood the years' test of practicability. It is a model of completeness and provides not only protection for the audience but also for the workers in the theatre, including the projectionist, who is often entirely lost sight of in the writing of regulatory measures.

"The matter of ventilation, which in most cities is nothing short of scandal, is taken care of by stipulating a flue opening of 120 square inches for each projector. An inlet of the same size for air into the room must be installed at or near the floor level.

"The proper observation of the screen is ensured by the observation ports not less than 140 square inches and not exceeding 170 square inches. Those who have endeavored to work in houses where the observation ports resemble knot holes will commend this provision.

"Projection port shutters must be quick closing, gravity type with a two inch overlap on the sides supported in such manner that the opening of the fusible link fuse will close all of them at once.

"There must be two entrances to the projection room and these must not be directly into the auditorium of the theatre. If the plan of the theatre is such that this cannot be avoided, vestibules having two doors of fire proof construction must be installed."

I am well aware that some of our United States authorities have set up rules and caused laws to be enacted locally for the regulation of theatre projection rooms that are both ridiculous and outrageous. Long ago, for example, someone conceived the notion that an observation port should not exceed four inches in width. He had it enacted as a regulation in one of our large cities, it was copied and presently we had almost all projectionists peering through that small slit with one eye. They only started a reform in that direction when I, through the projection department of the Moving Picture World, now a part of the Motion Picture Herald, started something about it and got some unions to do the same thing. It took several years to get that perfectly silly "regulation" finally pretty well abated. There have been many other foolish and bad ones but that was about the worst.

How to Join the Bluebook School

Every once in a while someone writes asking how he may join the Bluebook School. I don't quite know why, unless it is disbelief that any one can, in this modern, commercial age, expect or hope to get something for nothing.

From Frank Duncan, Shamrock, Texas, come the latest, as follows: "I would like to have some information about the Bluebook school of projection. Just how may I study here in the projection room, using your method of teaching? Would also appreciate your ideas concerning television."

This inquiry is a bit different from others received, in that friend Duncan merely wants to know how to proceed to study.

First of all, the Bluebook School is as free as the air you breathe. All you have to do is dig out the answers to the questions, as literally thousands are doing each week. The "school" was started originally with the idea of getting Bluebook owners to study the books they had purchased. I well knew the average man buys a book, skims through it, looks at the pictures (of which latter the Bluebook has about 500, by the way) and then puts it on a shelf with the idea of consulting it further only when in trouble.

The answers to all the questions asked may be found in the Bluebook, or very nearly all of them. In hunting them out the "student" not only fixes the matter in his mind, particularly since he must wait to compare his answer with the published one, but also he becomes very familiar with the books themselves.

Of course many of the answers may be obtained from other sources. In fact, I presume all of them might be, but I have long since taken the position that since the Bluebook has been recognized as the standard text book on projection for more than 22 years, every projectionist should own one.

As to television, I can only express the belief that it will not be used in theatres for a good while to come. I am not at all certain it ever will be. If it is surely it must be by means of wired distribution. Imagine a full house, a television picture and sound and a thunder storm! I can of course make no positive assertions, nor can anyone else, but I don't believe projectionists need worry about television yet a while.

A Chat With Three Boston Projectionists

While in Boston recently I enjoyed a chat with three of "the boys," who came to the hotel to meet and shake hands with yours truly. One was Morris Myers, now located in Boston, who projected the first talking pictures ever shown on an ocean liner. It was on the Leviathan, on which ship Myers made six trips as projectionist. The Leviathan was the first ship to install talking films.

Herman Fox and Hymen Deinerstein, both Boston projectionists, were with him. We enjoyed half an hour of chat on projection affairs. All three are young men. I sincerely trust they will live to do both themselves and the profession distinct credit. They will, too, if they remember that advancement is a matter of close application, study and hard work. The path that is easy lies on a dead level. The one that is too easy leads finally downward. The path upward is stony and hard to travel, but the top, when reached, is where is found the peace and satisfaction success brings.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neosho, Missouri

DEAR HERALD:

Last week we told you something about "The Lake of the Hills," but we didn't tell you much. In fact, one can't tell you very much. The best way is to see it, and when you see it you don't want to leave it. This lake is right in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri. That is, they call them mountains, but the man who named them mountains never saw mountains, but they are beautiful hills (awfully beautiful) and they are all covered thickly with oak timber, and with this lake winding in and around these hills, makes it one of the beauty spots of America. If you want to see a beautiful place go and see "The Playground of America." It will be worth your while.

Ted Davis operates the Grand and 14th Street theatres in Moberly. Just now we don't think very much of Moberly. At one time it was quite a busy place, but right now the factories are about all closed and some operating on part time and this makes it bad for Moberly. Ted is doing his part in trying to hold Moberly together with his theatres and keeping the customers from becoming blue, and our guess is that if times don't change around Moberly, the politics will, but maybe that won't help a bit.

The Hills, If Not the Shepherd

C. H. Fayant at Lebanon has a beautiful theatre; he ought to have because that is quite a famous town. It was here that Harold Bell Wright used to live and it was here we were told that he wrote "The Shepherd of the Hills." We don't know where he got the Shepherd, but he could find the Hills all right, for they are everywhere. If there are any reasons for having a Shepherd down here we can't see them, for we haven't seen a sheep since we left northwest Missouri, but we have seen a lot of mules and goats and several packs of fox hounds. Well, that don't make any difference, for Lebanon is a fine town and C. H. Fayant is largely responsible for that condition. He has got a good memory, for he knew us when we walked into his office. Had he have been Cactus Kate instead of C. H. Fayant we wouldn't have been surprised, for our beauty seems to make a lasting impression with the women. Maybe it's our shape.

Hugh Is Kind of Excitable

J. G. Coldwell of the Princess theatre at Aurora was in Springfield trying to find the Fat Lady at a circus when we called to see him the last time we were there. He was at home this time and we had a delightful visit with him. He wanted us to stay over and go fishing for trout down in the streams of the Ozarks in Arkansas. We couldn't do it because we are a working man (that is, we try to make people think we are, and sometimes we doubt if we get away with it), but any how, J. G. is a prince of a good fellow and you ought to know him. We hope to go back some day.

Mr. C. W. Williams operates the Gillios theatre at Monett. You couldn't get him to be without the HERALD no way you could fix it. That's the reason why the Gillios and C. W. are so well noted. He told us to tell Hugh Gardner here in Neosho that he was going to come down here and trim him up on the golf course. We didn't tell Hugh that because we believe pretty firmly that he can't do it, and besides that Hugh is kinda excitable, anyway.

This town of Neosho is only about twenty miles from Joplin, and that's why we see so many Joplin cars here, but the main reason, probably, is to see Hugh's Orpheum theatre, which is the pride of southwest Missouri. Not only that, but they are pretty well stuck on Hugh, too. That is, the ladies. Hugh doesn't have a pack of fox hounds, but he does have a pack of golf clubs that is so large that it takes two caddies to carry them. He don't know what some of them are for, so he has tried to dig potatoes with some of 'em. Hugh reminds us very much of Bonnie Benfield of Morris, Minn. He looks like him, he laughs like him and he is about as fat, and would give Bonnie a merry chase on the golf course. Hugh thinks if the "Legion of Decency" don't go too strong and become unreasonable they ought to do a lot of good. He agrees with us that the best way to reach Hollywood is through the pocketbook instead of the head. Some people think more of their pocketbooks than they do of their heads, anyhow.

Hugh has clipped the advertising out of the HERALD for a good many years and he has a stack of them that would choke the Mississippi River. Not only that, but he has clipped everything of importance that has appeared in the HERALD back since the days of "Motography," which was the mother and wet nurse of THE EXHIBITORS' HERALD. We'll betcha he saved everything but our Colyum. The Ozarks would lack a whole lot if they didn't have Hugh, but we wish he'd quit eating so many dried apples.

Motor Boat, Lake Full of Fish

Doggone it all, there's no sense of you going through this country without stopping at Lamar to see A. J. Simmons, who operates the Plaza theatre. Lamar is a right smart town of about 3,500 Missourians who look upon A. J. to keep the town in shape while the hounds are chasing the foxes. Mr. Simmons owns a cottage and a motor boat down on the lake in the hills that is said to be about 30 miles long and is full of all kinds of fish (that is, it was full of 'em before A. J. went down there the last time) and he wants us to come back down there and put in at least two weeks helping him catch out what fish there are left.

Mr. Simmons is planning to build a new theatre for two reasons; one is that he wants to look at a new theatre himself and the other reason is that Lamar needs a new one. Maybe it does, but we thought the one he now has was plenty good enough for a town twice the size of Lamar. He took us over to a cafe and ordered us something to eat and told us that the water there was only used to run under bridges and for mud-turtles to swim in and we told him that Volstead was a grandfather of our wife's Uncle Jake, which makes him no relation of ours. After that everything was all right. He says that he believes the "Legion of Decency" is going to do a lot of good in cleaning up the dirty film when everything else has failed, provided they assist in supporting the good ones. We believe they will. If they don't they will be inconsistent, and we don't believe they are that.

Mr. Simmons was for a long time film salesman out of Kansas City and is well acquainted with a lot of friends of ours. He has rubbed up against a lot of exhibitors through this Middle West and that's what makes him such a doggone good guy, and he insists that operating a theatre is about the most honest business he knows of. You ought to meet him.

Public Is Too Healthy

In Eldorado Springs we found C. A. Bessier still entertaining the public at his Opera House. Eldorado Springs was at one time quite a health resort, but of late years the public seems to be quite healthy, which makes it quite tough on the town, and if it wasn't for C. A.'s Opera House the town might go back to the government, although we doubt if it would. If they will leave it to C. A., we'll betcha he brings everything out all right; he's that kind of a guy.

They have been needing rain in this part of Missouri for several weeks, and crops were beginning to feel the effect of the dry weather, but this morning just as were going to hit the road it began to rain and the natives sent a committee to thank us on behalf of the town and community for coming into the state and bringing the rain. Other towns ought to do the same thing, but they don't. That's why Eldorado Springs is a little ahead of the rest of 'em.

Knowing how Ernie feels about us taking up too much space, we are going to quit right now and give you an opportunity to shout Hurrah!

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Chesterfield

QUITTER, THE: Emma Dunn, Charles Grapewin—This was a good play from start to finish. We received many good comments on this play. Well acted and was very entertaining. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 5-6.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

Columbia

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—An extra good war picture. They will all like Dix as the war hero. Running time, 74 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

BLACK MOON: Jack Holt—Used on a double bill and it is pretty bad. Why any company would ever make a show like this is beyond me. Pay for it if you must, but don't run it before you see it. It's not fit to be run anywhere. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 29-30.—D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn. General patronage.

HOLD THE PRESS: Tim McCoy, Shirley Grey—Only a fair program picture, but a very exciting climax.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—It happened two nights here and pleased 100 per cent. It has a distinct advantage over the majority of socalled specials in that it has mass appeal plus. The highbrows enjoyed it, the sophisticates found it diverting, the simpler souls like myself literally ate it up and the box-office registered no kick. Besides, it furnished new ideas on how to flag a car. Unfortunately, the writer could not use the method used and recommended by Miss Colbert, but think it quite effective. I've been told my face would stop a clock, but back to the picture: if you have not played it yet, do so at the very earliest possible moment and boost it. You may stand at the exit and face your patrons with a smile and better than that, they will smile with you. Running time, ten reels. Played June 24-25.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Wonderful play. The best by far that Columbia has produced this year. Play this play and everyone will be pleased. Running time, 105 minutes. Played June 9-10—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William—A very interesting picture with a story that is a little different. Liked William better in this one than anything we have had him in. Running time, 91 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—We were somewhat skeptical of this picture, due to some adverse comments, but don't let them fool you. It is good all the way. Beautiful music and splendid acting. Attendance better second night than it was the first and that is something out of the ordinary for us. Played June 28.—Amuzu Theatre, Inman, S. C. Small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro, Lois Wilson—Here is a show, if properly handled, will make you money. Have your Boy Scouts or some other organization sponsor it, and it will please 95 per cent.—D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn. General patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Walter Connolly—Way above the average program picture. Best hospital picture we ever had. Clean, well directed, excellent photography. Had many nice comments on this picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 15-16.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

BEDSIDE: Warren William—This is in my opinion just a fair program picture and is not quite up to the standard of pictures that Warren William has been making in the past. Played this with a double bill and everyone seemed satisfied. Played June 20-21.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis—A laugh musical with quite a punch. Should get a good rating for musicals. Played June 10-11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez, Lyle Talbot—Not a very big picture but well received. In fact, it exceeded expectations. Played June 13-14.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess—Nice work all the way through. Plenty of action but not cheap and trashy. Fine for the Serial Night. Just a little bit different than you would expect. Running time, 69 minutes. Played June 29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Alice MacMahon—Too silly, or else the comedy was above their heads. It was a flop for me.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels—Fair picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Played this one late as I only recently purchased this brand. It gave my patrons good, clean belly laughs. A big attraction for me, which is something new, indeed. Long live Joe E. Brown. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 16-17-18.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Ran this old picture, but gave splendid satisfaction. Wish I could find some new ones as good as this. If it is thrills and action they crave, this one fills the bill and then some. Many favorable comments. Played June 8-9.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—The poorest picture from this popular star.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio—In a way this is a very fine picture, but not as great as I expected from the way it has been advertised. Warner sent us a checker but the checker did not find a crowded house, especially the second night showing. We get checkers when business looks good, but when no business we get a pain in the neck.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio. We did not do very much over average business. It is all right but did not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—Poor. Nothing to it. Hard to understand in spots. Warner Baxter's worst to date. Business fair. Played June 19-20-21.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—This picture would remind you of back in your school days when time came for closing the session. We then put on a big play and you remember how glorious it was to us then. But today think how sick it would make you feel to watch such bunk. Running time, 80 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—All talk. Not so good.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard, Heather Angel—Boys, this one is a crime to run in your theatre.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Paterson, John Boles, Spencer Tracy—A very nice picture. Clean with catchy music. A worthwhile production for any class house. Give us more like it. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 13-14.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy—Weak play. Wasteful effort of good talent. Played June 20-21.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—A very true epic of the old south which is big in every respect, but the sound was not very good and we received a very dark print, and no matter how good a picture may be it is spoiled by these two faults, caused by carelessness by the shipping department. They should be more careful and they certainly have room to be, especially Fox.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor—Janet Gaynor's best to date. Not quite as disgustingly sweet as some of her others, although there were a few scenes that were almost funny. Splendid negro singing. Business above average. Played June 17-18.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor—Rush your date for this one. It should get them in and will please. Played May 16.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor—A very good picture with two of the screen's greatest stars. But it is not the type of picture that will draw and please the younger generation. Business very light. Expected much more. Played May 26-27.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Good, clean entertainment. Suitable for the whole family. Played June 14-15.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—This is by far the best picture that has been made this year. I wonder if Fox can give us more of this next year. Even topped "Little Women" gross. A good clean picture. If anybody says this is a dirty picture they ought to be shot at sunrise. Everybody had something to say when they went out. They all asked us when we were going to have another one like this one. Drew way above the average. In this theatre it holds high. Played June 24-25.—Homer Barnwell, Elgin Theatre, Elgin, Ore. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—The biggest business of the season and not one kick.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—A natural. Another "State Fair." The public have been crying for clean pictures. Well, here's one that is chock full of good, clean, old fashioned fun and entertainment. Personally, I think that this is the very best picture that Will Rogers has made to date. It has everything in it—romance, fun comedy, human interest—and it brought me the biggest business we had this year. We used the bannered horse and cart ballyhoo around town for a few days and this was very effective. The picture was perfectly cast and directed, and I feel so good about it I must repeat again that it is great entertainment. Why any theatre would pass up this picture (I suppose there are a few) is beyond me. Played June 17-18-19.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

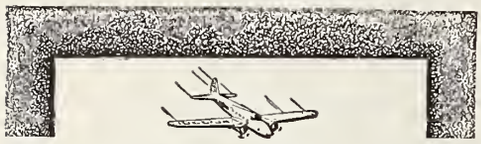
FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—The kind of picture our folks like on Saturday. It is okay.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—Give Fox credit for this great picture and give Rudy Vallee the four stars for his great song, "Hold My Hand." I want to say this song number is the greatest love song ever to come to this screen of mine. Running time, 78 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—Vallee and Durante both show improvement. Well received. Would have made a beautiful color picture. Played June 24-25-26.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey—This picture pleased but was too long.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey—Don't tell me that smut is necessary to produce results at the box-office. This picture drew a good house the first night and the second night was almost as good, with many who are not regular theatre-goers. So I analyze it that the first nighters advertised it well in our town. An evening of delightful entertainment if you like music, beauty, comedy, romance, plus a subtle something with wings that will delight the idealist without losing hold on the lower brow. A very unusual (to America) type of entertainment is provided in "I Am Suzanne" by the introduction of Podrecca's Piccoli Marionettes. Children loved them and grownups seemed fescinated by their almost uncanny elfin charms. The devil who pulled the strings on human beings and made puppets of them was certainly a something of consummate skill and depth. Gene Raymond and Lilian Harvey do splendid work. —Mary Hayes Davis, LaBelle and Dixie Crystal Theatres, LaBelle, Fla. Small town patronage.



I WAS A SPY: Herbert Marshall—Another lemon. All players had a foreign accent and were terribly hard to understand. Depressing story and uninteresting. Business poor. Played June 10-11.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor —Exceptionally good program picture. Did not draw for us. Lots of good laughs. We thought this was Jimmy Dunn's best picture. Good story and acting but it just wasn't there when it came to getting the patrons in. Played May 29-30-31.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—Splendid. We always expect a lot of Will Rogers' pictures and are never disappointed. This not as good as some of his others but we played to a nice business and patrons liked it very much. We thought Zasu Pitts a little too silly to be good. Played June 3-4.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—Good comedy. We had read lots of poor reports on this so didn't expect much. It was silly, of course, but the laughs were there and people liked it. No drawing power. We didn't take in enough for film rental. Played June 1-2.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

ORIENT EXPRESS: Heather Angel—Not much to it. Did not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory—Didn't see this ourselves but from patrons' remarks it must have been excellent. Best Friday and Saturday business in months. Played June 8-9.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY: Otto Kruger—The press sheet said it was a comedy, but the only thing funny about it is why any company would release it. Didn't help Otto Kruger any in our town. Poor entertainment. Played June 24-25.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Claire Trevor, Shirley Temple—Best variety of musical entertainment for some time. However, it was poorly edited, or something, as it seemed to have "relapses" at times. It has plenty of good acts.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter—Supposed to be a big one. Ran trailers, big flash in lobby and we fooled them in first night. Someone said, "It's strange to me how we can keep on putting out bait and catch suckers on those supposed big advertised pictures. Some day they are going to quit biting big bait." Running time, 80 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—Entertaining, well received. Played June 6-7.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers—They seemed to fall for this one. I heard no adverse criticism but the crowd was missing. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 23-24-25.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Zasu Pitts—By far the best performance Zasu Pitts has put out. Played June 8-9.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MGM

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—This picture seemed to please in a way but not much of a connected story. They would begin to sing and play music but only in short parts, then go back to silly fun-making and fixing for the next act. Miss MacDonald should be crowned with as many stars as possible to give any leading actress. I hope she will stay young till I come to Hollywood. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 24.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Marvelous show. Joan Crawford's best for a long time. In this is one of the most beautiful dancing numbers ever created. More good comments on this than on any other show for a long time but played to the poorest Sunday and Monday business in months. Had a big ball game for competition in the afternoon and the evenings turned into terrible wind and dust storms. Should draw well under average conditions. Played June 24-25.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix—Good program picture. Much better than average. Fair drawing power. Some thrilling scenes. Played June 5-6-7.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER: Laurel and Hardy—Used this on Family Night and it proved to be one of the best entertaining pictures that we have had in years. Kept the house in a continuous uproar. Give us more good pictures with good clean comedy and business will improve.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—One of the finest shows ever made but not much drawing power here. Patrons enjoyed it. Entirely different from the average picture. Educational but very interesting. Played May 27-28.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

FUGITIVE LOVERS: Robert Montgomery—A very unusual picture. Liked Montgomery better in this one than anything he has done. Will be liked by everyone. Running time, 80 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queens Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

LAUGHING BOY: Ramon Navarro, Lupe Velez—"Laughing Boy" was barred at the library in this town and could only be had from the rental libraries. The girl in the book was a light of love and so she appears in the picture. With the agitation that is going on by the churches and other organizations this one is food for their mill. I tried to get out from under it, but could not for the 14 days had gone by for the cancellation. The picture is not as bad as the book but it is bad enough. I have noticed on these socalled big pictures with a press sheet that takes a shawl strap to go round it, that there is not a logical idea that you can get hold of. I took this one of "Laughing Boy" over to the advertising manager of the daily to get some help from him and he remarked on the paucity of information in these oversized press sheets that these bright boys get out. If you ask me, a higher priced press sheet with all the colors of the rainbow is a waste of money. Twenty-six big pages of "Laughing Boy" and not a fact in them that you could get hold of. Not a single idea of how to exploit the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TWO ADDED TO REPORTER RANKS

New contributors to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department this week hail from the Midwest and the Northwest. The new reporters, whose initial contributions appear in this issue, are:

D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn.

Homer Barnwell, Elgin Theatre, Elgin, Ore.

LAZY RIVER: Robert Young—This was one of those pictures that bring home the bacon. Pleased everyone, even me, which is something. Best Tuesday and Wednesday business of the month. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 26-27.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—Not such a rotten picture as some would have you believe. Ran it on my Serial Night and it was well liked. Running time, 77 minutes. Played June 22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Smalll town and rural patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—The title sort of fooled 'em on this one, but the picture itself is very good and interesting entertainment. Nat Pendleton and Ted Healy's work throughout the picture is a scream. This pleased about 85 per cent. All I ask for is a picture that will please my patrons and this one did very satisfactorily, so I am fully satisfied. Played June 20-21.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable—A fine picture. Showed it as a benefit for the tennis club and it was well received. Gable is quite a favorite in this town. Running time, 95 minutes. Played June 19-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable—Gable is duck soup in this town and "Men in White" is the kind of picture that fits Gable to a "T." Pleased 80 per cent of the cash customers. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 8-9-10.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable—It is a hospital picture and who in this big world wants to look at a picture full of grief.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—This was a good mystery story but why do they star Robert Montgomery in this type of play? With the right star, this story would have been a knockout. As it was it did a fair business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 22-23-24.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—Mystery pictures have had their day at my theatre. If I had my way I would pack Mr. X and all his crowd in airplanes and send them all to Brazil. Producers of such pictures also would be forced in this plane and all of them never allowed to make another picture in our United States.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery—Wonderful picture. Played June 3-4.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—If several raw remarks had been left out, this picture would have been a honey. Even as it is I will say it has excellent entertainment value for adults. For children, no. It is not a picture to show on Saturday nights in the small towns where children attend. Has a haunting theme song that keeps you singing for days. Saturday night is a regular Family Night here and I advertise it as such, then in the face of such advertising MGM compels me to run such a picture. It's nerve racking to a conscientious exhibitor. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 20-July 2.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—Weak picture of weak people. Crawford's drunken husband takes what there is of the show. Played June 21-22.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—I do honestly say this is one of the very best pictures to be had. You can't think how good it makes me feel to give in a report like this. Hope it will make some brother exhibitor feel happy to know there is one more good picture left for him.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy—I purposely set this picture back on account of the many adverse remarks written about it. I want to tell you that it is an okay picture, true to life, and has a big moral. I think anyone who knocks this picture is perverse, if you know what I mean. I'd sooner show this picture than scores of other cheap, trashy stuff that has run this industry into the muck in which it now sticks. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 15. —A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller —This one is big. I mean wonderful.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weismuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Just to convince Miss Edith Fordyce of Selma, La., that I don't think she's a bum critic (besides, I ain't never said she's no bum critic) I'm going to give this production my august approval and endorsement. Or shall we say June endorsement. I anticipate playing this excellent picture in the very near future and feel confident that it will be all Miss Edith says it is and will most probably exceed my fondest expectations. I have never had the pleasure of meeting this young lady, but mutual friends are unanimous in their praise of her many excellent qualities, so maybe I was wrong in differing with her over "Let's Fall in Love." but I still think I'm right. In conclusion, anyone who even hints that Miss Edith is a bum critic is a critical bum, so there.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery, Stuart Erwin—Metro spent plenty of money on this picture and it is great in a way. Many gruesome shots, Racho's father whipped to death, wholesale slaughter. No question it is a great picture and the biggest failure at the box-office that we have had. It did normal business the first day, Sunday, then flopped the other two days to the new low for all time. Which goes to show that they do not want any pictures dealing with war and there was plenty of it in this picture. The whipping was prolonged over too much time, one shot as he was tied up and then his groans as the lash cut into his flesh. Now, I ask you, is that entertainment? Of course, this did not really happen but the effect was there and it wasn't so good. It was an error for Metro to force a Sunday run for this picture. I would have been okay for the Saturday run as on that day we have an entirely different clientele to cater to. Sunday run, no, Saturday, yes. Played June 24-25-26.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WOMEN IN HIS LIFE, THE: Otto Kruger—You cannot get anything out of this picture. What can we do? All we have done up to this date hasn't done any good. They still make 'em and that is not all, they make us play them. We haven't any say, so they do our booking for us, then make us take it or leave it. Running time, 76 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

Monogram

RIDERS OF DESTINY: John Wayne—John Wayne as Singin' Sandy drew a good house and made a lot of friends by his work in this picture. The plot is not so hackneyed and there is something besides shooting and love making. John Wayne is a likeable human with an excellent voice which the producer allowed him to use as Singin' Sandy. When patrons left the theatre, some of them said, "I never liked westerns, but this one is different. I'm coming again next Saturday." Then I rose to my opportunity as salesman and told them the new westerns were different from the old silent picture days. That effort was made now to make their appeals more universal with a little good music and comedy for highbrow, a little shooting, fighting and breakneck skill in riding for the roughnecks, etc. Now if producers could have heard what these same people said the next week when they put John Wayne in a western and gave him nothing to do but shoot and fight, no comedy and no lovely cowboy songs, they'd know that vitamin D was missing in the menu.—Mary Hayes Davis, LaBelle and Dixie Crystal Theatre, LaBelle, Fla. Small town patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TRAIL: John Wayne—A fairly good program western picture that pleased about 70 per cent. Monogram certainly has improved the quality of their pictures and sound in the last year. Played June 22-23.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—Marvelous picture of its kind but is suitable only for children. More walkouts on this than almost any other show this year. We even had some little children walk out on the matinee. Poor business. The first half of the picture isn't so bad but the last half seems terribly long and uninteresting. Played June 22-23.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

ALL OF ME: Miriam Hopkins, Fredric March, George Raft—It is well acted, but the situations are not very pleasant. It is a poor picture for small towns.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins, George Raft—The cast is capable of better plays. Stars should be starred. Played June 27-28.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft—Did not please. It is okay for the kind.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft—I don't know what to say about this one, for in the first place I did not do any business with it. It is, however, a very good picture and if you have any Raft fans they will like this. It is entirely different than anything he ever made before. I had a hot local election in town to buck that kept a few away, no fault of the picture, however. Played June 24-25-26.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen—Okay picture for your action program. Played June 16.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—Not a small town picture. Too deep for the majority. Business below average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—Well received by the majority. A picture that can be given honest publicity. Played June 17-18.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE DOOR: Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor—Rotten. Played June 22-23.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Marguerite Churchill, Charles Farrell—Terrible. Story poor. Charlie Ruggles furnished a few laughs. We certainly were ashamed to face our patrons after this one. It is awful; leave it alone. Played June 12-13-14.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris—Quite a refreshing and wholesome picture. Pleased all classes. For once, Genevieve Tobin was given a sympathetic part and acquitted herself admirably. Give her more like it; she will repay you. Played June 15.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

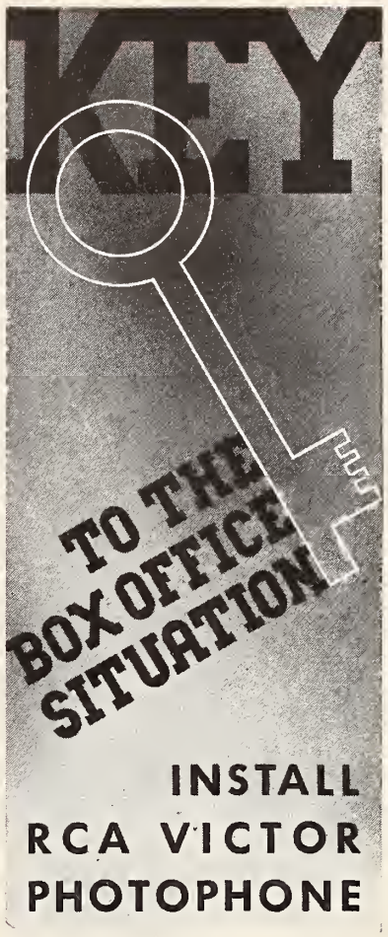
LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—Very good drawing card for the small western town. Paramount has made westerns come up to the standard necessary to compete with other stories. Played June 1-2.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—The average shoot-'em-up western is good only as a small town Saturday draw, but here's one that you can play on any day. It is by far way above the average in western picture entertainment, and because of the well known title and the song it is a very good draw. We did good business with this one. A very good piece of entertainment by Paramount. Played June 15-16.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—What a honey for the small town. Business way above average.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Much better than we expected. Apparently not much money spent on production of this but it is a good show for Friday and Saturday. Business poor. Played May 25-26.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Jack Oakie—Good entertainment. Doesn't set the world on fire, but pleased. Average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.



PRIVATE SCANDAL: Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes—It is slow in starting but has some comedy and will get by.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Buster Crabbe—Will please if you can get them in to see it.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Buster Crabbe—This picture drew the smallest Friday business in our history. Did not please very well.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney—Very entertaining picture that will please. Played June 23.—J. Glenn Cauldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott—A good western but don't quite come up with the usual Zane Grey story. Running time, 55 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft, Adolphe Menjou, Frances Drake—Due to the many conflicting reports from exhibitors and critics on "The Trumpet Blows," and especially due to the fact that it is on the blacklist of the National Decency League and the Council of Churches, it was with considerable apprehension that I finally decided to chance playing this picture, some reviewers condemning it on the grounds of story weakness, theme, production, sex, etc. I am in full sympathy with the efforts now being made by tbe two organizations above mentioned. The brazen attitude of Hollywood in the past is alone responsible for the national awakening of the public mind and for the agitation for reforms in the industry. They have brought it upon themselves but the exhibitor bears the brunt of the penalty, which is sure to come. History is only too full of examples of how far to the other extreme reforms, once initiated, finally go. Here is a fertile field for the politician who has no scruples and glad to approve the opportunity. After carefully reviewing the picture, and making an extra effort to obtain the reaction of my patrons, I can report as follows: It is fair entertainment. Not a single person complained either of its entertainment value or had any criticism for any of the alleged sex angles. Personally, I am unable to see any justification for putting this picture on the blacklist and this difference of opinion is what brings up the possibilty of danger in accepting the censorship of these organizations as final. Exhibitors owe it to the public and to themselves to do all in their power to discourage filtb in pictures, but there is danger in blindly following the rulings of the church organizations or being stampeded into cancelling pictures on the blacklist without personally satisfying themselves that the rulings are justified. Played June 24-25-26.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

QUIGLEY BOOKSHOP
1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Burns and Allen—It has its moments, but not enough story for this group of stars. Okay entertainment, however. Played June 17-18.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene—This was a good western and pleased our customers. If your patrons want a play witb action and fun, book tbis one in. Running time, 58 minutes. Played May 29-30.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—One of the best musicals yet. Just fair drawing power but that certainly was not the fault of the picture Beautiful dancing numbers. We have ball games practically every Sunday to which the town turns out nearly 100 per cent. Naturally the show suffers. Played June 10-11.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—We played this one to the poorest crowd of the year. It was funny but failed to draw. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 2-3.—William Day, Jr., Grand Tbeatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, El Brendel, Pert Kelton—I can't give this much in spite of the good cast. It missed fire with the audience for some reason. Pert Kelton can swing her hips like Mae West and she overdid that part. The thing that was wrong was that they (the cast) seemed to be reaching for laughs that did not come.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Very good. Everyone should like Barrymore in this one. Running time, 69 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding—Quite often producers, feeling that a star's popularity will carry her or him through on a weak picture, place upon their shoulders the burden of putting it across. The result being, they bave not succeeded in strengthening the picture, but bave succeeded in weakening the star. One could name a dozen off hand whose careers have been ruined by this stupidity on the part of the producers. That Ann Harding has not been relegated to the scrap heap of those who "were" is no fault of some short sighted producers and misguided directors. However, in "The Right of Romance" she was given a fairly good vehicle for her talents. Nothing big, mind you, but not a picture to injure the undoubted popularity she still enjoys. Not because of the pictures selected for her but in spite of them. Producers, give this charming lady a chance. She should at least be given a chance to make 'em as good as "The Right of Romance." Played June 22.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katbarine Hepburn—Not as good as "Little Women" at the box-office. Played June 22-23.—Homer Barnwell, Elgin Theatre, Elgin, Ore. General patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katbarine Hepburn—Pleased my patrons, although several complained about the ending. Bellamy was fine in his role. He seems to be gaining in popularity here. We're for him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katherine Hepburn—In spite of tbe fact that Katharine Hepburn is considered the greatest actress on the American screen today, I will have to report that I have as yet only found one single person that liked this picture. Hepburn is not liked in this community. If you could have seen the walkouts that we bad on this picture, no further explanation regarding this star's popularity here would be necessary. People in these small communities like pictures with good clean comedy and lots of action.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Irene Dunne, Constance Cummings, Ralph Bellamy, Kay Johnson—RKO has always a preponderance of dialogue in their women star pictures. They wander around and talk, talk and don't get anywhere. This is one of them. All right for a sophisticated audience but not so good for our class of trade.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown—This picture should go over very good in rural communities as so many scenes in it would be a natural. This picture went over very good with us and our guess is, it would please most any class of movie patrons. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 24-25-26-27.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—A good picture of its kind. It got awful tiresome sitting there listening to this guy talk. Too many snakes to suit the women.—Played June 29-30.—Homer Barnwell, Elgin Theatre, Elgin, Ore. General patronage.

State Rights

BETWEEN FIGHTING MEN: Ken Maynard—Liked better in this one than anything we have had him in. Will please western fans. Running time, 58 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—This is a nice picture of its kind. Better than I expected. Karloff and Lugusi make a good combination and they can act. Running time, seven reels. Played June 29-30.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Okay for this type of show, but has nothing to do with the Edgar Allen Poe story. Played June 30.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Did not go over very good here, not what I would call good entertainment for small town and rural patronage. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 3-4.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Nils Asther—A very interesting picture with a good story. Well acted. Should please 100 per cent. Running time, 67 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore, Bebe Daniels—I have come to the conclusion that it is a difficult matter to find or produce a mass appeal picture that will fit the talents of John Barrymore. Like George Arliss, give him a class picture with a capital C, one that demands acting ability of the highest order, and he will deliver the goods. But after the goods have been delivered to the complete satisfaction of the discriminating few in a small town, you still have 80 per cent unimpressed, or shall we say, impressed unfavorably. Played June 13.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, June Knight—A very good picture with much novelty. A very fine supporting cast opposite Lew Ayres.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GLAMOUR: Paul Lukas—This picture sure has the right name. It's nothing but glamour and as old as Paul Lukas. It is a shame he has never learned to talk plain yet. He has never been any good at my theatre. If he ever learns to talk plain English then he will have no faults.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Roger Pryor—It is about the same as all other program pictures, nothing different. You just sit, look and listen, come out of the theatre, and all you can say, "Well, I got cooled off from your nice cooling system, but nothing in the picture did me any good." Give me a "Back Street" picture. Running time, 67 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Zazu Pitts, Slim Summerville—A hokum comedy. Too silly to be enjoyed by adults. The children liked it. This pair no good here anymore. Business on this way below average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRAIL DRIVE, THE: Ken Maynard—Very good western which pleased, just as all of Maynard's do.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—A good western. Not as good as "Strawberry Roan." Drew above the average. Played June 17-18.—Homer Barnwell, Elgin Theatre, Elgin, Ore. General patronage.

Warner

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Clever, the boy can dance. A good dancer has always been a drawing card in the show business. Played June 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HI, NELLIE: Paul Muni—Played this one on a Saturday midnight and had to turn them away. This picture pleased everyone for they told me so as they came out. It is really top notch entertainment in the nature of a fast high speed newspaper story without a dull moment in it. Warner's new type of trailer on this subject sold the picture for me. Played June 23.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis—

With Kay Francis as a gambler, we like her very much. Drew good and the patrons were all satisfied. Runnning time, 65 minutes.—L. D. Brown, Queen Theatre, Brownwood, Texas. General patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney—Cagney fell down. Not so hot. Played June 15-16.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney—Just a schoolboy picture. Nothing to it, only a farce.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixe Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MODERN HERO, A: Richard Barthelmess—A little old fashioned, but a fair picture. Could have been made a hummer with its circus setting. Everyone likes the circus. Played June 8-9 to a very excellent business.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MODERN HERO, A: Richard Barthelmess—Went over very well. Not the best by any means.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell—It is smart comedy, but did not please.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

UPPER WORLD: Warren William, Mary Astor—This is a very good picture. Played May 18-19 and did a good business on it.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

Shorts

Columbia

ELMER STEPS OUT: Walter Catlett—Those who claim that Columbia cannot make good comedies surely never saw this one. Running time, two reels—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

ELMER STEPS OUT: Walter Catlett—Not so bad. I honestly believe the production of a real good two-reel comedy is vastly more difficult than a six-reel feature. I know I would much prefer to write a story for a six reeler than a two reeler. Now don't get scared, I am not contemplating any such step and producers are not tearing each others' clothes to get me. As I started to say, the comedy is fair.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR TEMPER: Smith and Dale—A fair comedy with a few laughs—J. C. Dart, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Educational

FREEZE-OUT, THE: Moran and Mack—Nothing particularly funny, but as good as the usual Educational comedy.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Fox

CONQUEST OF THE AIR!: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Splendid. All of these furnish thrills and are among the best of short subjects on the market. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine. Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

MGM

A LAD AN' A LAMP: Our Gang—To those who have read "The Arabian Nights" or any mythology, this is an enjoyable little comedy. Personally, I prefer kid comedies like Our Gang and Mickey McGuire to those made by grownups, with the possible exception of the Laurel and Hardy comedies.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

ROAMIN' VANDALS: Musical Comedies—One of the best comedies I showed for many weeks. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

VITAL VICTUALS: Oddities—Very nice work. I have never showed one poor reel of this series. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Eton Boys—Splendid. This is a screen song and one of the best. We have always been well pleased with the whole series. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

RED HOT MAMA: Betty Boop—This is a great cartoon comedy that will please everyone. It is full of good clean entertainment and much better than the average comedy. More time should be given to shorts in order to fill in a poor feature and everything would be better. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

TIGHT ROPE TRICKS: Tom and Jerry—This is a mighty fine cartoon. If you haven't played this series of Tom and Jerry's do so. They're not too old and they're extra good. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WALKING BACK HOME: Blonde and Red Head Series—A good comedy that will make them laugh. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones, Madge Bellamy—Too many flashbacks and not enough suspense fail to help Buck Jones make his serial click. Better luck next time, Buck. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter.—Barton R. McLendon, State Theatre, Idabel, Okla. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Louise Fazenda—This is a very good comedy. Would call it way above the average run of such entertainment. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

NOT THE MARRYING KIND: Sterling Holloway—Very good two reel comedy which is very humorous and seemed to delight my audience.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

HONEYMOON HOTEL: Merrie Melodies—This is a very clever cartoon in color. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MASKS AND MEMORIES: Lillian Roth—A three-reeler at extra dough that is just like the rest of the three reelers—about one reel of entertainment stretched out. Lillian Roth no good in semi-classical music.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

MILD WEST, THE: Broadway Brevities—Only fair. This series of musicals are not up to last year's standard.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—A Broadway Brevity in color. Very pretty and very good. Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

OPERATOR'S OPERA: Donald Novis—Good musical comedy with some excellent dancing numbers. Splendidly staged and acted. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PAUL REVERE, JR.: Gus Shay—Nothing can be said about Warner comedies, except something good. They are all good.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

PLANE CRAZY: Dorothy Lee—Very funny comedy with aeroplanes as the background for the story which uses a Baron Munchausen type of acting to put it over. Running time, 18 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SERVICE STRIPES: Joe Penner—Entertaining. Recording poor and I am afraid they are not going over very good. However, this is the first we have played. Running time, 10 minutes.—Walter Beymer, Lido Theatre, Providence, Ky. Small town patronage.

VINCENT LOPEZ AND HIS BAND: Melody Masters—Another of the one reelers featuring Vincent Lopez and his orchestra playing several popular selections, and a special. The "Stormy Weather" number is very good and that alone is worth the price of the show. Let's have more of these. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WALTER DONALDSON: Pepper Pot—A good musical short that will fit in on any program and be appreciated. Running time, 10 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Universal

LOST SPECIAL, THE: Frank Albertson, Ernie Nevers—This is an old serial that's plenty good. On chapter six and it's holding up nicely. Wish Nevers could do a little better acting. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones, Madge Bellamy—We have run seven episodes of this serial and it seems to please the majority, but we certainly are getting very dark prints of it. Madge Bellamy does not look like she did a few years ago. She isn't nearly as pretty.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

You will want these air conditioning charts to aid you this summer!

AIR CONDITIONING CHARTS

that represent standard practice in air conditioning engineering, adapted for the first time to motion picture theatre use. Originally published in Better Theatres, these charts and their explanations are now made available to theatre managers and technicians in a durable form suited to ready reference. Each chart is readily accessible by itself, while each is accompanied by an explanation that also gives practical advice on how to attain the best atmospheric conditions for any season. These chart sheets therefore apply to operating routine for any time of year, winter or summer. They are contained in a single sheet of card-weight paper measuring 22 inches wide and 17 inches high, so folded according to chart divisions that each readily fits the pocket. Unfolded, the sheet may be tacked on the wall. The folders may be had until the supply is exhausted at 25 cents each. Send payment with order. Use the coupon below.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS VOTE SINGLE BILLS

Ninety Per Cent of Theatres Join in Agreement; New Jersey Allied Launches Fight Against Double Features

Ninety per cent of the motion picture theatres in Greater Cleveland territory are committed to a single feature policy for the remainder of this season and all of the next. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has dropped double features by unanimous agreement and reports say the vast majority of the exhibitors are enthusiastic over the move.

The Cleveland decision did not follow the demands of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America urging drastic local campaigns and severe penalties in new clearance schedules for theatres "guilty" of double featuring. The Cleveland action was instituted some time ago.

Distributors Asked to Help

The single bill policy went into effect Sunday night. Distributors were asked not to serve theatres playing dual bills, to which one major company replied it will continue to serve double feature houses when and as it sees fit. Independent distributors also will serve such houses.

The feeling in Cleveland on single bills is not entirely unanimous, however. There are many who feel that not all the theatres can stand the financial strain of the change of policy. Some doubt the agreement is 100 per cent binding, although legal advice is reported to have indicated the agreement is as binding as a law passed in state or federal legislature. Some exhibitors have expressed the opinion that a test case soon will be made in court.

The agreement, signed by all members of the association, was greeted by the Catholic Universe, Catholic periodical, as being the result of the better films movement. The local Parent-Teacher Association and Mothers' Club also commended the change.

New Jersey Allied Launches Fight

Allied of New Jersey launched its initial attack against double features in that territory, canvassing exhibitors.

In Hollywood, Hal Roach predicted a nationwide cessation of double featuring within the next six months. Mr. Roach said the public was becoming "fed up" with duals and that parents objected because they keep children too long at matinee and early evening sessions.

Further condemnation of double billing came this week from Bernard Natan, head of Pathe Natan, France's largest producer-distributor-exhibitor, who charged that the practice not only is responsible for overproduction in Hollywood, but also is "stupid and wasteful."

"I cannot comprehend such a policy," M. Natan said. "Two features, plus a newsreel, a cartoon and often more, at 15 cents and, in some cases, 10 cents, to me represents an unexplainable business method. Your low prices of theatre admission are amazing as well. I am convinced that overproduction in Hollywood is traceable to the demands made by the double feature market."

Efforts of exhibitors in Grand Rapids, Mich., to combine groups seeking censorship of films into a film guidance council were reported to be meeting with success, except that the groups have taken a definite stand that double features must be eliminated, though most exhibitors favoring single bills.

On the other hand, at least 20 theatres in Milwaukee last week broke away from the agreement to ban double featuring, and theatres in Omaha were going back to the policy.

Mascot Sets Distribution Through 23 Local Exchanges

Mascot Pictures has set national distribution for its 10 features and two specials for the new season, through 23 exchanges. Among them are: Excellent Pictures, Detroit; Far West Exchanges, Los Angeles; Gold Medal, Philadelphia; Hollywood Films, Boston; B. N. Judell, Chicago; A. C. Bromberg, Atlanta; Majestic, Milwaukee; Majestic Film Distributing, New York; Midwest, Kansas City; Monarch Pictures, Pittsburgh; Celebrated Film Exchange, Minneapolis.

Jack Fier, formerly with Consolidated Laboratories, has succeeded Maurice Conn as assistant to Nat Levine, president, on the Coast.

Major Productions Is Authorized to Sell Stock

Registration certificates for Major Film Productions, Inc., Los Angeles, have been submitted to the Federal Trade Commission at Washington. The company was organized in Delaware in May to produce and distribute pictures. It proposes to issue 3,000 shares of six per cent participating preferred stock of $100 par value, the proceeds to be used as working capital, according to the statement to the commission.

The stock is to be sold to Blanchet & Company, New York, the underwriters, at $85 per share. Officers of the film company are: Fred Church, San Fernando, Cal., president; Samuel I. Saunders, Los Angeles, vice-president; William D. DeLong, Los Angeles, secretary-treasurer.

Kansas City Film Outing

The film industry of Kansas City will hold its annual outing July 16 at the Ivanhoe Country Club. The affair is sponsored by the Motion Picture Relief Fund and the Variety Club. A. H. Cole of Paramount is general chairman.

Harry Frillman Dead

Harry Frillman, 63, prominent Ohio theatre executive, died last week at his home in Columbus of a heart attack. Until recently he was affiliated with J. Real Neth, and had been manager of the Cameo theatre in Columbus.

Companies Pushing Final Product Plans

With completion last week of the initial session of Columbia's three regional sales meetings, the final product plans of the major distributors and producers for the new season were made known. The only remaining developments were the announcement by several companies of titles previously not set, and these revolved chiefly around short subject schedules.

While a split in production between east and west of Educational's new season program had not been definitely decided, at least 20 will be made on the Coast by E. H. Allen.

Paramount has given Elliott Nugent a new contract, the actor to do six pictures by September, 1935.

The second and final session of Paramount's regional sales meetings was held in New York Friday, with divisional manager J. J. Unger presiding, assisted by Milt Kussell.

Negotiations have been completed for Robert McGowan to produce and direct 13 one-reel "Variety" shorts for Paramount at the Mack Sennett studios. The group will be made in Technicolor.

Radio has signed Katharine Hepburn to a new two-year contract which calls for her exclusive services. The agreement carries no options and stipulates three pictures annually at a higher salary.

20th Century has five pictures lined up to start when Darryl Zanuck returns from Europe next month. They are "The Mighty Barnum," for Clark Gable and Wallace Beery; "It Had to Happen," Clark Gable and Constance Bennett; "Clive of India," Ronald Colman; "Richelieu," George Arliss, and "Red Cat."

Hitler Film Withdrawn After Germans Protest

Following protests made by Alphonse Karl, German consul in Buffalo, and Herman Schmidt, in behalf of the German-American United Front, the film, "Hitler's Reign of Terror" was withdrawn from the local Hollywood theatre after two showings. Basil Brothers, who had leased the house to Jewel Productions for the showing, closed the theatre after the protests. Al Leonze, Jewel representative in Buffalo, declared the film will be shown at another local house shortly.

The film was also withdrawn in Portland, Ore., after a three-day run on the protest of A. H. Closterman, German consul. It had been booked for seven Pantages houses.

Beahan Joins Goldwyn

Charles Beahan, recently resigned as Columbia associate producer, has joined Samuel Goldwyn as eastern production representative. Handling stories, Mr. Beahan has his headquarters at the New York United Artists office.

Frank Melford, former business manager for Principal Pictures, has been promoted to the post of supervisor and production manager on "The Return of Chandu," for that company.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"INNOCENT BYSTANDERS"

Despite our private convictions, we have refrained from any expression on the current censorship struggle. This department is concerned with the merits or demerits of either side only insofar as the theatre manager and other of the house personnel may be affected.

However, the contemplated closing by Warner Brothers of their Philadelphia houses in answer to what is declared to be a boycott, definitely menaces the jobs of many theatremen, and this action naturally brings us into the light.

Every industry influence must be exerted to prevent so calamitous a step. Now is the time for wise counsel.

Any decision that closes box offices as a gesture of defiance against the forces in favor of censorship will cause untold suffering to hundreds of "innocent bystanders."

In the battle of these powerful groups, any threat of general theatre closing is a destructive weapon that must be outlawed immediately.

A SANE STEP

In line with Round Tabler Touchett's vigorous denunciation of producer-radio cooperation, published on a following page, is a recent Motion Picture Daily story announcing the cancellation of certain broadcasting contracts between stars and sponsors. Producers evidently are not unmindful of the deleterious effects upon theatre grosses caused by participation of stars on various programs. For as a result of the flood of protests from showmen in every part of the country, pressure has been brought to bear upon some of the biggest picture names to discontinue their radio activities.

Tieups between local stations and theatres to plug coming attractions are of value, but the hookup should go no further. The unanimity of exhibitor expression indicates that personal appearances of the players themselves have proven a definite menace to the box office.

Short sighted stars should realize the golden stream that makes possible their fabulous salaries originates only at the theatre ticket window.

SERIOUS OPPOSITION

About this time last year, we spoke of the rapid growth of the summer theatre, sounding a gentle note of warning to showmen in resort spots that such competition was not to be sneezed at. Theatremen were advised to build up their fences in every way possible to guard against the intrusion of this spreading form of hot weather entertainment. A natural hunger for "flesh" shows plus the opportunity of engaging capable actors for little money is a combination that has attracted strong backing in numerous resort sections.

1934 finds a decided increase in the number of June-September stock companies and therefore it behooves managers in towns so affected to apply themselves vigorously in minimizing the box office repercussions of the new opposition.

An added annoyance that raises the temperature on these hot days is the practice of using stars' first initials in marquee advertising where lack of space prevents flashing of full names. Offenders claim long titles make this necessary.

One member suggests stars be numbered and titles coded for this purpose. F'instance, "124 and 37 in Mdr. Pvt. Car," etc. Well, gag or no gag, the idea is more intelligent than those amputated names that mean little in the lights.

KALMINE-ITES REPEAT

How solidly the Quigley project is entrenched among the progressive showmen of the industry is further indicated by the June results which disclose that for the second time since the inception of the Quigley competitions, the Award has been won by a Warner Theatre manager in Harry Kalmine's Pittsburgh division.

R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, is the boy—and happens to be the Big Boy today in Fairmont, West Virginia, where he skippers the Fairmont Theatre. That he crashed through on "20 Million Sweethearts" is yet another feather in the Warner cap.

It is a gratifying record and a deserving one. From the beginning, the Warnerites have been solidly behind the competitions, and more so, since the first plaque was taken down by Ken Grimes, of the Warner Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va.

Division Manager Kalmine has declared himself time and again in favor of the Quigley project, as have Marshall Taylor, district manager of both winning towns, and Joe Feldman, zone ad chief.

Yes, gentlemen, the winning of a Quigley Award means a lot to these Warner theatremen. It means as much to a growing number of showmen in every part of the world.

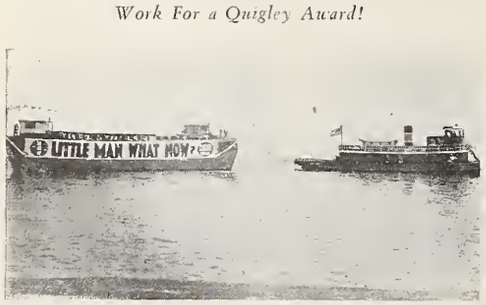
SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Universal Plugs "Little Man" With Bannered Barge

The recent converging of the scores of United States Naval vessels in New York waters brought out thousands of spectators from all over the country who gathered to view the ships making anchorage. Anticipating this tremendous audience, the Universal exploiteers planted a bannered barge in the bay on "Little Man," (see photo) which was towed to and fro in sight of the waiting throngs. Sign measured 100 feet long by 15 high.



Other stunts reported to have clicked included a national broadcast in advance in which many of the scenes from the picture were re-enacted, plus a plug for the date at the New York Radio City Music Hall. General Mills tieup netted windows in every part of the metropolitan district, and department stores went for co-op ads featuring Margaret Sullavan clothes.

Blair's Blotter Plugs "Cool"

Merle R. Blair, Regent Theatre, Cedar Falls, Ia., uses a blotter to tell his patrons about his cooling system. These were distributed to summer school students, banks, post-offices, libraries and business districts. Blotters, a cool yellow, plugged current and coming attractions, while in the lower corners was seen an Eskimo creeping out of his igloo telling the world how cool it is in the Regent.

Deusern Exploits "Villa" With "Mexican Day"

Transforming one of Los Angeles' busiest corners into a Mexican street scene was part of R. J. Deusern's campaign at Loew's State for his showing of "Viva Villa." A plaza setting, portales and hacienda were all featured as a background for the Mexican vendors and musicians who were used for atmospheric purposes.

A studio screening was held for the Mexican Consul and his attaches and later their cooperation was enlisted in connection with "Mexico Day," so named by the Chamber of Commerce. Chamber sent out bulletins to its membership mentioning the event and picture. A further tie-up was made with the Rotary Club which tendered luncheon to the Consul and also plugged the date.

Letter received from the late Gov. Rolph offering his approval of "Mexico Day" activities and commenting on the engagement at the State Theatre was blown up, photostatic copies made and displayed in stores featuring Mexican merchandise.

Prudence Penny home economics editor of one of the local papers used the favorite Mexican recipes of Carillo in connection with Mexican tableware art in a tie-up with one of the department stores.

Orlove Promotes One Sheets To Plug Fight Pictures

Louis Orlove made a neat tieup with the Wisconsin News to publicize his showing of the Baer-Carnera pictures at the Uptown, Milwaukee, by promoting the newspaper for photographic one sheets containing various shots of the highlights of the battle. Name of theatre and dates were bannered in red across top of sheets, posted all over town and distributed at theatre.

Costless heralds were also put out by Louie on this showing and other coming pictures, a nearby restaurant paying the entire cost in return for an ad on back page, copy tieing in the current bill.

Jax Showmen Step For Serial Opening

In cooperation with Manager M. C. Moore, ad chief Walter Golden, Riverside Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. and recent Quigley Award winner, worked out a corking advance campaign on the serial "Fighting With Kit Carson," reporting this drive as being an excellent stimulator for business.

Two weeks ahead, a set piece was planted in the lobby representing a miniature stage with a scene depicting some of the action. Background showed a full illuminated moon with figures of Kit Carson and Indians in silhouette. Cutout letters at bottom covered with sign muslin and illuminated with lighting from behind hooked to a flasher spelled out the title.

On Saturday before opening, announcement was made from the stage that first thousand boys and girls on hand would receive free prizes. These, comprising cameras, scout knives, cowboy handkerchiefs, pocket compasses, etc., were displayed in lobby and were obtained at a low cost. Walter reports they were snapped up on the first day of the showing.

A free matinee on the second day of the showing received cooperation from school heads and newspapers especially since it was tied up with a prize questionnaire on various incidents in the life of the famous scout. This caused the youngsters to do some research work with neighborhood libraries reporting increased interest in books having to do with Carson. The free show was held to build up interest in the succeeding chapters of the serial and over 5,000 youngsters were reported to have attended.

An excellent bally also proved effective (see photo), the entire outfit being taken to all local schools and also participating in a safety parade that covered the downtown district during the busiest hours of the day.

The success of the campaign was indicated by the fact that the first chapter of the serial had to be repeated due to many requests from both adults and youngsters who had missed the opening showings.

Loew's Grand Railroad Lobby

Promotes Uniforms In Railroad Tieup

The boys at Loew's Grand, Atlanta, went completely "railroad" on their drive to put over "Murder in the Private Car," with the lobby transformed into a terminal, and the theatre personnel becoming railroad men under the general supervision of "Train Master" Lionel H. Keene, division manager.

The accompanying photo shows some of the boys in uniform, in front of the observation car setpiece created by Artist Sid Smith. The outfits cost the theatre nothing, as the clothes and general railroad equipment were supplied by the various roads.

A general plug for the theatre was carried out overhead in another setpiece further carrying out the train idea. The various tracks indicated coming attractions as well as the current attraction being plugged. Tied into the "vacation" drive was other cool copy on panels alongside.

What also created much interest was an exact sample of the long railroad ticket, distributed in regular railroad envelopes containing no advertising. The tickets bore a lot of ace catch copy on the date, and carried plugs for coming attractions. The envelopes for this were also promoted, and the gag was reported to have been sure fire.

Also to be noted in the display is the clock in the center supplied by Postal. Another promotion, of course, which is right in line with what Keene and his gang dig up to put over their attractions.

O'Brien Sponsors Medico Co-op Page

An unusual co-op page, carrying ads by physicians, pharmacists, etc., was secured by Round Tabler George O'Brien (Uncle O'Bie) for his date on "Men in White" at the Miller, Woodstock, Ill. Half the space was devoted to theatre copy, lauding doctors, and carrying endorsement of picture by local professional men. A two line streamer across top of page read, "Your doctors are honorable men, guardians of life with good reputation," further stating that they were not of the fly-by-night variety.

"Uncle O'Bie" has begun a series of "Opportunity Nights" which will run for ten weeks. Cash prizes totaling $270 and a chance to enter vaudeville are offered, weekly prizes to be awarded audience voting at each preliminary. There will be eight preliminary contests, at completion of which 16 winners will be chosen by audience and these will compete in finals.

QUIGLEY AWARD FOR JUNE WON BY KNIGHT

Manager of Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, West Virginia, Clicks with Campaign on "20 Million Sweethearts"

by A-MIKE VOGEL

West Virginia again wins a Quigley Award!

The Big Prize for June—the sixth Quigley plaque, by the majority vote of the judges, Messrs. J. R. Grainger, Chas. E. McCarthy and Herschel Stuart, is awarded to Manager R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., for his campaign on "20 Million Sweethearts."

Unique in the competition is the fact that for the first time campaigns on the same picture have copped, for in May, Curtis and Finlay of Montreal also won on "Sweethearts."

And of further interest is that for the second time West Virginia is in the winning column, Ken Grimes, of Morgantown, in that state, finishing up front in January. It's also a second time for Warner Theatres, a second time for Harry Kalmine's Pittsburgh division, and a second time for Marshall Taylor's West Virginia district, as both Knight and Grimes work under these popular leaders.

That's a record to take plenty of topping!

Fuzzy put on a grand piece of work, and details of his campaign will be carried in the next issue, as will be the efforts of the two First Mention winners.

The first of these is the famous team of Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay, Palace Theatre, Montreal, who clicked with "Viva Villa," and Manager L. J. Williams, Coliseum Theatre, San Francisco, who nearly "spread eagled" the field with a thumping entry on a third run of "It Happened One Night." Williams' drive was outstanding.

KEN FINLAY, Exploiteer

L. J. WILLIAMS, Manager
Coliseum, San Francisco, Cal.

In fact, these first three campaigns finished so close that it took plenty of voting by the judges to place them in the order mentioned. It was a neck-and-neck drive to the tape, and although the best campaign undoubtedly won, it was only decided so by a whisker, so to speak.

Twelve "Honorable Mentions" were awarded for June, names, designations and locations appearing in the box below, and in keeping with the usual Awards procedure, certificates in recognition of these accomplishments have been forwarded to the winners, as well as the "First Mention" certificates to Curtis, Finlay and Williams.

Curtis and Finlay are accorded a special bow for finishing in the money in every month of the Awards competition, this being the sixth consecutive time they have been chosen either for a Quigley Award, First or Honorable Mention. A splendid record, indeed, and they are to be congratulated heartily.

Another Canadian showman also is in the June winning column—Walter F. Davis, Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, crashing through for an "Honorable." Other new names appear in the "Honorable" column, as well as a number of other theatremen who have clicked before.

Stalcup Constructs P.A. System for Street Bally

From Tyler, Texas, comes the campaign of A. C. Stalcup at the Arcadia Theatre for his showing of "Murder at the Vanities" and more particularly his street bally, which was a new Ford truck, secured without cost except for the gas and the usual courtesies.

Stalcup secured an Onan light plant so that the power could be used for the public address system and to illuminate the display (see photo). He placed a loud speaker on each side of the float; the sound equipment being in the cab with the driver. For the bally "A. C." used the electrical transcription of the tunes and the loud speaker for his "sales talk."

The large silk hat seen at center of display was made by his sign artist out of compo board and the girls were cutouts from the 40x60 art panels. Lobby theme was carried out with the hats and smaller cut-out of the girls.

Myers Doubles For Vacationing McManus

Doubling for Johnny McManus away on vacation, Taylor Myers, assistant at the Midland, Kansas City, Mo., effectively worked out a campaign on "Operator 13" that clicked in the usual manner of those in that sector. Before John left, he promoted a loan of some of the original costumes used in the making of the picture and with these Myers was able to crash two of the best windows in town. Another good merchandise tieup was a plug on cotton dresses built up around Marion Davies and Jean Parker.

Previous to this date, these Midland showmen negotiated a traffic stopping street parade of local Liberty Magazine carriers who formed at their headquarters and proceeded to the theatre, carrying theatre banners plugging "Sadie McKee." Police motorcyclists escorted the paraders.

Fashion Beauty Show Clicks for Lawrence

A combination fashion revue and beauty contest with a Hollywood trip as the main prize has been reported by Manager H. L. Lawrence, Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., as a helpful summer business stimulator. The show was put on one night and the winner was selected by the local women's clubs, thus insuring the participation of the better class of entrants.

The local prize was a trip to Nashville where winner appeared in an elimination competition at the Princess Theatre against representatives from other towns in the Crescent Amusement Co. circuit, the coast trip given to the winner of the Nashville contest.

For his fashion revue, Lawrence obtained the cooperation of his leading women's stores which furnished all the necessary clothes for the show. A 15-piece orchestra was spotted on a raised platform, center stage, in front of a gold cyc. Models descended flight of stairs, crossed stage to raised turn-table and exhibited gowns under colored spots.

To insure the strictest impartiality, judges were secured from other towns and interest was carried over to the second night when the name of the winner was divulged with loving cup presented to the fortunate young lady by band leader Barney Rapp, who was appearing at the theatre. Lawrence reports very satisfactory business, the event being built up with heralds, merchants' ads, etc., the publicity topped by picture of the local winner in Memphis newspapers, as well as local daily.

Bamberger Stresses Lobby Flash for "Rothschild"

Through a tie-up with the Hotel Lexington in New York, cards were mailed from the city to Herman's mailing list with a picture of the hostelry and a message to the recipient urging attendance at the showing of "Rothschild" when it reached Springfield. Card had a girl's name signed to it for the men patrons and a man's name on the ladies' cards.

A cooperative ad with an electric refrigerator company netted ads with copy to the effect that "The House of Rothschild" was great, but it would have been even more comfortable with a new refrigerator. Still another merchant tie-up with a ladies' toggery resulted in a display of adaptations of the gowns worn by Loretta Young in the picture, and a local beauty shop plugged the "Julie" coiffure.

Scholer Ties Phone Company on "Murder"

J. J. Scholer at the Ohio in Sandusky, Ohio, tied up with the telephone company for his showing of "Murder at the Vanities" by having the telly people install a switchboard in the window of one of the leading restaurants with phone girls at the board (see photo). Loud speaker outside window enabled passersby to hear girl answer calls saying "What is it, Madam—a murder did you say? Just a moment, I'll give you Police Headquarters. What is it you wish to know—Where 'Murder at the Vanities' is playing? It's playing at the," etc., etc. Girl plugged the restaurant and food too.

Sunday newspapers carried special Earl Carroll beauties' story and two column art cut and another merchant tie-up netted Joe an entire cosmetic window display with a miniature stage setting of the chorines. Other merchants cooperating were a millinery shop, hosiery and haberdasher.

Paper Runs Shearer Life Story on "Riptide"

With the aid of M-G-M exploiteer Hal Elias, Manager Frank Burhans, Paramount, Oakland, Cal., did a neat job of selling "Riptide" through strong local sources, the newspaper publicity topped by a Shearer life story feature announced with a full page one banner line.

The favorite recipes of the star were secured and introduced at a session of cooking schools sponsored by another local newspaper. Sizeable promotional display ads called attention to Shearer's favored dishes.

Leading department store went for the fashion end with newspaper ads, window displays and prominent showings of reproduced styles and theatre ad (see photo), store style consultant recommending these for cruise purposes. Lux and Coca Cola tieups were effected and another leading women's store purchased autographed Shearer style stills and announced these as giveaways over the merchants' radio program.

Caldwell Dresses Staff For "Villa" Showing

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, has been pretty busy with his various campaigns some of the highlights of which he forwards to us. On "Viva Villa," Wally dressed his service staff as "American Mexicans" (see photo) with sashes around their waists. Staff wore this outfit for a week before opening.

On "Operator 13" Wally used an invisible electric sign that was placed behind the picture sheet and worked on dimmers. This was brought up at start of advance trailer and dimmed out at the finish. A tie-up with a jeweler resulted in a window with stills mounted in silver frames and placed in conspicuous spots. Orchestrations of song hits from the picture were played over broadcasting stations and in the city's night clubs.

For "Hollywood Party" the one sheet cards were mounted back to back and placed on uprights in all downtown parking lots. A seven foot shadow box containing assorted tinted scene stills was placed in the foyer one week in advance. A three inch ad and story in hotel guest guide was placed in all residential hotels, while 24-inch cut-out letters reading "Hollywood Party" was mounted atop marquee current with showing.

Louis Builds Art Front For Old Beery Feature

The first run engagement of "Viva Villa" proved so successful in Dallas, Texas, that Louis Charninsky, of the Capitol Theatre, capitalized further on the popularity of Wallace Beery by digging up an old copy of the four-year-old feature, "Billy the Kid," in which that star appeared, and playing it to, as he reports, capacity business.

As there were no stills nor paper nor any other accessories at the local film exchanges, Louis and his staff built up one of those typical Capitol fronts (see photo) in which art work predominated. That's Louie on the left and on the other side of the set piece appears the costumed doorman.

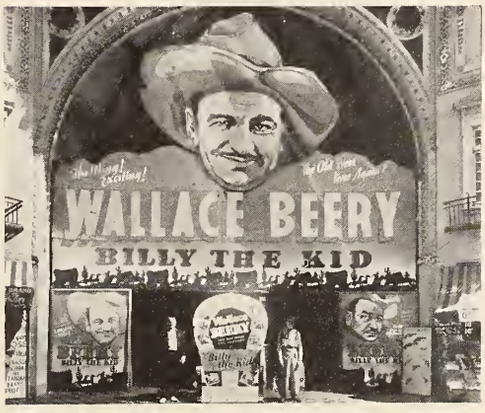
Taylor Stages Revolution As Advance on "Villa"

That "Viva Villa" exploitation is proving itself a natural down in the border country with Bill Taylor also going strongly "Mex" on his campaign at Loew's State. Houston, Texas. Bill managed to get away with a traffic stopping street riot on opening day by staging what he refers to as a "revolution" in the downtown district. Led by a local double for Wallace Beery in costume, a band of mounted Mexicans worked the business section, carrying theatre banners and shooting blank cartridges. Stirred up plenty of excitement and Bill states that he was lucky not being grabbed off by the local gendarmes.

Special "Villa" menu was served at leading Mexican restaurant, waiters and orchestra dressed in character and theatre ad carried atop restaurant sign. Unusual theatre front gathered admiring throngs, an authentic adobe hut covering the entire opening. Every detail was worked out including the protruding rafters and imitation red tile roof. Mexican shawls and rugs were included with other unusual accessories that helped to make the flash the talk of the town.



Taylor rounded up local Mexican officer who had fought with Villa and landed feature story on this angle. Another slant that clicked for a four column cut was an interview with an old Mexican soldier reported to be over 100 years of age who was brought to the theatre to see the picture.

Rosenfield Uses "Little Man" Script for Display

Once more we hear from Joe Rosenfield, now advertising director of the John Hamrick theatres in Seattle, Wash., where he put over his "Little Man, What Now," campaign by securing the original script from the Universal Studios and using it in the window of one of the largest stationery and book stores. The idea was to compare script with original novel, both of which mounted on an easel, reading "from book to script—from script to screen." The display created plenty of attention. Every book store and lending library was furnished with display cards and book marks.

Taking advantage of the picture's woman appeal Joe also effected a tie-up with a local florist to feature a flower show in the lobby of theatre part of which is shown in accompanying photo. Florist also carried photo of display in store window. Special easels were placed in lobbies of hotels, with "Little Man" copy, and a large banner was placed on a four story garage located one block from theatre.

A lobby flash designed by Rosenfield was a large stand-out replica of the book mounted on corner frames of lobby with cut-out heads of Sullavan and Montgomery pasted on the pages. A novelty trailer consisted of a flashing one frame with a large question mark followed by title "Little Man, what Now?" This, run at the end of the feature, newsreel and shorts Joe says proved very effective.

Boucher Lands Page One On July 4th Show

Details of the first July 4th campaign come to our notice from Hagerstown, Md., where City Manager Frank Boucher tied in with his Kiwanis Club for an Independence Day children's parade which formed at the city park and ended at the Maryland Theatre where Frank put on a free show for the youngsters. Newspapers broke the story on page one and Boucher was voted resolutions of thanks for aiding in making the Fourth safe and sane locally.

For "Dr. Monica," dated in at this time, Frank received quite a bit of return from the distribution of the story booklets gotten up by the home office. These are profusely illustrated with enough copy to provoke further interest in the attraction and were distributed by Boucher at the theatre, house-to-house, etc.

Helson Engages Hypnotist For "Death Takes Holiday"

R. S. Helson, Hub Theatre, Rochelle, Ill. on the day before opening of "Death Takes a Holiday" had a local hypnotist put a man to sleep on the stage and then placed him in a casket that was brought out to the lobby (see photo) and left there during entire showing of picture. Last day, the casket was again brought to stage and the man "emerged" after being restored.

Helson reports the display created tremendous interest and while there were plenty who were skeptical, the stunt worked so that none were sure about it. Actually, the fellow was supposed to have "slept" 49 hours. Breaks were gotten in all papers including front page stories and cuts, and banners and heralds were distributed.

FAN MAGAZINE DEBATE CONTINUES

M. C. MOORE, Manager

Riverside, Jacksonville, Fla.

. . . I feel that fan magazines are a decided help to selling motion pictures, for two reasons. First is that they make a ready-made audience for the picture if the picture is good and has merit; and second, that they make the new stars much easier to sell the public by the exhibitor.

We will all have to admit one fact, that new stars will have to be brought out now as the older stars, though still much more popular, are becoming harder and harder to cast in vehicles suited to their individual abilities. . . . There are only certain types of story in which Will Rogers, Lionel Barrymore, Marie Dressler, Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell and others of equal drawing power can work in and sooner or later they will naturally run their cycle and become of no more use to the producer or exhibitor.

Therefore, it becomes the duty of the producer to discover new stars that will gradually take the place of our old favorites, and in exploiting these new stars the movie magazines are worth their weight in gold. . . . and naturally save the exhibitor lots of money in exploiting these stars and stories.

I cite as proof the case of Anna Sten in "Nana." We had a ready made audience in part through the efforts of the producers and the fan magazines to make this star popular. . . . . If Anna Sten had never been written up by the magazines we would have had a new star who was entirely unknown to the general public, and we would have been faced with the job of selling her to the public ourselves and this would have resulted in a great loss of time in selling her to the public, and this loss of time would have naturally cost us plenty at the old box office.

Wants Magazine Publicity

I will cite you another angle to further prove my contention, which is this. We have played lots of pictures made by small companies with stars who were unknown and who never had any fan magazine tieups or articles or write-ups, and in every case we had an almost impossible job to sell the pictures to the public. . . . They seem unable to believe that the picture or star is worth seeing on account of their not being familiar with either.

I will cite you still another example. You know the major companies do exploit their pictures through the pages of the Motion Picture Herald and this makes us exhibitors anxious to date and play these pictures, for we feel that if the picture is big enough for the company to spend money to advertise it in your paper, we naturally feel that it is big enough for us to play as soon as possible. . . . So if we fall for highly advertised pictures, isn't it only natural to feel that the public will fall 10 times harder than we do?

Another point is this, that the public is inclined to believe what the magazines say about a star and story or picture is true . . . as they pay their good money for these magazines and are inclined to believe what they read in them. I will close this article by saying that I personally feel that there should be close cooperation between the magazine editors and the press agents and producers in order to give the public the truth and keep their magazines free from any paid exploitation which is untrue. Also to work for the entire industry, for without stars and pictures there would be no fan magazines.

It is the duty of each to cooperate with the other and keep faith with the public and therefore promote stars and pictures that are good and let the bad suffer, but never deceive the public regardless of whom it hurts, as an exhibitor who is successful has to keep faith and always truthfully advertise his theatre and attractions.

THE ARGUMENT STILL RAGES

Quite a party, isn't it? The boys on both sides of the question are stating their opinions lucidly and forcefully. Last week, we heard from Earle Holden and John McManus, and other active members join the fray on this page.

More to come next week, and we hope you are enjoying this Round Table discussion. A heap of managers say they are. —MIKE

LOUIS LAMM, Manager

Capitol, Elyria, Ohio

I have carefully read the article written by my fellow manager, Charles S. Bassin, which is very interesting to say the least. I fully agree that the adverse criticisms printed in fan magazines often, if not invariably, make a large number of patrons stay away from seeing a certain picture. Any seasoned manager of a motion picture theatre knows that we cannot satisfy 100 per cent of our patrons, and if we do satisfy 85 per cent of those that "lay their money on the line," we should feel well repaid for our efforts.

I disagree with that portion of the article pertaining to a direct tieup with the fan magazines to increase their circulation through direct cooperation with the theatres.

Speaking from my standpoint of a small town theatre manager, I try to sell my attractions to my patrons in a manner that will create interest and desire to see my show, always avoiding overselling and never to misrepresent. If I have the confidence of my patrons (and the intelligent theatregoer of today knows that not all pictures are 100 per cent), then I have nothing to fear what the fan magazines may write, for or against any forthcoming attraction.

ROY PRYTZ, Manager

Granada, Duluth, Minn.

To Mr. Bassin's argument on Fan Magazines, I would answer "Yes" and "No."

By "Yes" I mean that inasmuch as the magazines undoubtedly are here to stay and with the proper cooperation can be used to the advantage of the motion picture industry rather than the detriment, it would be well to analyze the situation thoroughly and do as Mr. Bassin suggested, cooperate with the publishers rather than antagonize them.

The more a star, a story or a title is publicized the more interest should be aroused in the public mind relative to such star, story or title and, if properly done, to my mind, stimulates the desire to see the play enacted by the particular stars thus publicized.

The matter of the fan magazines classifying the quality of pictures based on one particular individual's criticism is a point open for much discussion. No one person can judge the possibilities of any picture and undoubtedly a number of very excellent pictures have been ruined at the box office by such individual criticism.

Says Critics Govern Pictures

Personally I have watched the change in the motion picture business carefully in regard to the causes of the success and failure of a picture. The time was when word of mouth advertising such as Mrs. Jones told Mrs. Smith that such and such a picture at such and such a theatre was a splendid show and advised Mrs. Smith to go and see it. This conversation Mrs. Smith told Mrs. Brown and so on down the line. But today, and I believe principally through the fan magazine, the majority of the public are governed as to the merit of a picture by what the critics say about it. Therefore, as I said before, this particular angle of the fan magazine is open for a lot of discussion.

By "No" I mean that when a fan magazine publishes the story of a mystery picture divulging the climax I believe it to be detrimental to the theatres' interest. Also, when a fan magazine goes into the private details of how a picture is made, how a particular scene is faked, taking away the element of curiosity and placing the minds of the public more in the train of criticism rather than the plain thorough enjoyment of attending the theatre solely for the entertainment.

Favors Cooperation

I believe that all these differences could be ironed out with the proper cooperation between the producers and the publishers to the advantage of every one concerned if some attention were given to the matter rather than let it run wild and haphazard. By doing so it would obliterate any possibility of the patron becoming a motion picture magazine fan only, but rather would stimulate their interest in the motion pictures in such a way that reading the magazine stories would create a desire to see the pictures on the screen.

Touchett Against Sunday Broadcasts

DEAR MIKE:

I recently received a letter which riled me no end. A certain film company wrote me that on the forthcoming Sunday evening, at 8:15 P. M., a dramatization of a certain picture would be broadcast over the air and asked that I cooperate by spreading the news. In other words, I should tell my patrons to stay home on Sunday night and listen to the radio.

Some time ago I was the witness of a legit fireside drama—it went like this:

Time—6:45 on a Sunday evening.

Place—An average home.

Players—Husband and Wife.

Wife: "Come on George, I want to see that James Dunn picture at the Rio tonight."

Hubby: "Nothing doing Ann, I like Ernie Bantor better."

Wife: "All right. Where is he playing?"

Hubby: "Right here, kid, on the radio at eight bells and he's going to give us some of the best laughs from his new picture so 'n so."

So Ann and George, two good customers, took off their shoes and stayed home. Maybe an exhibitor told them about that broadcast; anyhow, it wasn't me.

Sunday night is the big night in towns like mine and if these broadcasts are to do us some good they should be made on any night but this one. I'm one of the best old cooperators in the world, but don't believe in suicide.—V. TOUCHETT, FOND DU LAC THEATRE, FOND DU LAC, WISCONSIN.

Above is letter referred to on editorial page of this and last week's Round Table section, in which members were invited to speak up regarding radio broadcasting.

Breaks Society Columns

Sam Clark, Warner Bros. exploiteer in Chicago, got loads of space in the local society columns with his special society preview on Warner's "Dr. Monica" and "Madame Du Barry." In putting over this stunt, Clark invited all the leading society folk and editors in the city for the screenings which took place in the Warner Bros. building. Following the screenings, luncheon was served to the guests.

SOME POINTERS ON HERALDS

From Don Jacocks', New Jersey Warner Theatre zone managers' manual, some meaty suggestions on promoting free heralds in which managers are advised to take advantage of merchant contact for the purpose of having stores pay costs of printing herald by dividing advertising space and theatre distributing.

By using the argument that theatrical advertising is news and that by being tied into it the merchant secures much more advertising attention, managers in this division have even promoted their contacts for the distribution as well as the cost of heralds. Jacocks further advises that where tieups are difficult to make, the incorporation of a contest for passes can be added to the selling argument for definite results.

Tieups with stores are also advised whereby heralds will be inserted in packages and also included in the stores' monthly mail. Distribution of heralds to automobiles at prominent traffic stops is strongly recommended.

Garry Lassman Promotes Mex Exhibit on "Villa"

Garry Lassman, just about turned Utica, N. Y. into a young Mexico when he played "Viva Villa" at the Avon Theatre there. A week before opening Garry promoted a Mexican exhibit in the lobby which created plenty of comment and a prominent merchant displayed Mexican jewelry with stills.

Giant heads of Beery hung from chandeliers in lobby and foyer two weeks in advance, while a seven foot hand-drawn display of "Villa" stood in the foyer. Six sheet bally car toured neighboring towns, milk bottle hangers were used plentifully and ballyhoo man wearing Mexican garb toured through shopping districts day before opening.

Conners Host To Farm Boys

For his opening of "As the Earth Turns," Ray Conners, Liberty, Malvern, Ark. invited 75 members of the County Chapter of the Future Farmers of America as guests of the theatre. Among the guests who came from remote parts of the county, were farmer boys who it is reported had never seen a motion picture. Stunt brought theatre plenty of publicity and good-will.

Melnicker Uses Teletype Machines For "Rothschild"

Ed Melnicker, Loew's Grand Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., cooperated with Western Union when "House of Rothschild" played his house, by placing two simplex machines in the lobby with two girls typing messages plugging picture which were distributed to patrons leaving theatre. Over six hundred messages were distributed daily and fifteen jumbo blanks and scene stills were placed in various Western Union windows announcing opening.

Two tea tie-ups resulted in coverage through window streamers in grocery stores. A florist tie-up was the means of securing free roses which were given to each lady on opening night. Tags attached to flowers suggested that patrons tell their friends to see the engagement.

A special showing was arranged for rabbis that netted additional publicity through papers and sermons. Bus terminals and busses carried special cards and streamers and postcards were sent out to the Better Film Club, PTAs and clubs and churches. A soap tie-up gained further attention in all local hotels because of stickers pasted to each bar of soap in rooms.

Larson Celebrates House Birthday with Free Show

H. A. Larson, Majestic Theatre, Oakland, Neb., forwards us a neat three by six leaflet announcing his theatre's twentieth anniversary, the front used to invite his patrons to a free show and receive an American Beauty by way of celebration.

Center pages gave a brief resume of the history of motion pictures in Oakland and a story on the current attraction. Reverse side carried just the heads and names of the four outstanding stars. Leaflet was written in a breezy, intimate fashion and doubtless was a fine good-will builder.

Tucker Promotes Paper Fox Six-Day Tieup

Manager S. B. Tucker of the Byrd Theatre, Richmond, Va., discovered an old time retired showman locally resident who had trouped with the original Barnum circus. Tucker interested one of his papers in a feature story by the ex-showman which was tied in to the date on "Wild Cargo."

The want ad tieup was given a little different twist by this showman as in addition to names scattered through the want page, newspaper ran series of promotional display ads in which were included a number of "thrill" stories depicting actual experiences of Frank Buck in making the picture. The tieup netted 40 inches daily for six days without of course any cost to the theatre.

For the first time, the public library allowed an exhibit of the picture, and with the judicious use of single passes to teachers Tucker was able to have the date announced in classes. Other effective hookups were with Western Union, Dodge autos and Italian Steamship line.

Unusual also was the lobby display which incorporated the exhibition of live fish and baby alligators in aquarium and in lobby fountain. Palm trees and ferns were used profusely as a background for shadow boxes in which were planted cutout figures of Frank Buck and various of the animals shown in the picture.

Greenberg Exploits Local Showing Of "Miss 1934"

Manager Ben Greenberg of the Stadium, Woonsocket, R. I., hooked in very well to the "Miss Fashions of 1934" contest arranged by ad chief Tod Browning, of the M. & P. Circuit. The winner was met at the station by an official car, a bannered Cadillac limousine and driver promoted by Ben with a special police escort.

Stops were made at a number of leading shops, where "Miss Fashion" modeled and demonstrated newest styles in merchandise. The same procedure was followed for the three days in which she appeared locally and on the opening day of the picture the winner in evening dress made her bow in the lobby of the theatre.

Distributes Programs Via Dry Cleaner Tieup

Besides distributing his programs thoroughly in the city and surrounding towns, Frank Shaffer effected a tieup with a dry cleaner which resulted in programs being stuffed in every package for "Murder at the Vanities" at Warner's Virginia, Harrisonburg, Va. Music store tieup was made and news flashes were posted prominently in hotels, restaurants, bus terminals, etc. Newspapers went for the Earl Carroll picture story, "Why I Pick the Most Beautiful Girls in the World."

On "Harold Teen," Frank tied up with one of his stores for a Hal Le Roy hat display. All soda shops featured a special "Teen" sundae and merchants cooperated on the imprinted paper bag lucky number stunt, in which bags bore numbers with passes given to those holding bags with corresponding numbers displayed in merchants' windows, reported to have brought returns.

"HIGH TIME FOR ACTION"

SUGGESTS PRODUCERS MEET WITH LEGION

To the Editor of the Herald:

In view of recent events and the step that is being taken by millions of potential show customers signing the Legion of Decency pledge, it is high time that drastic and sudden action be taken by the producers to really make clean pictures. Not only will the producer suffer, but the exhibitor, through no fault of his own, will be the one to pay and pay. And how can any exhibitor stand any further hardships with admission taxes, drought and other multiple evils staring him in the face. It is more than we can endure. We will be forced to close our doors.

Now here is my plan. Right now the movies are on the front page of every newspaper. Now, while we are on the front page of the newspapers let's get this question settled. Have the producers actually meet and discuss the question with the originators of the Legion of Decency and other similar organizations telling the public to stay away from the movies. We would have them telling the public to attend the movies. Any one can visualize what this would mean. It would be a boon to every box-office in the country. It would bring people to the theatre who had never gone before. It would mean that instead of condemnation we would receive praise.

But, now, while this question is before the public, is the time for sudden and drastic action. We cannot wait until this problem becomes acute (and it is acute in some situations already). We must settle it at once. I believe that I voice the opinion of many exhibitors, and I earnestly urge you to help us in this situation.—L. A. Mercier, Palace Theatre, Frederickstown, Mo.

WHY THIS LETHARGY, EXHIBITORS?

To the Editor of the Herald:

As has been pointed out before, this twelve dollar annual assessment of the film code is so utterly wrong, so absolutely devoid of anything like fairness to the small town exhibitor in every respect, so inconsistent and arbitrary, so many hundreds of times out of line with assessments on larger theatres, without even the slightest vestige of an explanation why this inequality is allowed to exist, that this writer is led to wonder why exhibitors in small towns do not rise in greater numbers to inquire the whyfor. Perhaps you have been wiser than I have, and have refused to pay this assessment and let them do the worrying. In fact, I can see no chance (nor can any other reasonable man) for them to make their threats good to withhold film service unless we comply, so long as this discrepancy exists.

Up to date I have heard no words spoken nor have I seen any written, that even attempt to explain this apparent injustice.

Remember, brother exhibitors, the question involved is not one of $12.00; it goes far deeper than that. It is a question of equal rights, which does not mean unequal obligations.

Long before Old Glory existed, except as it lived in the hearts of those heroic men and women who gave it birth and died in its defense, this same question arose, was met and solved in such a manner that you and I can say with pardonable pride we are American citizens.

Whatever individual or group of individuals seeks to give to some unequal privileges and impose on others unequal obligations is guilty of seeking to violate the basic principles of our National Government. Any person or persons, vested with power, who uses that power to favor one class at the expense of another class is giving the lie and offering a deliberate insult to every star and stripe of our glorious National Emblem.

Into the film code's hands has been given the power to do great work effectively and small things graciously.

I do not wish to seem disloyal, or introduce an element of discord where harmony should prevail, but I do question and will continue to question the moral right of any board to promulgate any such rules as are now in force with regard to code assessments.

Perhaps, like Lincoln at Gettysburg, I might say, "The public will little heed or long remember the words that are spoken here." But right is right and wrong is wrong and I'm only asking the board to explain why that that now seems so wrong is really right.

Speaking for myself, just so long as the Herald gives me space to write on this question, just that long will I continue to give my views which are based on common sense. When the film code board, through the same medium, shows or even attempts to show that their action has the same basis, I will be satisfied that their errors in this respect were committed with the best of intentions. "Hell is paved with good intentions." Are you telling us to go there to look for yours? Or are you telling us to go there on general principles or lack of principles? Or are you not caring where in hell we do go?

To the Film Code Board:

Oh great in action, and in councils wise,
Be kind and open this poor mortal's eyes.

—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Film row was virtually deserted last Wednesday when every one who could get away hied out to Olympia Fields for the third annual golf tournament of the Chicago Warner Club. The affair was a huge success, with dinner, dancing, cards and games for those who didn't play golf. Ted Turrell, manager of the Grove, led the golfing fraternity, turning in a low score of 42-37-79. Other prizes were won by R. M. Thompson, 83; Harvey Kemp, 89; William Boardman, 89; N. A. Greune, 90, and Jack Rose, 91. Bob Farrell captured booby prize with 146. First prize in the ladies' division went to Mrs. James Chrissis; second, to Rose Sweeney, with E. Benseon third. Mrs. William O'Connell, wife of the manager of the Oakland Square, shot a whiz-bang 160 for nine holes. Arrangements were handled by Ben Cohn, president of the Warner Club, and L. F. Gran, Charles Ryan, Eddie Grossman and James E. Coston, directors.

Exchange Men May Get Film Board Positions

Exchange managers in key cities may take over the work of Film Boards of Trade in event those organizations are abandoned next season.

Under this proposal, which has been advanced in several distribution quarters, no Film Board offices would be maintained, but the branch managers of member companies of the MPPDA would meet regularly to dispose of the more significant and urgent work formerly handled by the Film Boards.

Petersen & Poulsen Film Patents Are Sold

Swedish rights covering the Petersen & Poulsen sound film patents have been sold to the Swedish Nordisk Tone Film Co., according to a report received by the Department of Commerce from Copenhagen.

The purchaser is said to be capitalized at 2,000,000 crowns, and is planning to build a new studio which, it is said, will be the largest in Scandinavia, the studio to be built just outside of Stockholm.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified.

TABLOID SEX LECTURE

LIKELY as not, now that there is a certain repression of the exploitation of the salacious side of sex drama, some interesting motion pictures for adults will be made.

Charming as sex is, it has been considered by intelligent persons since the days of the early Greek scholars, at least, as a really second class source of pleasure. After all it is only the more completely dumb members of the masses who can think of nothing else to do.

Clearly something will have to be done about making some pictures for persons who occasionally think or they will continue to raise hell about the movies.

This industry in its industrious application to the problem of making money, and very properly industrious, too, has had too much of a single eye for the one big market rather than the several minority markets. This is a world rich with interests and activities. And sex is only one of them. If the share that sex drama occupied in the screen output was only twice as big as its share in the daily life of the customers it would be somewhat more in proper proportion.

It is strange indeed that such observations should have to be made in a grown-up industry—but obviously enough it is necessary. It is no large credit to the executives of any industry to get into a wholesale conflict with the public. That sort of enterprise should be left to the politicians and statesmen.

BAD ONES SCARCE

BEFORE us is No. 2 leaflet of the Chicago Council Legion of Decency's service entitled "A moral estimate of motion pictures recently released," prepared by ardent Father Dineen. This report finds nine pictures entitled to "Class A," which means full approval; twenty-two fall into "Class B," which "may be considered offensive because of their possible suggestiveness or vulgarity or sophistication or horror or lack of modesty IN SPOTS," but with all diligence only five could be found for "Class C," which means "indecent and immoral and entirely unfit."

THE Associated Press under a Hollywood date line reports: "The clean-up campaign against 'smut' and allegedly indecent films may cost the industry as much as $10,000,000 in booking fees, it was estimated today." This is set forth as a sequel to the morality cancellation announcement. The Associated Press and its papers seem not to realize that for every picture cancelled there must be another booked and played. A picture can lose but the industry can not.

PICCOLO PETE'S SECRET

THE Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals has issued from its Washington headquarters the advice that those who "seek escape from the monotony and cares of ordinary living" may find it better by playing the piccolo, golf, or watercolor painting than in liquor. This just shows what muddy thinking some uplifters do. The piccolo used in moderation, is, like the saxophone, a musical instrument. The debauched, intemperate use of either is invasive of the commonweal, incites the neighbors to murder and drives even strong men to drink.

As for golf, it is a game played by young men who want a chance to meet the boss, who plays it because he wants to meet the customers. Golf inspires profanity, employs child caddy labor and leads to the nineteenth hole. The Methodists do not know it, but golf was invented by the Scotch to make a market for their Highland whisky. Watercolor painting, on the other hand, or no matter which hand you paint with, tends toward studio life and artists' models. After all our notion of the best remedy for the drink habit is a good highball.

THE best laugh of the week comes out of a heavy secret council of the motion picture industry which at last decided that a certain message should be delivered to the public, and at the same time discovered that in spite of having an army of publicity men employed at this and that, there was none whose business it was to represent the motion picture. So the industry has borrowed one and sent him out.

THE strike that grips San Francisco and adjacent bay cities proves something about "planned economy," but just what one hesitates to say. Presumably if it goes much farther maybe somebody will have his Blue Eagle cancelled!

THIS WEEK - - - -

UPWARD TREND

Movements in various cities pointing toward new theatre construction or major rehabilitation of outmoded houses is interpreted generally as indicative of an upward trend. Encouraging building signs are reported from such localities as Detroit, Cincinnati, Charlotte, other Ohio situations. "A definite sign," said one New York sales executive. . . .

REEL PLAN OUT

Thumbs have been turned down in London on the newsreel idea officially sponsored by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association recently, with the general purposes committee of the organization vetoing the plan. . . .

CENSOR'S FINANCES

More than balanced was the budget for 1933-34 of the New York state bureau of censorship, which, reporting from Albany last week, showed a financial statement with total fees for the year of $230,499, which compares with a budgetary estimate for the period of $225,000. The indicated balance is $5,499. The censorship business is good, apparently. . . .

PARAMOUNT SELLING

Already having left Hollywood, and en route to New York via principal cities is a Paramount traveling truck-sound-theatre, equipped with projections apparatus permitting showing of a trailer exploiting forthcoming Paramount product. From New York the salesman-truck will move to New England, then into the South, and back to the Coast. . . .

ERPI VICTORIES

In two litigations Erpi scored heavily last week, both before federal court Judge Knox, who (1) dismissed the $65,953,125 triple damage action of Vocafilm, because the plaintiff failed to supply a $250 bond, as directed, and (2) directed Flower Garden Amusement Corp., operating Metropolitan houses, to show the profit of each house since Western Electric installations, specifically asked by Erpi and objected to by the plaintiff. . . .

FEW CLOSINGS

Fewer theatre closings in Chicago this summer than during the hot weather in any year in the previous five are reported significantly from Chicago, chiefly by reason of the introduction of cooling systems. On the other hand, numerous reopenings were cited. The fact that theatres find themselves able to install cooling systems forms an encouraging indication. . . .

FRENCH COMMISSION

With close attention American interests are watching developments in France, following appointment of former premier Edouard Herriot to head the new commission of government officers, cinema representatives, which will oversee the government's relations with the French film industry. It will decide matters pertinent to tariff, quotas, imports and internal conditions. . . .

RENTAL LIBRARY

A new 16 mm. sound-on-film rental library has been established by Bell & Howell, Chicago equipment company, with branches already opened in various key cities. Interesting and absolutely clean are the two pre-requisites of the library material, declares the company. Lecture films, informative material, comedies are already included, plus one six-reeler. . . .

GERMAN INDUSTRY

Drastically effected has been German film business abroad as a result of the firm regulatory measures imposed on the motion picture by the German government, though the industry has gained internally, reports George R. Canty, trade commissioner at Berlin. Estimates indicate German companies will produce between 140 and 145 features currently, compared with 136 during 1933-34. . . .

FIGURES QUERIED

Fearing publication might give distributors an idea of boosting rentals, Cleveland exhibitors, through M. B. Horwitz, took issue last week with the statement made in an advertisement by the Cleveland Trust Company, which declared paid admissions in the Cleveland territory had increased to a total of $3,523,025 in the first five months of 1934, large increase over 1933. . . .

WIN ON APPEAL

Major distributors and the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade last week won an appeal from a $35,336.15 judgment against them in the action of Fae Robison, former exhibitor. The appeals court dismissed the Robison complaint, based on a Los Angeles zoning situation. The distributors contended the zoning plan involved was merely a recommendation, not legally binding, and that the plaintiff had waited five years to file the action. . . .

WOULD ABSORB TAX

Planned by Kentucky exhibitors is a determined fight to be permitted to absorb the recently passed sales tax rather than pass it on to patrons, thus offsetting possible loss of business. The law specifically provides for payment of the impost by the purchaser, with penalties for evasion.

RASPUTIN APPEAL LOST

Reopened in London last week was the much publicized "Rasputin and the Empress" film libel case, brought by Princess Youssoupoff against MGM, as the film company lost its appeal from the £25,000 verdict rendered against it in the trial court. Sir William Jowitt, attorney for MGM, denied libel intent on the part of his client, characterized the verdict as "enormous," and blamed the trial judge for that verdict. . . .

TITLE CHANGE

The forthcoming Paramount production starring Mae West has been retitled "The Belle of the Gay Nineties," formerly "It Ain't No Sin," which seems to have been considered indecent all at once. . . .

ALL WELCOME

Screen, stage, radio femininity this year will be permitted to compete in the National American Beauty Pageant being conducted by the Association of Theatrical Press Agents, New York. The advent of the professional in these annual contests seems to be unprecedented. Film theatres are invited to enter. . . .

The Decency Campaign—Inside and Out

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

WHEN in recent weeks the current campaign of protest on motion pictures became discernible in the huge proportions it had assumed, the motion picture industry found itself at the bar of public opinion, confronted with the severest test it has encountered in its whole history.

That such a test should finally have arrived was a matter of very little surprise to many persons in the industry, including the writer, who during many years and on innumerable occasions in these columns has called attention to the gathering of the storm clouds. The warnings from this and many other sources, inside and outside the industry, were largely disregarded. Hollywood continued to make some pictures which were violently at conflict with the requirements of mass entertainment and—what was considerably worse—to include in many otherwise wholesome films sequences and bits of dialogue which reeked with vulgarity and obscenity.

Many persons in the production branch of the industry proved, virtually to the satisfaction of everyone except themselves, that they had fallen distinctly out of step with the march of public opinion. An increasingly larger proportion of the product became out of tune with the thoughts, tastes and habits of the American public. Exhibitors everywhere, through their intimate contact with the general public, reported an increasing resentment. The industry's income suffered and except for the tremendous attraction of the motion picture which had long since been the public favorite amusement, it would have suffered a great deal more. Private protest was rampant. Finally a vast public protest, through the Legion of Decency campaign became both distinctly audible and distinctly articulate. The rising tide of resentment against invasions of American morality had found effective expression. Catholic organization and unity had given voice to a national reaction. The wonder is not that this public protest finally arrived, but rather that it did not arrive sooner.

Public Interest Diverted to Criticism

The industry has been hurt and hurt severely—not only in the loss of possible immediate revenue but also in the loss of a vast public goodwill. There has been a loss not only of much goodwill but also another loss in the fact that much of the enormous public interest in motion pictures, which does so much to keep alive the theatre-going habit, has been diverted in the direction of critical and destructive discussion.

All of this is unfortunate, extremely so especially because it might so easily have been avoided had there been a little more intelligence in many places and a little more common decency in some places.

Those whose recalcitrance made possible these hurts to the industry, which could not have been inflicted had not the industry permitted itself to become vulnerable, have no cause to complain. Their stubbornness against advice, their wily escapes from safeguards which authorities of the industry were attempting to arrange about them not only made possible but welcomed the national protest and its attendant consequences.

For more than four years the industry has been publicly committed to a reasonable and workable plan of self-regulation. Throughout all of this time Mr. Will H. Hays and his assistants have labored earnestly and vigorously to obtain reasonable conformance with the requirements of the plan. Company heads have issued order and order, but various persons in the Hollywood colony made it their business to evade and to circumvent the regulations. The only code to which their conduct indicated a real allegiance was a code under which they would make pictures to suit themselves, and the decent public be damned.

And now there is chaos and confusion—not in the councils of the industry but in certain quarters of its production branch. In the councils of the industry the road ahead is clear and distinct. The industry's product needs regulation and it is going to get it. Those who have in the past been eloquent in their excuses for non-conformance, and clever in their evasions of the rule to which the industry is committed, are going to be shown the way to follow in their work or—the way out of it.

Public Criticism Has Made Certain People Nervous

Some of the chaos and confusion which exists is legitimate and inevitable. The uncalled for vehemence which has characterized some of the public criticism of the industry has created a state of nerves among many persons engaged in production who have little knowledge of the moral values of public entertainment and the effects of entertainment on the public mind. In this lack of knowledge these persons are by no means curiosities alongside of the general run of humanity.

"What over-night experts do not understand"

Because motion pictures happen to entail a definite moral significance there is no good reason for assuming or expecting all persons engaged in producing them to have more than an average understanding of the laws of morality—and this existing average is by no means high, whether one examines the field of motion picture production or any other field.

What many of the recent "over-night experts" on the question of the moral character of motion pictures do not seem to understand is that even if through some miracle all of the producers suddenly became possessed of ideas identical with theirs, and immediately proceeded to determine that all pictures should be produced accordingly, still in the resultant pictures the principles aimed at would not be uniformly maintained. Such is the nature of the complex and difficult business of producing motion pictures.

Many persons, who are now gravely concerned over the subject matter of pictures, appear determined to assume that any and every transgression against the moral law which has appeared in pictures has been placed there designedly. Some even go so far as to insist that Hollywood has been conducting an organized campaign to ruin the morals of the nation. These unsound and unreasonable views, when publicly aired, serve not to hasten the day when pictures will maintain a higher moral standard; but rather to create a state of confusion and distrust which renders an early and adequate solution of the problem more difficult.

Almost tragic consequences already are to be noted arising out of the inconsistencies appearing in lists of condemned pictures which have been widely published.

These efforts are a sad reflection on both the intelligence and fairness of their sponsors. If one did not know better, the only tenable explanation of these inconsistencies would be that persons responsible for them were floundering helplessly in a morass of confusion and misunderstanding as to what actually constitutes and determines moral values.

It would seem that these persons do not possess even a penny catechism education as to what is right and what is wrong in the moral values of public entertainment.

Producers Seek Concrete Evidence of Film Types Wanted

The almost tragic consequences referred to are the state of mind created among many producers and its incidental confusion and misunderstanding.

They have been looking to those who are, or think they are, spokesmen for the campaign of protest for guidance as to what they want.

Not all of them understand very clearly abstract moral arguments but all of them do understand very clearly the subject of motion pictures.

They want to know what kind of pictures are wanted and they want the reply expressed concretely in the naming of pictures.

But instead of receiving this sort of guidance, to which they are eminently entitled, they find authorities in one locality listing as acceptable a certain picture and in an adjoining territory the equivalent local authority condemning the same picture.

Local authorities may revel in the consciousness of their unquestioned authority to do precisely as they see fit but meanwhile they may well realize that they are seriously jeopardizing the objective which both they and the authorities of the motion picture industry are commonly interested in—perhaps from different motives but still commonly interested in; namely, the maintenance of right moral standards in motion picture entertainment.

One leading producer recently stated: "The situation looks desperate to me. I feel that I might just as well ignore what these campaigners are asking for even though they will probably put me out of business in the long run for fighting them. The way I figure it is this: They want me to make only wishy-washy, milk and water kind of pictures and I know as a showman if I do this the theatre-goers will put me out of business. So any way I look at it I seem to be licked."

What the Crusaders Want; What They Are Entitled To

The expressed attitude of this producer is perhaps not typical of the attitude entertained by many producers but he is not entirely alone. In one degree or another the thought of this producer has penetrated widely throughout the industry. If some of the thought and effort which has been devoted to just a plain bawling out of the picture business had been devoted to a simple and authoritative statement of what the legionaires of decency want the cause of better pictures would have been materially advanced at this point.

What the crusaders want and what they are entitled to have from the motion pictures industry are pictures which are not subversive of individual morality.

They do not want the motion pictures geared to the mentality of a fourteen year old child.

They do not object to red-blooded, virile drama.

They are quite definitely aware of the fact that there is sin in the world and the sinner and his sin may be treated dramatically.

They do insist, however, that the sinner shall not be made to appear as a saint; neither that the saint shall be depicted as the sinner. While they hold that there are certain facts of life which are not proper subject matter for theatrical treatment, they object to no legitimate dramatic situation, provided only that when moral delinquency is depicted it is used to tell the story or to establish the character and not for the purpose, or in the manner, of presenting a lustful exhibit. They do not think that dancing girls should be clad in coonskin overcoats but they are equally positive that there is a reasonable limit to the exposure of the feminine form in public entertainment.

Serious Restriction of Theme Is Not Necessary

They know that when this reasonable limit is transgressed it is done less for art's sake than for reasons which need no detailed exposition here.

Out of the temper of the day it perhaps is inevitable that many persons concerned with production should imagine—in the absence of exact knowledge of their own and in the presence of confused and vague assertions on the part of complainants—that the theme province of the motion picture will have to be seriously restricted in order to conform with popular demand and that they will be expected generally to assume in their work a Sunday-school mein. This, definitely, is not needed and not expected. Every reasonable demand as to the character of pictures may be answered and there will still remain all of the scope that is necessary or desirable in the selection of themes and in the writing of treatments.

It now appears that many custodians of the public welfare who for many years quite neglected to take the motion picture and its social consequences seriously—when they well might have done so, meanwhile learning something of the size and complexity of the question—have suddenly blossomed out, in the warming light of the vast publicity which has been directed toward motion pictures, with rather detailed plans as to what should be done about it all. Unfortunately, most of these plans are predicated on such ignorance of the fundamentals involved that they serve at this time only to delay and handicap the movement toward the commonly desired objective.

"They do not ask coonskins for dancers"

In the face, for instance, of a long record of municipal and statewide censorship of motion pictures in which the accomplishments have been virtually nil we find many of the over-night experts exultant in the thought that they have hit upon a solution of the problem and the solution which they urge is that the clumsy and not too honest or genuine hand of political censorship be laid upon the motion picture.

Industry Cannot Enter Into Specialized Arrangements

If the industry were not seriously inclined to win and retain the goodwill of the intelligent leaders of public opinion it might welcome censorship as a means of quickly putting an end to many of its past and current difficulties.

Under censorship the industry could conduct its dealings with the political appointees of the censor board to whom the public would be politely advised to address their grievances. The standards of the boards would be the varying standards of the day, subjected to such modification from time to time as the well-organized and exceedingly active political minorities could effect.

Then there are those proposed solutions of the problem which are predicated on the introduction in various localities of specialized procedure. These lose sight of the fact that the motion picture industry is a nationally operating institution and that it can no more enter into specialized arrangements for particular localities than it could entertain propositions to enter into similar compacts with particular groups, associations and societies. These, also, are distinctly un-catholic in character because they assume that the public in one locality is entitled to have or needs to have pictures different from those which the public in every other locality is entitled to have and needs to have. The principles which the industry is committed to maintain in its motion pictures are universal in character and changeless as to the passing of time. The resultant pictures will be and must be equally as acceptable in one place as in another.

The whole public and not some particular segment of it must be served and in a uniform manner.

The only workable and reasonable attack on the problem is the one which comprises the proper regulation of the product at the source of its production. This obviously can only be done by those who control production. And even though it were possible to interject some other influence at the source of production—or at any other point between the studio and the screen—the authority which is the producer's should be left with him and, more especially, the responsibility should be left with him.

The effort of those who control production, to adjust the character of the product in keeping with sound and reasonable ideas of morality is not a new effort. Nearly a quarter of a century ago, in the midst of the infancy days of the industry, the National Board of Review was organized. It is true that it failed to accomplish the desired results but the record remains as proof that the industry recognized its responsibility and sought to discharge it.

When Will Hays some twelve years ago entered the industry he immediately proceeded to draft certain regulations governing the moral character of pictures. These regulations were found to be inadequate and even in their inadequacy they failed of effective application. But still the effort was made.

1930 Code Accomplished Much, But Not Enough

In 1930 through the Production Code of Morals the industry entered upon the soundest and broadest plan of regulation which had ever been thought of or attempted in the whole history of theatrical entertainment. Demonstrable results of enormous proportions were accomplished through this Code. Those who deny this fact are exposing themselves to the charge of simply not knowing what they are talking about. It is true that while this Code as applied from 1930 to date accomplished much it did not accomplish enough. But to hold the industry alone accountable for failure to accomplish adequate results is in the first place neglecting to consider the frailty of man and in the second and many subsequent places it is neglecting to understand that the Code did not have active support of a sufficiently interested public opinion; that the source material of the producer was constantly becoming muddier through the lowering of moral standards in the popular novel and stage play and that many millions of our fellow citizens, including great numbers among the ecclesiastical followers of those who are now the industry's chief critics, concerned themselves not at all with the moral significance of motion pictures and did in fact freely tolerate those types of pictures against which complaint is now being made.

The motion picture industry can do much and will do much but it cannot perform miracles. If the desired objective is to be attained there must be patience and a sympathetic understanding of the industry's methods, problems and efforts. The fact that such patience and such sympathetic understanding is entertained in the highest councils of the campaign of protest is a brilliant ray of hope illuminating the prospect of a great accomplishment to the end of enabling the motion picture consistently to be a healthy influence on the character of the people and at the same time rendering the industry a healthier and more secure business.

The motion picture needs the intelligent guidance of a uniform and united public opinion. The great objective of the aroused public opinion in the question of the moral character of motion pictures is being jeopardized by the lack of such uniformity.

The problem is common to all people everywhere. Methods of correcting the evils which will be effective at all will be effective everywhere. Great numbers of the public can be kept away from motion pictures for the time being and perhaps indefinitely. But such procedure would only be indicated if the motion picture were an evil thing, which it is not. Hence any campaign which has no objective other than to keep people away from motion pictures is not reasonable, nor just. Such campaigns which have been undertaken obviously must be intended somehow to influence the producers who have the authority and also the responsibility over the character of the product.

Industry's Plan Immediate Proof of Its Good Faith

That the producers have been influenced is a matter of public record. What they propose to do now, in a uniform, national manner toward discharging their responsibility is likewise a matter of public record. The quality of their good faith is naturally something that only time will tell. However, the quality of their plan, its soundness, its thoroughness and it workableness is something susceptible to immediate proof.

If, then, the plan is what it is represented to be—and if it is the soundest and safest means of reaching the desired objective—those genuinely interested in its accomplishment should see to it that the necessary support of public opinion is maintained; that the necessary help and encouragement is extended and that amateur tinkers are not allowed to imperil the achievement of a great moral victory.

STRIKE CLOSES 120 FILM THEATRES IN SAN FRANCISCO AND ENVIRONS

Theatrical Unions Join in General Walkout to "Protect the Public" from Any Violence; Even Janitors Quit Work

More than 120 motion picture theatres closed their doors when the general strike seized San Francisco. There was no place to go for the pleasure-starved populace milling through the streets on foot.

Every theatre in the city and in surrounding neighborhoods was shut. Projectionists' unions had walked out as a "protective" gesture to the public. The strike originally was started by dock workers.

Stage and Radio in Same Predicament

Possibly for the first time in many years no question of unfair competition was extant in the amusement field in San Francisco this week—for legitimate theatres and radio were in the same predicament faced by film houses.

Closed theatres in San Francisco proper totaled 76. Oakland, just across the bay, contributed 34 more dark houses.

None of the theatrical unions joining the strike had any grievances, but at the same time they would not say they were walking out in sympathy with the longshoremen's strike. They maintained their action was to "protect" the public, thus saving existing agreements which would have been violated in the case of a sympathy strike.

The first intimation San Francisco and Oakland theatre men had that they would have to close came in an official notice from the operators' union that they were joining the general strike, beginning Monday morning, and suggesting theatres be closed to protect the public from violence. This notice was delivered to exhibitors Saturday.

All Other Unions Strike

All other theatrical unions—stage hands, musicians and janitors—quit work. Any thought of theatre men to operate their houses with non-union help was dismissed without even discussion.

On the first day of the strike there were practically no amusement advertisements in any newspapers. A few neighborhood houses tried to carry on, with regular small newspaper advertisements. On the second day the advertisements did not appear—union pickets had visited the houses with threats of swift reprisal.

Darkened theatres displayed signs reading: "Closed for duration of strike"; "Closed due to strike conditions" and "Closed temporarily. Watch newspapers."

$125,000 Daily Loss Seen

A careful check of daily average theatre grosses could not reveal to the fullest extent the financial loss to San Francisco theatres, but leading showmen estimated the figure would be around $125,000 daily.

The effect of the darkened theatres on the San Francisco populace was depressing. No announcement had been made that any theatres would be closed, even after the unions had served their walkout papers on Saturday, nor was any announcement made on Sunday when a general walkout appeared inevitable. There still was hope then that a mass strike could be averted, theatre men said. It was not until Monday night that the public generally was aware that theatres had shut down and more than 200,000 persons crammed Market Street all day—90 per cent of them afoot, because of the dearth of gasoline for cars.

It was the consensus Tuesday that the prospects for theatre business generally would be gloomy for several months to come, especially so if the unions lose the strike. It was agreed that should the unions lose, salaries in all probability would descend to the level of Los Angeles scales.

Cameramen in Difficulties, Too

Another phase of motion picture activity in connection with the strike revolved around the efforts of newsreel cameramen to obtain pictures. Cameramen covering the strike warfare were beaten by strikers, gassed by police. Frequently they were caught between the lines during the actual fighting. Several newsreel men were taken to hospitals.

Typical of the experiences encountered is the letter of a Paramount news man from Portland, where an offshoot of the San Francisco strike is in progress. The letter follows:

"I got through the picket lines on to Pier 4. There I had to get through 150 feet of the strong police guard. As soon as I set up my camera, strikers armed with rocks, bolts and clubs savagely warned me to make no motion pictures. They demanded the film. When I refused, three strikers grabbed me while others ripped out the film and sent it sailing. They told me if I wanted to show them playing pinochle or in some nice peaceful situation, it would be all right, but no scenes of action or attack.

"Yesterday I heard of a planned attack on a train. Pickets spotted me and I was surrounded again. The camera was taken from me, the film torn out and a husky savage heaved the camera as far as he could.

"I had recovered my wrecked camera when two engines came sliding along the greased rails. Fully 500 strikers sprang out from behind trees and bushes, all armed with rocks, bridge bolts and clubs. They ran for the train, cursing, shouting, heaving rocks. Then 60 police on a flat car ahead of the engines cut loose with shotguns. Several strikers fell; others turned and ran. They came in my direction and I ran, too.

"What a picture I missed, but I missed some of the buckshot with it. They don't want pictures. But I have a new plan and tomorrow I am going to try again."

Not Protected by Insurance

Under California insurance law, property destroyed by fire, directly or indirectly from riot, strike or civil commotion, is not protected against loss. Rates on this type of insurance are reported to have tripled since midnight Sunday.

Nineteen Fox West Coast theatres in which the company owns either the equipment or buildings insured for $2,750,000 would represent a total loss if burned.

Fox West Coast trustees met Monday to pay off employees in the effected strike area for the remainder of the week.

Theatres in Portland, Ore., faced the prospect of a general strike similar to that in San Francisco.

REPRINTS of the article by Martin Quigley, "The Decency Campaign—Inside and Out," published in this issue of Motion Picture Herald, will be available in pamphlet form for a limited time at $5 per hundred or 10 cents each. Orders should be forwarded promptly to Quigley Publishing Company, 1790 Broadway, New York.

"EXCLUSIVES" AGAIN ON THE FIRE TO SAVE CIRCUITS' DE LUXE RUNS

Reported Plan Calls For Concentration of Showings at Only Four or Five Neighborhoods in as Many Districts

Whispered discussions held in Broadway home offices concerning proposed radical changes in the system for retailing motion pictures in the large and medium-sized cities have resounded in the field, with indications that the current method may undergo extensive alterations in many large centers at the beginning of the 1934-35 theatre season in September. A modification of the unsuccessful plan of "exclusive" showings that died aborning in 1932 appears in prospect. However, the large companies deny that another such distribution revolution is contemplated.

General business conditions, with resultant trends in patronage from the large downtown first run theatres to the lower-priced neighborhood theatres, as described in Motion Picture Herald, June 16, have hastened consideration of new plans to the point where actual application is planned for some large midwestern cities immediately after the summer.

5 to 40 Per Cent Swing

The flow of patronage away from the large de luxe operations to the neighborhoods has for many weeks constituted a serious problem engaging the attention of the large circuit executives and their distribution colleagues. The trend ranges from 5 to 40 per cent, based on comparative admissions grossed at both types of theatres.

The new system said to be in process of construction would to a large extent eliminate the bulk of neighborhood competition by the concentration of showings at only four or five neighborhood theatres in as many districts in a large city, following the run at the large downtown house. Under the plan of exclusives as tried in 1932, a feature was shown only at the de luxe first-run.

The new plan would set up a first-run admission price of about 50 cents, with the neighborhoods maintaining a schedule of no less than half that figure. Pictures would be made available to the selected subsequent runs 28 days or a month after their showing downtown. Showings at the four or five neighborhoods would be simultaneous, and each house would have exclusive run in its particular district or zone. No other theatre could show the production.

Chief factors governing the selection of the four or five neighborhood theatres would be type of patronage, size, location, accessibility, proximity to transportation lines and physical appearance. Each subsequent run would be in a well populated section, perhaps on a main traffic artery, and easily reached by streetcar and bus. The subsequents would be well distributed in relation to population areas and the surrounding draw and each would be selected only after a thorough survey.

However, the plan does not call for arbitrary determination of four or five subsequents, it being elastic to embrace others if the population and drawing possibilities warrant.

This proposed system is a modified extension of the original "exclusive" idea, minus the troublesome element of only one showing in a town which caused widespread exhibitor protest and resentment on the part of the public. Achievement of one of the basic purposes of exclusive runs, that of controlling price, policies and box-office patronage, would be assured.

The plan is said to be definitely under consideration by at least two of the large distribution-exhibition corporations, and it is quite likely that it would be extended to others. It was pointed out, however, that the idea would be applied only in those cities where the neighborhood competition is too severe for the downtown operation. This troublesome competition virtually does not exist in small places, and in these sectors there would be no need for changing the present vogue.

Neighborhood houses which would be ignored under the new plan would presumably have sufficient marginal product available from the large companies, which, with the product of the socalled "independent," would be ample.

There are but two or three large cities in the country where all the distribution-exhibition companies would need to participate in the plan at one time, even if all decided to adopt the idea, and this because in nearly all large cities the large companies are not represented individually along the downtown first-run thoroughfares.

Not for Only One Picture

The plan in its present form, unlike its predecessor of 1932, is not intended to protect the rentals on a certain picture alone; of more importance to the troubled circuits is the necessity of protecting the first-run theatre properties from the inroads of neighborhood competition. Columbia, United Artists and Universal, not being active in circuit operation, would have no need of participating at all, while the others in most instances each concentrate in certain sections and do not operate in others.

The stated purposes, summarized, of such a new system are threefold: (1) To assure a steady flow of patronage to the downtown theatres; (2) Safeguard the downtown first-run against indiscriminate price-cutting and other socalled "ruinous" competitive practices indulged in by the neighborhoods with the same product, including double featuring; (3) Maintain higher standards of exhibition.

Proponents believe the higher percentage of earnings to come out of the theatres protected under the new system would make its adoption worth while both to the circuit departments and to the distribution divisions, the divisions effecting a saving in the number of prints and in lower servicing costs through reduction in the number of accounts.

Would Make Films Available for Selected Neighborhood Houses 28 Days or Month After Showing Downtown

In distribution and first-run circles where any such plans have been talked of, amazement has been expressed that the distributors-exhibitors continue "in competition with themselves." The large companies acquire costly downtown properties, it was pointed out, only to tear down their value by selling the same product to their competitors in the neighborhoods where policies are detrimental to downtown operations.

Exclusives Tried in 1932

Consideration of methods of stemming the competition from the neighborhoods is no new development. Early in May of 1932, Al Lichtman, vice-president of United Artists in charge of distribution, advanced a revolutionary reform contemplating classification of theatres under a plan of exclusive showing of outstanding productions only once in each important city. MGM distribution executives revealed similar plans. One of these, the exclusive showing of MGM pictures with a total disregard of subsequents, was inaugurated in several places at the beginning of the 1932-33 season, but the idea was abandoned after a trial of about eight months.

In Kansas City, where exclusives were given the most thorough test at Loew's 4,000-seat de luxe Midland, the policy was said to have shown no material benefit, as, with the exception of a few outstanding attractions, grosses continued to decline in ratio to the condition of general business. Five months after exclusives were placed in effect, the Midland slashed its price from 40 cents top to 25 cents.

Carrying the Load

In the last few months affiliated distributor-exhibitor authorities have expressed concern for the present and future status of the downtown first-run, representing a heavy investment and carrying a large overhead. Recently, Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, declared that "the first-run is in a difficult spot with respect to the neighborhoods." The assertion frequently is heard that the first-runs carry the load of negative costs, and yet their business is considerably interfered with by the neighborhood runs. As a result, there has been considerable advocacy of "selective" runs confined to the large downtown theatres, with extended playdates limited, a process comparable to the roadshows of the legitimate theatre.

PARTIAL CONTROL OF DUALS RECOMMENDED

Allen Johnson of Michigan Proposes NRA Provision for Local Board Designation of Films Barred from Double Featuring

Exclusion of all outstanding productions from double featuring and a curtailment of the policy to permit of its operation on no more than four days weekly is recommended by Allen Johnson, Michigan exhibitor, in a letter to Motion Picture Herald, as a fair and equitable solution.

Mr. Johnson, a graduate of Michigan State University and owner of the Royal and Our theatres at Grand Rapids, Mich., suggests that the NRA motion picture code be amended, or an NRA executive order be issued, to provide that on written request of 75 per cent of the affiliated and 75 per cent of the unaffiliated theatres in any competitive area, the Local Clearance and Zoning Board in that territory officially designate pictures specified by the theatres as those which could not be double-billed, and also designate days specified by those theatres as days when no double bills could be shown, but in no event would dual policies be permitted on more than four days in any one week.

In practice this would mean that when an outstanding production reaches an area for exhibition, and 75 per cent of each class of exhibitors predetermined to do so, such picture would be designated by the Clearance Board as one which could not be shown on any double program in any theatre in the area so defined. The exhibitors at all times would decide what pictures would be so classified for single showings, the Local Clearance Board merely giving effect to their decision upon written request.

Furthermore, if 75 per cent of these exhibitors so decided, and their decision was made known to the Board in writing, certain days of the week would be designated for single performances, but on no more than four days of any week could double features be shown. Under the present system, exhibitors operating in areas where dual featuring is widely prevalent are virtually compelled to double whether they want to or not, because of competitive policy.

Declares Pictures Ruined

Mr. Johnson declared: "The box office possibilities of many meritorious pictures are ruined by promiscuous double billing. 'The Private Life of Henry the Eighth,' 'Little Women,' 'The House of Rothschild' are but a few of many pictures which appeal to discriminating audiences who will not patronize a double bill program," to say nothing of the ability of such pictures to draw patronage on their merit without the aid of a second attraction.

"This plan would be fair to the small producer since it would provide an additional outlet for his pictures at least three days each week," he added. "It would be equitable as well for the exhibitor who needs the stimulation of double bills only occasionally to center attention on his theatre when competing against the larger theatre which plays all outstanding product, or, perhaps, uses stage attractions with pictures."

The component parts of Mr. Johnson's plan are not new in themselves, his "solution" being a combination of ideas discussed variously in other territories both by exhibitors and distributors.

MPTOA Asked Code Action

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by Ed Kuykendall, fought during the code drafting proceedings at Washington for inclusion of a clause which would give 75 per cent of the exhibitors in each territory, or area defined by a Local Clearance Board, the right to outlaw duals or modify the practice as they saw fit. Vigorous objections voiced by independent exhibitors and independent distributors caused the clause to be eliminated from the original draft late last summer.

The affiliated distributors and exhibitors, with but few exceptions, notably Universal and Columbia, together with the MPTOA have taken sides for the complete elimination or drastic modification of the dual practice. Independent distributors and independent exhibitors are fighting for its continuance.

Mr. Johnson's idea was discussed Wednesday with some of the leading circuit and distribution authorities in New York. They said that theoretically it had much value, but declared its fundamental weakness revolved around the inability of any one group of exhibitors to make an amicable decision as to which pictures should come under the category of single performances and which should be permitted to be shown on a dual bill.

Deny Chicago Breakdown

In Chicago, reports were denied that independent distributors were succeeding in breaking down the citywide ban against duals which has been in effect for months. It appeared there would not be any interruption of the agreement between independent owners and circuit operators.

The two-weeks-old anti-dual agreement in Cleveland was reported working out satisfactorily, with exhibitors in favor of continuing the single standard, which, they claimed, had not caused any decline in receipts.

The countrywide church crusade against unclean motion pictures entered the double feature controversy at Buffalo, N. Y., and at Grand Rapids, Mich., where censorship threats appears to have hastened action toward prohibiting doubles. However, it is not expected that the agreement will become effective until the beginning of the new show season in September. Catholic churchmen in Buffalo declared that one of the basic objectives of their crusade was to effect elimination of double feature policies.

In Philadelphia, U. S. District Judge George Welsh denied an application for a preliminary injunction asked by Harry Perelman, exhibitor, against large distributors who seek to enforce against exhibitors in that territory a contractual clause prohibiting the showing of any of their features on the same program with another production. The court set the trial for the fall.

Loew-Warner Bid Now Is $4,500,000

Loew's and Warner Brothers, which have been carrying on joint negotiations the last four weeks to acquire together the Fox Metropolitan circuit of theatres for $4,000,000, raised the offer to $4,500,000 at a hearing last Thursday before Federal Judge Julian W. Mack.

In order to give the Fox Metropolitan bondholders, the operators under the receivership and the bidders another opportunity to iron out their difficulties, Judge Mack agreed to adjourn the hearing until July 20.

Judge Mack also ordered that the circuit's receivership, due to expire August 18, be extended for two months, to October 18, in order to eliminate filing of more than one report.

John H. Amen, chief of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice in New York, representing Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, was again present at Thursday's hearing.

Judge Mack remarked that he was ready to entertain a straight out-and-out bid, but that apparently they were just "where they were when negotiations began.

"Unless a cash bid is made," he said, "I shall reject this bid as unsuitable." He added that he wanted a bid for the bonds in order that the reorganization might proceed.

The Fox Theatres Corporation receivership has been extended six months, to January 22, 1935.

GFTA Protests MGM Plan to Handle Trailers

The recently organized Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama Independent Theatres' Association, in session in Atlanta last week, passed a resolution opposing the entrance into the trailer production field of MGM "or any other company," and indicating the organization's readiness to "combat the spread of this practice by every available means within our command." Members are further urged to refrain from buying from MGM and Warner in their plans to handle trailers. Metro plans production and distribution of its own trailers beginning January 1.

The resolution cited the danger that other producers will follow the lead of MGM, in turn leading to the forcing of trailers with features and shorts; the resulting increase in theatre operating costs, and the contention that trailers from one central agency means better trailer service at a nominal weekly charge. The GFTA, at the session, planned to raise a fund to fight invasion of circuits in the territory.

CHURCH SHOWINGS OF PICTURES BRING NEW EXHIBITOR PROTEST

Cite the Unfairness of Boycott When Church Organization Permits Units to Run Shows at Regular Admission Prices

Faced with the usual seasonal decline in box office receipts, the continued competition of the radio, and, principally, the campaigns of the churches—which in many sections have taken their toll in theatre attendance—motion picture exhibitors this week were complaining about the competitive force of non-theatrical showings of motion pictures in churches and auditoriums.

Widespread publicity for a project which would encourage the addition of such showings in churches of all denominations as an adjunct to Sunday evening services—proposed last week by Dr. Worth M. Tippy of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America—has brought protest not only from exhibitors but from sales executives and others in New York as well.

The general attitude is that because, among other factors, churches pay no taxes, get no return on investment for mortgages, pay no rents, telephone or other of the many expenses that all thetres must pay, the motion picture cannot compete with churches in the amusement field.

"Motion picture theatres are in the business of selling amusement," it was pointed out by an executive connected with exhibition and distribution circles in New York. "Churches sell religion; schools sell education. Let them all stay in their own fields, or somebody is going to be hurt—and by somebody, I mean the motion picture theatres of this country.

Schools Built by Film Proceeds

"The exhibitors had better awaken to this drive to show 'select motion pictures' in churches. Surely they know that in Boston two schools have been built from proceeds of motion picture shows in competition to theatres.

"Why the people in this industry waste their time discussing trade 'problems' of the business—insignificant in comparison with those questions of real competition—I do not understand."

Seek $25,000 for Exchange System

Dr. Tippy's plan for Sunday showings in churches involves, as a start, the raising of $25,000 to establish an exchange system which eventually would expand as a source of supply of pictures for from 5,000 to 10,000 churches, the exchange being the churches' medium for selling and distributing film to the churches for Sunday and other showings.

Further, it would be among the duties of this exchange to select suitable pictures for presentation in churches, and to exchange these films among churches which might install the necessary sound projection equipment.

Only "suitable" pictures would be shown, Dr. Tippy emphasized—complete subjects, not just patched-up reels. Biographical pictures and pictures having a sociological value, or depicting the meaning of religion in life, such as "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," "Little Women," "Maedchen in Uniform" and recent films depicting the lives of Martin Luther and John Wesley would be acceptable, he explained.

Dr. Tippy advanced his plan at a time when the crusade of the Legion of Decency had reached its peak. Theatres were face to face with boycott; in at least two key cities theatres were closing in moves aimed to end the church boycott. The Federal Council's program for church showings of selected films was admittedly an effort to "put teeth" into the general drive for better quality films.

"Protestant churches can reach at least 60,000,000 people in this fight," Dr. Tippy warned, and 4,000,000 Protestants can be enrolled immediately, he pointed out. He also said that nearly 10,000 churches of Protestant denominations are already well equipped.

Denies Competition Objective

This week, however, Dr. Tippy "amplified"—according to his announcement—his plan, explaining that competition with the theatre was not proposed, but only the showing of pictures "in the field of religion" in connection with religious programs.

Many churches have been giving non-theatrical showings in direct competition to the theatre for some time.

There is the case of the Protestant church in a suburb of Philadelphia—a blue law town which legally has prohibited Sunday motion pictures—which operates a regular motion picture show every Sunday and charges admission ranging, it is reported, from 10 cents to 30 cents. The blue law does not cover such showings.

In Detroit, a Catholic church on Fourth Street, and the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church on Woodward Avenue, both sponsor Sunday motion pictures—and Detroit is one of the centers of the church campaign against the motion picture.

In Louisville, Ky., the St. Therese's Catholic Church owns and operates a theatre in its school or gymnasium building under the name of St. Therese Gym.

Exhibitor Protests Practice

Louis F. Steuerle, manager of the Broadway theatre in Louisville, writes:

"I notice in your recent HERALD that the churches have placed a boycott on picture theatres advising the public not to attend any picture show for 30 days and other instances placing the boycott on certain pictures.

"I do not believe their policy to be fair and honest, especially when in certain sections of the United States some of their own churches exhibit pictures for pay just exactly the same as they are shown in the regular licensed theatres. We have in this city a theatre which is owned and operated by St. Therese Catholic Church, but they do not advertise the name of their church—they operate the theatre in their school or Gym building under the name of St. Therese Gym. All the proceeds go directly to the church.

"They pay no license, no tax of any kind or description. In fact, I have a letter from both the city and state authorities advising me that they are not subject to a license or tax because the money goes to the Church. They pay no salaries of any kind to any one. They charge a regular admission price of 10 and 15 cents and they operate regularly every Sunday and Monday night.

Calls Boycott Unfair

"They get out a program which they distribute throughout the neighborhood. I sent, by United States mail, a copy of this program to Rt. Rev. J. A. Floersh, Bishop of Louisville, and I also mailed a copy to Archbishop John T. McNicholas of Cincinnati, but to my latest knowledge the theatre is still operating.

"In my opinion it is unfair to boycott any Philadelphia or New York moving picture theatre and then have a church operate a theatre in another city.

"I took the matter up with the NRA, but up to the present time they have taken no definite action.

Dr. Tippy of Federal Council of Churches Proposes Fund to Build an Exchange System to Supply 10,000 Churches

"You will see the unfairness of a boycott upon regular theatres when a church organization which is issuing the boycott allows a parish in another city to run shows for regular admission prices to the public."

According to the program which the Louisville church distributes, the majority of the films shown, aside from short subjects, are action films and westerns. The program lists the twice weekly showings for 12 weeks in advance. The admission prices are 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children under 14 years.

In Boston and in many other quarters, it appeared possible that exhibitors were reluctant to enter into a discussion of the situation in view of the antagonism of the churches.

Exempted Under Code

Church competition does not come under the NRA code. There is a clause supposed to protect exhibitors from non-theatrical competition, but an appended phrase exempts religious and educational motion picture activities.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, declared in New York this week that "the problem of non-theatrical competition and unfair trade practice is becoming more involved every day."

"The MPTOA as a national organization are deeply interested," he said. "We feel that it is our function and obligation to use every method that is fair and honorable in protecting theatre owners over the country whose investment is being jeopardized because of the fact that the code for the motion picture industry prohibits lotteries and so forth, and because the code limits the theatre owners. Notwithstanding, ball parks are giving away automobiles, tent shows are having drawings and lotteries and free shows are being given in halls and auditoriums and abandoned theatres, which in many instances practically closes up the legitimate theatre man of the community during their existence. Another problem is the free showing of pictures in public parks. There is a way to stop this.

"I am most anxious that theatre owners everywhere, whether they belong to the MPTOA or not, write me as chairman of the Unfair Trade Practices Committee of the National Code Authority, giving me in detail unfair competition practices that prevail in their communities in order that I may intelligently combat this practice."

WHILE SHIRLEY PLAYS IN HER SANDBOX

Child Star's Father, Being Bank Manager, Thinks $2,500 a Week Would Be Proper Pay from Fox

Amid the maelstrom of church agitation against motion pictures and obviously impervious to the possibilities of the San Francisco dock workers' strike, a five-year-old little lady named Shirley Temple has been unwittingly launched upon a private strike all her own. The agitation in which she is the principal character also is directed at, and has considerable to do with, the motion picture and has, in all probability, added at least one more furrow to the already wrinkled brows of sundry of Hollywood's production executives—for Baby Shirley, who until recently had made only a few short subjects of the juvenile variety, is asking, even demanding, a salary of $2,500 weekly to supplant the $150 which has been her lot thus far in life.

Fox Film Corporation, to whom Shirley is under contract, was quite amenable to the consideration of a raise for its miniature star and even went to the extent last week of offering her $1,000 a week. Miss Temple's parents flatly refused the offer and held out for the $2,500.

Shirley, meanwhile, was basking in the sandpile behind the modest Temple home, oblivious to the storm about to break around her golden head. This five-year-old sensation could not be bothered with such mundane matters as money when there were dolls to be played with, especially in the glorious environment of the sand-box.

Father a Branch Bank Manager

George Temple, the lucky father, regards the matter in an entirely different light. Being a branch bank manager, he naturally placed the situation exclusively on a dollars and cents basis, remembering the limited screen life of a star.

Too, Mr. Temple apparently did not overlook the relation of young Shirley to the law of supply and demand, especially in view of the new market created by the church crusade for unsophisticated motion pictures.

Therefore, reasons George Temple, Fox most assuredly ought to give his daughter a 40-week contract at $2,500 per, and restrict the number of her pictures to two annually, or $50,000 a picture. In addition, the young banker wants Mrs. Gertrude Temple, Shirley's mother, to receive $100 weekly from Fox for taking care of Shirley while on the set.

Started in Educational Shorts

Shirley's career undoubtedly has been hectic—for her parents. Only a few months ago she was "discovered" in Educational short subjects, released by Fox. She was receiving $150 weekly for her efforts. Fox had a part for the young lady in the feature, "Stand Up and Cheer." Immediately "the nation acclaimed her," to quote the fan magazines. Paramount borrowed her for "Little Miss Marker"—and Shirley was a full-fledged star. Back to Fox again to make "Baby Take a Bow," a modest offering in which Miss Temple walked off with all the critics' honors.

All but four agents in Hollywood are reported to have tried to lure Shirley under their wings, away from the original agents who discovered her, Messrs. O'Reilly and Mann.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE

And thereby hangs still another Temple tale. The ethics of some agents are apt to come up for considerable airing and some denunciation during Shirley's salary squabble.

Father Insists on Being Agent

Shirley's father has decided that he alone is capable of adequately handling his daughter's affairs and is planning to act as her agent; this as a result of the activities of those agents who desired to reap some share of Shirley's potential millions. All kinds of methods and promises are said to have been employed by the agents, although only one succeeded in tempting the budding Bernhardt from under established wings, and his triumph did not last long, for a judge who says "yes" and "no" to what Shirley may do proffered the agent a meager five per cent of her $150 weekly salary, which would have netted him $7.50 a week. The agent refused the judge's offer, possibly because there was a stipulation involved which would require him to take care of Shirley's fan mail, her legal work and attend to all her personal business for $7.50.

The original agents, O'Reilly and Mann, who first introduced Fox to Shirley, or vice versa, are getting no commissions, but are preparing to file suit for moneys accruing on the basis of the standard agents' contract signed by Shirley, her father and her mother.

Shirley's earning capacity—on the basis of estimates of about five years of favorable public reception, as in the cases of Jackie Coogan, Jackie Cooper, Baby Peggy and other infant prodigies—may conceivably amount to between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000.

Tangible evidence as to the effect of Shirley's name upon a theatre box office is seen in the following figures on the performances of two of her pictures in New York:

	Gross
"Little Miss Marker": (Paramount Theatre)
Week ending May 24....	$35,000
May 31....	36,000
June 7....	24,000
"Baby Take a Bow" *(Roxy Theatre)
Week ending July 6....	29,000
July 13....	30,000

The picture currently is in its third week and may be held over for a fourth, something which has been recorded at this theatre only three times since 1927.*

Miss Temple's parents are said to be endeavoring to offset what they term the "bad influence" of stardom by surrounding her with the simplest childhood games and associations.

The almost phenomenal success of this child star, whose name has swept the country and whose personality has captured the imagination and hearts of millions of motion picture patrons, has made her one of the really outstanding stars of the screen in a couple of weeks.

She's only 43 inches tall now, and if she doesn't shoot up like Jack's beanstalk, everything may be all right for her.

Meanwhile she's playing with her dolls.

Sherman Out; Local 306 Loses Home Rule Right

Two and one-half years of turbulence in New York's Local 306 of the IATSE operators' union finally came to a dramatic ending over the weekend when the parent International Alliance suddenly stepped in, wrested home rule from its officers and took over active management.

Appearing unexpectedly at a meeting of Local 306, George E. Browne, international president of the IATSE, denounced the local as being unfit to manage its own affairs.

Mr. Browne's action was construed as a progressive movement within the ranks of the local, which late last week forced the resignation of Harry Sherman as president, together with other official members of the local.

Mr. Browne, after Mr. Sherman on Friday resigned the presidency, had Harland Holmden, third vice-president of the IATSE, then placed in charge. All other officers were instructed to remain inactive and place themselves at Mr. Holmden's disposal, it was said by the IATSE.

Coincidentally, the United States Government was taking steps to further its investigation of theatrical union affairs.

A committee to study union conditions will consist of Major Leslie E. Thompson, RKO; Charles Moscowitz, Loew's; Charles L. O'Reilly, TOCC; Harry Brandt, ITOA; George E. Browne, IATSE president, and Joseph Blatt of the Empire State Operators' Union.

25 PROTESTANT FAITHS TO ENLIST 100,000 PASTORS IN DECENCY DRIVE

Other Groups Representing 26 Million Members Also Act; Broadway Discounts Coast's $10,000,000 Loss Estimate

Developments during the week in the individual proceedings of the church and the industry to effect a better moral tone in motion pictures follow:

Twenty-five Protestant faiths acted jointly to use 100,000 ministers in securing Legion of Decency pledges from their 22,000,000 parishioners.

Similar action was taken independently by Jews, Methodists, Baptists and Lutherans, representing a combined membership of 26,000,000.

Wide diversification of activities of local clergymen in the field appeared to be creating confusion.

Industry's machinery of self-regulation became effective Monday.

Joseph I. Breen's Production Code Administration in Hollywood certified approval of 31 new features, four serials and 22 shorts.

Distributors promised exhibitors that machinery would not break the flow of product.

Eastern Production Code Administration launched, in charge of Vincent Hart, to review films made in New York and also all foreign pictures imported by MPPDA distributors.

Hollywood's estimate that cancellation privilege accorded exhibitors will cost distributors $10,000,000, is discounted on Broadway.

Will Hays explained the technicalities of self-regulation machinery to producers in Hollywood.

Catholics claimed there were 107 major sex violations in 133 features released between January and May.

Hollywood was talking about offering its own system of regulation as a substitute for existing state and municipal censorship, which costs industry $5,000,000 annually.

Church and other groups participating in the movement indicated they are against federal or state censorship, the general objective being to obtain "wholesome" pictures by boycotting the unwholesome.

Allied States Association blamed Will Hays, C. C. Pettijohn and Carl E. Milliken for the present situation; MPTOA asked for a united front.

Exhibitors questioned the sincerity of "reformers" who demand clean pictures and then fail to support them.

The paying customers started their own discussion in "voice of the people" columns of newspapers.

New York Daily News reported, after first-hand investigation, that children deny having acquired any harmful effects from motion pictures.

The Catholic press explained the cause and effect of the campaign.

Laemmle, Pickford, DeMille, Cantor, explained some production viewpoints.

Civil Liberties Union and Association for Preservation of the Freedom of the Screen promised "intelligent opposition" to the crusade.

Local and individual church activities in the field were extended along further lines in Atlanta; Allentown, Pa.; Boston; Buffalo; Chicago; Cleveland; Cincinnati; Des Moines; Dover, N. J.; Englewood, N. J.; Hamilton, Ohio; Hartford, Conn.; Kansas City; Lakeside, Ohio; Los Angeles; Marietta, Ohio; Milwaukee; New Orleans; New York; Omaha; Palisades Park, N. J.; Philadelphia; Portland, Ore.; Richmond, Va.; St. Louis; Seattle; Tampa, Fla.; Wilmington, Del., and elsewhere.

American Protestantism's moral support of the Roman Catholic's Legion of Decency crusade to raise the standard of the screen crystallized into active participation over the weekend. An interdenominational conference of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, speaking for 25 different groups, elected to draft 100,000 ministers to enlist recruits for an army of Protestant Legionnaires from among their 22,000,000 parishioners.

Meanwhile the Legion was making progress in recruiting Catholics from among the 20,000,000 members of that faith. The Protestants will cooperate in a single drive, unlike the Catholics, who are proceeding independently in each diocese. A pledge similar to that being signed by the Catholics will be employed by the Protestants.

Further support of the move came when the Jews acted to enlist their congregations of 5,000,000 members.

Independent Action Also

Independent action was being taken by individual churches and groups. The Methodists, Baptists and Lutherans, having a combined membership of 21,000,000, officially entered the campaign.

On the other side were the distributors in New York and the producers in Hollywood working to remove from their motion pictures all objectionable material, under a system of self-regulation which became effective officially Monday morning.

Reports of the individual proceedings being conducted by the local churchmen in the field indicated confusion has resulted, although nationally the three great religious groups were being drawn together into a single force on matters of motion picture morality.

Machinery Starts; 31 Approved

The self-regulatory machinery for creating a new standard in motion pictures became formally effective at 9 a. m. Monday. Some 17 features, four serials and ten shorts immediately were given Certificates of Approval by Joseph I. Breen, assistant to Will Hays in Hollywood and Administrator of the Production Code Administration. These pictures will bear the official seal of approval and the stamp of the MPPDA in all theatre showings, and cannot be shown without it, under penalty. Later in the week, Mr. Breen announced at his Hollywood headquarters that approval certificates had also been given to an additional 14 features and 12 short subjects. Some of those approved are for immediate release; all will be released within a few weeks. Pictures approved include:

The first certificate in the East was awarded to universal, which got Number 01 for its Mentone short, "Hits of Today." In Hollywood, Fox's "World Moves On" was given Number 1.

All of Hollywood's studios were continuing under a slower production pace in order to meet the demands of the new setup before submitting pictures to Mr. Breen's organization for approval.

The distributors in New York promised this week that exhibitors would not face any break in the flow of product.

Vincent G. Hart, of the MPPDA, on Monday assumed supervision of the production code regulations in the East. All pictures made in the East, in addition to foreign importations, will be submitted for approval.

Foreign product to be reviewed will include only those productions annexed for distribution in this country by MPPDA members.

Announcement made last week by distributors that they would permit any exhibitor to cancel a feature on the grounds of a bona fide local protest against its morality was received favorably in the field. Dispatches from Hollywood said producers estimated the step probably will cost more than $10,000,000. United Press quoted Hollywood executives of the Hays organization as saying that scores of films already released, which have been proscribed by church and other organizations and are eligible for cancellation, probably would not be shown in hundreds of towns.

New York leaders, however, discounted the estimated $10,000,000 cost, pointing out that while one distributor may lose a booking at one theatre because his picture is canceled, he stands to gain a booking at another house which has canceled a picture of the distributor's competitor.

Criticism was leveled against the cancellation decision by Allied States and by leaders in certain church quarters.

Reverend Dr. Sidney E. Goldstein, associate rabbi of the Free Synagogue, who represents American rabbis in the film movement, threw cold water on the idea. So did New England Catholic and Protestant churchmen, who decried the move as "a timid step forward" and declared it was "not a solution which strikes at the heart of the problem."

The cancellation privilege was described by Allied States as "a red herring," and "so vague as to be meaningless."

The new Interfaith Committee of Protestants, Jews and Catholics in New York said it was a step in the right direction, but it did not go far enough.

Hays Talks to Coast Producers

Studio executives representing all the large companies in the Association of Motion Picture Producers, the coast affiliates of the MPPDA, conferred late last week with Will H. Hays about working procedure of the program. They listened to an explanation by Mr. Hays and Mr. Breen of the technicalities of the Hollywood Production Code Administration.

Writers and directors were served with strict orders that there must be nothing in forthcoming pictures to offend the moral sense of anyone, while the staffs of virtually every studio were closeted in projection rooms minutely examining "rushes" and completed negatives for objectionable material.

Mr. Breen said all the studios seemed disposed to a surprising extent to comply with the new regulations. "Instead of arguing about certain changes, as might be expected in some cases, the studios are really 'leaning backwards' to meet the regulations of the administration," he said.

After viewing nearly 50 pictures—31 of which already have been given an approval certificate—Mr. Breen said he demanded changes in some, which production executives immediately ordered. He indicated that one film will be almost completely remade.

Prior to the producers' conference with Hays and Breen, all the studio heads were supplied with copies of a treatise on the industry, written by Bishop John J. Cantwell, of Los Angeles, and with copies of the results of a survey on the morality of films conducted by Reverend Father Daniel A. Lord, Catholic editor.

Bishop Cantwell indicted the films for "not only glorifying the harlot, but her gangster 'boy friends' as well," and laid much of the blame for the rising tide of resentment against the industry to a class of writers who went to Hollywood from New York at the advent of talkers in 1927.

Father Lord's survey, results of which were presented for the guidance of the producers, brought out that out of 133 productions released from January 15th, 1934, to May 15th, there were 107 major violations of sex morality. His report said:

26 of the 133 films had plots built on illicit love.

13 were based on plots or main episodes in which seduction is accomplished.

18 characters lived in open adultery.

31 murders were committed.

17 films presented gangsters in leading roles.

30 were suitable for children or adolescents.

The industry's self-regulatory machine had been in operation scarcely a full 24 hours when there were heard in Hollywood some whispered discussions of the possibility of proving that, as a result of self-censorship, there will be no further need for supporting the seven state censor boards and the 133 municipal boards in the United States and Canada, which, aside from the difficulties caused by their inconsistencies, cost the industry $5,000,000 yearly in fees for licenses.

It is expected that the industry also may prove to the dozens of unofficial groups viewing pictures the needlessness of continuing their activities.

State boards include those operating in Massachusetts, Kansas, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York and Florida.

The Federal Council of Churches interdenominational conference, held late last week at its headquarters at 105 East 22nd Street, New York, was called by the Reverend Samuel McCrea Calvert, secretary, and was attended by the official spokesmen of the Reformed Church in America, American Unitarian Association, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Quakers, Congregationalists, Salvation Army, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association and 13 others.

The delegates elected Reverend Dr. Worth M. Tippy to active charge of the campaign, and the Reverend Dr. Harold M. Robinson, Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, as chairman of the Council's Special Committee on Motion Pictures.

Forms of the Legion of Decency pledge, adopted with minor changes, will be circulated immediately to 100,000 ministers and through the religious press. Some of the church groups immediately will launch a campaign, but the official date for starting activities was set at October 21. The Special Committee was entrusted with promotion.

The conferees made it clear that their objective was to accomplish wholesome entertainment and instruction and was not linked to any attempt to establish federal or local censorship.

There will be no "white" or "black" lists used, as is the case in some Catholic dioceses.

Text of the Pledge

The Council reported a spontaneous demand from Protestants for copies of the pledge in bulk. Here is the pledge:

For Better Motion Pictures
DECLARATION OF PURPOSE
(Sign and give to your pastor or organization)*

I wish to join with other Protestants, cooperating with Catholics and Jews, in condemning vile and unwholesome moving pictures. I unite with all who protest against them as a grave menace to youth, to home life, to country, and to religion.

I condemn absolutely those salacious motion pictures which, with other degrading agencies, are corrupting public morals and promoting a sex mania in our land.

I shall do all that I can to arouse public opinion against the portrayal of vice as a normal condition of affairs, and against depicting criminals of any class as heroes and heroines, presenting their filthy philosophy of life as something acceptable to decent men and women.

I unite with all who condemn the display of suggestive advertisements on bill-boards, at theatre entrances and the favorable notices given to immoral motion pictures.

Considering these evils, I declare my purpose to remain away from all motion pictures which offend decency and Christian morality. I will try to induce others to do the same.

I make this protest in a spirit of self-respect, and with the conviction that the American public does not demand filthy pictures, but clean entertainment and educational features.

Name .....
Address .....

That there may be a united front, the pledge of the Legion of Decency has been used with only slight changes. Organizations and individuals are free to formulate their own pledges. The important thing is not the form of a pledge but to keep its purpose.

(Issued by the Federal Council of Churches, 105 East 22nd Street, New York)

*A duplicate copy of this Declaration to be retained by the signer.

Jewish support of the crusade came on Monday when Dr. Sidney Goldstein, in charge of film matters for American rabbis, announced that during the High Holy Days, rabbis of the country will be asked to enlist their 5,000,000 churchgoers "in the protest against pictures that are a menace to the moral life of every community." While Jews are opposed to censorship, Dr. Goldstein added, they "must insist on sanitation."

The Jews have not decided whether they will use pledge cards, but they have definitely decided not to invoke a general boycott against all pictures or all theatres, or against all theatres in a particular locality.

Dr. Goldstein denounced the Hays organization as failing "to protect the communities of America," as a result of which, he added, it has "forfeited the confidence of Catholics, Protestants and Jews alike."

Methodists, Lutherans Vote Support

The Methodist Episcopal Church—one of the largest of the Protestant groups, with a membership of more than 8,000,000—entered the campaign when the World Service Commission of the church, meeting in Chicago, ordered that the denomination's board of education distribute pledge cards to members. Headquarters for the campaign will be established in Chicago under Dr. Merle English.

At the same time, the power of 3,500 Lutheran churches, with a membership exceeding 8,500,000, was added to the tide of church opposition. This step was taken at the annual convention of the Associated Lutheran Charities, in Chicago, and was said to be certain of adoption by the national bodies.

Allied Complains; MPTOA Commends

The church crusade gave Allied States Association another opportunity to demand the resignation of Will Hays. On the other hand, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America condemned those who condemn the industry in emergencies.

"Every possible effort has been put forth from every source in this industry to bring about an amusement condition that is clean and in good taste," said Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president. "That is all that is expected of us because every interested party is in accord in that the theatre must go on."

"How any exhibitors, individually or as an organization, or in fact anyone who derives a livelihood out of the industry can condemn this industry on a wholesale basis as some of them have done, is entirely beyond my understanding," Mr. Kuykendall declared, in answering a statement sent to the trade press by national Allied headquarters at Washington, in which a spokesman for that independent exhibitor organization demanded the resignations of Mr. Hays, Charles C. Pettijohn and Carl E. Milliken, all MPPDA executives. Allied demanded such action "in the interests of the industry as a whole."

Allied urged its exhibitor members to contact the leaders of the boycott and ask them: "(a) to affirmatively approve good pictures as a balance to the proscribing of bad pictures; (b) to direct their efforts more especially against the producer-controlled theatres in order to hasten the desired result and free the industry of this terrible blight; and (c) to urge their adherents to patronize independent houses as against the producer-owned theatres."

Exhibitors Challenge Crusaders

Challenging the sincerity of the "reformers," Al Baker, manager of the Fox Theatre at Spokane, and Mrs. Gladys McArdle, owner of the Owl, Lebanon, Kans., demanded that they support clean films and not merely agitate for them.

"As a small town exhibitor," said Mrs. McArdle in a statement published in the Kansas City Star, "I have been following with interest the crusade being launched by churches to clean up the movies. No one despises a risque show more than I do, but if I booked the kind of shows the reformers say they want I would starve!

"Last winter, I booked, against my better judgment, 'Little Women.' I never saw a cleaner, better show, but did the advocates of clean shows come? They did not! And the picture took a nosedive equaled by practically all the clean shows I have booked.

"A pledge to boycott immoral shows is fine, but how about a pledge to attend shows they say they desire? If every person in my community who professes to desire clean shows would buy two tickets a month they could make the rotten shows unprofitable.

"If the churches are sincere in this movement, let them get back of the clean shows."

Baker Has Same Complaint

Mr. Baker's complaint was identical. He purchased space for a quarter-page ad in the Spokesman Review, Spokane, in which he described the situation thus:

"I'M SORE!

"On every side I hear the demand for 'Better' motion pictures . . . I do everything in my power to get the producers to make 'Better' pictures, that's part of my job.

"The producers are making 'Better' pictures—yet when one of them comes along, the public has a perverse way of showing their appreciation by lack of good attendance.

"What I want to know is . . . where are all those people who are always demanding that the movies get away from sex . . . and crime—and all the rest of what these self-appointed critics of the movies criticize most . . .

"If you self-appointed critics have attended the Fox Theatre this week to see 'Little Miss Marker' (Shirley Temple), your criticisms were answered, and you enjoyed as fine a piece of screen entertainment as has ever run through a projection machine.

"If you have not been here and you really do want what you ask for . . . you will go out singing the glad tidings in such loud and joyous tones that the theatre will not be able to handle the crowds . . . That's the only way we have of knowing your desires."

The paying customers have started a discussion all their own over the morals of motion pictures, in the "voice of the people" columns of the country's newspapers.

One picturegoer suggested that films be segregated for adult and children performances, types to be determined by church listings.

Most of the readers demand that the producers "take the sin out of cinema."

They mentioned censorship with disfavor, although, as a whole, the desire for clean pictures was expressed.

A boycott against motion pictures on the whole is unjust, according to a consensus.

One significant point brought out is the fear of many citizens that the professional type of "blue-nose" reformer, who has been hibernating since the prohibition debacle, will soon return.

An unusual reaction was that of a New York Times reader who said it is his understanding that the church campaign is intended "to raise the tone of the movies, not necessarily that they should all be fit for children to see, but so the public may acquire a taste for pictures really worthwhile not only from the standpoint of morality, but of artistry and good taste as well."

The New York Daily News, read by some 2,500,000, set out to determine the extent to which the motion picture harms the juvenile mind, having heard much of late to that effect from the churchmen and sociologists, and uplifters of the type of Dr. William Harrison Short, of the Motion Picture Research Council. The results were contradictory to all the charges.

Visiting Washington Square, in the confines of which may be found a cross-section of New York's childhood, a Daily News reporter asked youngsters this question: "Have you acquired any harmful ideas from the movies?" The replies, from children ranging in age from 14 to 17, were unanimously in the negative.

Catholic Press Explains Crusade

Standing solidly behind the Legion of Decency is the powerful Catholic press of the country—principally weeklies published exclusively for parishioners' consumption. As a unit, practically, they are against censorship.

Typical of the expressions voiced by these periodicals—and their big editorial issue of the day is the motion picture crusade—is that of the Brooklyn Tablet, which admits no desire "to destroy the motion picture business," but an insistence that wholesomeness in screen entertainment supplant vulgarity.

"We are not prohibitionists; we are not prudes; we are not asking a national censorship; we are not demanding the impossible," editorialized the Tablet. "We are attacking indecency and vileness, and the better producers know what we mean. We believe that in insisting upon ethics—which every good business has in its program—we are doing a service not only for morality and civic progress, but for legitimate business."

"Intoxicated by Returns"

Reverend Father Robert Woods, editorial mouthpiece of the Catholic Index, and reputed to be an authority on the screen, the theatre and books, in paying tribute to motion pictures as "one of the greatest industries of modern times," declared that the purveyors of the industry had been intoxicated by the almost fabulous monetary returns for their labor, and had reached a stage "where practically all the higher considerations of art and decency had been tossed to the winds." He insisted that "dirty motion pictures must go."

The Commonweal warned that censorship will come "if the industries concerned will not or cannot take their last chance to restrain themselves." This Catholic publication also holds that most of its churchgoers do not favor a sweeping and drastic censorship law.

"Our most competent motion picture stars have been guilty of endowing chastity with glamour," declared Reverend Father Gerard B. Donnelly, S.J., critic for the Catholic Review of America. The Legion, he added, made it clear at the outset that it is not attempting to ban sex from the screen, nor is it attempting censorship.

Later in the week, Father Donnelly wrote in America that, taken as a whole, some 277 new motion picture titles announced for the coming season, "offer proof that Hollywood has changed its spots and henceforth will be known as Spotless Town."

Laemmle, Pickford, DeMille Talk

Opinions as to the cause and effect are being voiced daily by pioneers of filmdom.

Carle Laemmle, Universal's president, placed the blame on the public for encouraging suggestive motion pictures and warned exhibitors not to take it for granted that clean pictures won't get by.

Mary Pickford, speaking at the Chicago World's Fair, admitted the need existed for a cleanup. She said parents should lend a hand in selecting their children's entertainment, but held the opinion that "boycotts are dangerous."

"The pendulum has been swinging too far in the wrong direction," Miss Pickford added, "but

CHURCHES ARE ACTIVE IN FIELD

I hope this present demand for a housecleaning does not make the same mistake."

Cecil Blount DeMille also expressed fear that the movement may go too far. Mr. DeMille, like Mr. Laemmle, blamed the cause for the crusade on the public, because "the producers gave the people risque films for the reason that they went to see these films and paid more to see them than they paid for others."

Eddie Cantor, a Samuel Goldwyn star, placed the blame on the producer. "There has been too much concentration in Hollywood on how much can be gotten away with," he declared. "The tide has turned now, although I really feel we have nothing to fear from a fair and intelligent censorship. But, will it be that kind of a censorship?"

"Clean Films Will Get By"

Mr. Laemmle advised theatre owners not to take for granted that clean pictures under the new standard will not be successful at the box-office. "Don't let the church drive get you down," he warned. Mr. Laemmle said that on the infrequent occasions when his company had "slipped," exhibitors "made no more money than when we didn't" on the remainder of the 1,400 features produced by Universal.

"Maybe the drive will awaken all of us to responsibilities in picture making which we never realized were ours," he continued. "Let's get back of this class of product with all the vim and vitality and guts that made the picture business a factor in the world's entertainment program. We'll all be happier for it.

"The church as a whole is very decent. It has its fanatics and its nuts, but so have we."

Two Groups Seek Freedom of Films

"Intelligent opposition" is promised the church crusade by a new group of laymen banded together in New York under the impressive corporate title of the Association for the Preservation of the Freedom of Stage and Screen.

Fearing censorship in their war against films, the National Council of Freedom from Censorship, a branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, called upon the church groups to clarify their position on censorship.

Juster Peter Schmuck signed a certificate of incorporation filed at Albany, N. Y., for the new Association for the Preservation of the Freedom of the Screen, founded by one I. Robert Broder, attorney, of 1560 Broadway, New York. Mr. Broder's headquarters are in the Bond Building on Broadway, a structure which houses motion picture and theatrical interests almost exclusively.

Mr. Broder explained that no layman's voice had been sought by the various church groups, and, therefore, his association will conduct a nation-wide referendum to get the critical opinion of theatregoers. He fears federal censorship, but will campaign nationally for "entertaining films in good taste and of adult standard." Voluntary contributions will carry on the work.

Other incorporators of the Association are: Louis Greenberg, 140 East 46th Street, New York; Juliet Levy, 1215 Grand Concourse, Bronx, and Minna Edith Zelinka, 2676 Grand Concourse, Bronx.

So far as is known none of the principals has a standing of importance in the industry.

Possibility of another counter - offensive loomed when the National Council of Freedom from Censorship issued a warning that censorship might come from the campaign of the churches. "Militant opposition" to such federal legislation was voiced by the Council in a letter to the leading church groups participating in the crusade.

Signing the statement were: Barrett H. Clark, playwright and publisher; Elmer Rice, playwright; Mary Ware Dennett, sociologist; Morris L. Ernst, lawyer; Dr. Louis I. Harris, former New York Health Commissioner; William A. Orr, editor, and James Rorty, writer.

Newsreels Exercising Caution

Evidence that the newsreel staffs in the field have been instructed by their editors in New York to exercise caution in covering news happenings developed Monday when none of the news cameramen covered the funeral of John Lazia, slain Kansas City politician and alleged racketeer, who was given the largest and most elaborate funeral hereabout in years. One of the staff cameramen explained that while once this would have been considered a colorful subject, at least for local consumption, occurrences of this nature and anything else which might be construed as glorifying crime are definitely taboo as newsreel material.

Further Condemnation from Rome

Osservatore Romano, Vatican City newspaper, again voiced disapproval of much of Hollywood's film output, condemning the pictures in vigorous, plain-spoken language and indicating that Vatican authorities, including the Pope himself, intend to continue their support of the campaign in America.

A "special blessing and the strongest encouragement" was extended by Pope Pius XI to the Bishops participating in the Legion of Decency during an audience last Saturday with Bishop James J. Hartley, of Columbus, Ohio, who said the Pope expressed his "delight" at the move against indecent pictures.

Church Activities in the Field

Independent of the proceedings being conducted nationally by the main church leaders, clergymen were continuing local activities. Some of the week's developments in this connection follow:

Atlanta reported the launching of a Catholic campaign throughout Georgia.

At Allentown, Pa., Msgr. Henry Grimmelsman told the Catholic Central Society that the Legion had won its fight.

Boston exhibitors of Allied States voted for clean pictures. The Catholics decided to effect a boycott against individual pictures beginning in July, unless Will Hays appoints someone to be responsible for films shown.

Buffalo's Better Films Council voiced opposition to a boycott, while the Erie County Board of Supervisors joined the "purge the movies" drive.

In Chicago, Cardinal Mundelein and Bishop Sheil endorsed a Legion radio broadcasting series to further the move.

Cleveland first-runs were unhurt, but neighborhood owners reported an adverse effect on box-offices.

The press in Cincinnati continued to engage in a heated controversy over the crusade.

"Hollywood Uncensored" is the title of a new rotogravure feature in the Des Moines Sunday Register, showing little known photographs of stars and timed simultaneously with the campaign.

R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, former MPTOA president, was appointed referee to decide for Dover, N. J., organizations whether future pictures shall be shown or banned.

Englewood, N. J., now has a "white" list of films, published by the Catholic church there.

The Hamilton, Ohio, Evening Journal-News will not accept any advertising or publicity on pictures branded as objectionable.

At Hartford, Conn., Bishop Maurice McAuliffe composed a letter to all Connecticut parishes, requesting support for the Legion.

The campaign was making progress in Kansas, Bishop Johannes having issued a Legion call.

In Kansas City, the Presbyterians joined the Catholics to boycott objectionable films. Individual discrimination will be promoted.

The Luther League, in convention at Lakeside, Ohio, endorsed the drive.

Los Angeles reported that the California Parent-Teachers Association, having 185,000 members, had allied itself with the movement. They requested "family nights" every Friday and Saturday and the elimination of double featuring.

Decide on Lists

Catholics and Protestants at Marietta, Ohio, decided to issue "black" and "white" lists.

Lutherans in Milwaukee were asked by their leaders to join the crusade, following the formation of the first local Legion of Decency.

New Orleans exhibitors were planning to present their side of the situation in the religious press.

Patrick Cardinal Hayes started the Catholic movement in New York. A pastoral was read at all masses in the diocese last Sunday asking pastors to prepare their parishioners for the organization early in October of a Legion of Decency. The Cardinal said that the church must combat motion pictures that tend to undermine moral laws and tend to counteract the influence of the schools on the minds of the young. His Eminence said there would be no check on "legitimate" pleasure. Some 367 Catholic churches will be enlisted.

To Start Door-to-Door Canvass

Both Catholic and Protestant clergymen in scores of churches endorsed the crusade from their pulpits last Sunday, and school teachers of Manhattan and Queens pledged their support. Independent of the Cardinal's proceeding, the new Interfaith Committee of New York Catholics, Protestants and Jews decided to make a house-to-house campaign for pledges throughout the city. The purpose of this action, according to Reverend Father Joseph McCaffrey, spokesman for the committee, is to enlist non-churchgoers as well as churchgoers.

In Omaha, church campaigning was said to have caused the closing of the Paramount theatre. The True Voice, Omaha Catholic paper, started to print "black" and "white" lists.

The board of education at Palisades Park, N. J., voted for a film cleanup.

Philadelphia theatre owners abandoned their plan to close their theatres in protest against the local Catholic boycott. At the same time 1,000,000 Philadelphia Protestants were urged to join the crusade.

The Portland, Oregon, Motion Picture Council was organized to campaign for a better moral tone in films.

At Richmond, Va., the Baptist Young People's Union of Virginia followed the Presbyterians and Methodists in joining the movement.

Archbishop Glennon, St. Louis, estimated that 300,000 Catholics in his diocese have signed Legion pledges.

Presbyterians in Washington, assembled at Seattle, voted in favor of active participation.

Tampa, Fla., sent 1,000 pledge cards to the Legion.

Various church representatives started a drive at Wilmington, Del.

LONDON REGAINING EXPORT PRESTIGE

Universal's Decision to Move European Headquarters From Paris Follows United Artists' Action; What Quota Means

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Announcement that Universal is to move its European headquarters from Paris to London is significant, following a similar statement of policy from United Artists. There seems no doubt that London is about to regain something of the pre-eminence as an export center which it lost during, and as a result of, the War.

In pre-1914 days practically every American concern conducted the whole of its export trade, with the exception of that with the American continent, through its London offices. Similarly, what trade the Continent did with America was effected through London, which also acted as a recognized exchange center for trade among Continental countries, selling French films to Denmark and Swedish films to France and sending the film output of the whole world to the East.

Universal's action is in one way even more significant than United's. Joe Schenck said that the deciding factor in his case was the desire to utilize the capabilities of an exceptional executive, Murray Silverstone. Universal is moving its personnel as well as offices from Paris and Max Friedland will function as a distinct unit, in separate offices from Universal British Pictures, Ltd. It is coming to London because it regards London as the best European film capital.

Quota Is Still News

More impressive official figures from the Board of Trade this week showed that distributors during the year ended March 31 last carried a quota of British films amounting to 27.85% of their output. The official quota was only 17%, and it is pointed out that, in terms of features, the figures mean that the exhibitor has been offered sixteen British productions where he legally was entitled to only ten.

Board of Trade statistics are concerned with footage; exhibitors are interested in entertainment values. When, as at the present moment, one finds responsible theatre owners discussing whether they shall jeopardize their licenses by refusing to show some of the British quota films, it is painfully obvious that percentages do not explain everything.

B.I.P. Story Lineup

Immediate story plans announced by Walter Mycroft, director of productions for British International Pictures, indicate that the semi-historical drama is likely to remain in favor with our major concerns. The biggest feature in the new list is "Abdul Hamid", an original by Robert Neumann, script by Roger Burford, which is to picture incidents in the reign of the last Turkish autocrat.

Edward Cahn, from Hollywood, is to direct "Search" for BIP. The psychological effect of war experience on a highly strung musician is the theme. Paul Perez and Jack Davis are working on the script.

"My Song Goes Round the World" is the third BIP scheduled. Josef Schmidt, famous German radio star, has arrived at Elstree for the lead, and Jack Barty also has been signed.

La Plante for the Stage

Laura La Plante, recently married to Irving Asher of Warner-First National, is to star in a stage production, "Admirals All", written by Ian Hay (Major Hay-Beith) and Stephen King-Hall, the broadcaster.

"Don Juan" Exteriors

Big exteriors for "The Private Life of Don Juan" were shot in exceptionally favorable weather conditions and, therefore, on fast time, and the film shortly will be in the cutting room.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," Roland Brown directing Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon, will follow immediately on the floor and at the same time Zoltan Korda will start interiors for "Kongo Raid," for which African exteriors are complete. Paul Robeson and Nina Mae McKinney are leads.

George Graves, veteran star of British musical comedy, has been added to the cast of the BIP musical "Mr. Cinders," which Frederick Zelnick is directing.

Pizor Fete Hears Shutdown Averted

Philadelphia exhibitors on Monday night tendered a testimonial banquet to Lewen Pizor, retiring president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. At the dinner it developed that a plan to shut down theatres on a wholesale scale in Philadelphia in protest against the blanket boycott ordered there by Cardinal Dougherty has been canceled, one day ahead of the original two weeks' notice to theatre employees.

Charles Segall, incoming MPTO president, told the diners that he would continue the fight against closing of theatres. Joseph C. Bernhard, general manager of the Warner theatre circuit, explained that the change of decision regarding the theatre closings had been made in view of numerous petitions from clubs, chambers of commerce and business men, and also because of the hardships which would be passed on to employees as a result.

More than 150 exhibitors were present. Mr. Pizor was presented with a watch by the MPTO and a bag from distributors.

Paramount Moves To Reorganizing

Several factors contributed this week to the progress being made by the management of Paramount Publix in effecting complete reorganization of the corporate structure, bringing the company out of the maze of financial tangles which resulted from bankruptcy.

Closer Understanding Reported

The various groups interested in the reorganization were reported proceeding in closer understanding than has prevailed for some time. At the same time, Paramount officials have not indicated that this necessarily indicated the company ready to move for final reorganization, but rather that it points to a desire for as much cooperation as may be effected in view of conflicting points of view.

Another factor is the revelation that Paramount's cash position stands at $15,500,000. Auditors recently completed this report for the debtor corporation's trustees and their findings bear out the statements made by Frank A. Vanderlip of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Paramount bankers, three weeks ago when he sailed for Europe.

A financial executive this week summed up the Paramount situation as follows:

"I think it entirely fair to say that bondholders, debenture holders and common stockholders now lean toward a pretty well established conviction that there is no birthday cake to be cut up in huge slices and that avoidance of disturbances in advancing plans for reorganization is to be desired from all angles."

Kuhn, Loeb Plan

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. is reported to have assembled in what is termed "rough form" a considerable compilation of statistics bearing on reorganization and it is expected that in about 10 days this plan will be ready for discussion.

The three Paramount trustees have been made parties to a revised action against the 1931-32 directorate to recover $13,600,000 spent in theatre acquisitions.

Meanwhile, in New Orleans, reorganization of the Saenger interests under the new bankruptcy laws is sought in a petition filed in Federal Court by three unsecured creditors, the Blum Real Estate Co., Item Publishing Co. and the Baldwin Hardware Co. E. V. Richards, who has been trustee under the old bankruptcy law, has been named temporary trustee.

One-year extensions on two Paramount Publix theatre partnership deals have been arranged by the company's trustees. Operators who have been given renewals on last year's contracts are George Trendle and Willard Patterson, handling the Detroit houses, and Lucas and Jenkins of Atlanta. All other theatre operating partnership contracts are being reviewed by the trustees' advisory committee.

It is said the trustees prefer to continue present temporary partnership contracts pending reorganization of the company.

In Washington the Federal Trade Commission granted San Francisco Paramount Corporation permission to issue $1,652,000 first mortgage bonds which are to be issued to Granada Realty Co.'s bondholders' protective committee for the transfer of a real estate title. San Francisco Paramount Corporation is a successor to Granada Realty Corporation.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A casual glance through the vital statistics of prominent American churchmen reveals a total of 140 years spent in the priesthood by the four Bishops who constitute the Catholic Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures, the steering board of the Catholics' motion picture crusade which is now quite a topic of conversation in quarters here and there. They have worn the Roman collar for an average of 35 years each, their combined ages totaling some 240 years, an average of 60 each.

Two of the Bishops were born in the adopted land of St. Patrick in Ireland, the other two are of American stock. Little known, except in their own dioceses, are the facts in the following "thumbnail" sketches of these four prelates whose influence on the studios of Hollywood has brought some disquieting effects:

Archbishop John T. McNicholas, of Cincinnati; born at Kiltimagh, Ireland, on December 15th, 1877; organized the Holy Name (anti-profanity) Society, composed of 1,250,000 Catholic men; 33 years a priest.

Bishop John Francis Noll, of Fort Wayne, Ind., where he was born on January 25th, 1875; a Rotarian and a writer; 36 years a priest.

Bishop John Joseph Cantwell, of Los Angeles; born at Limerick, Ireland, December 1st, 1874; Bishop-assistant to the Papal Throne, holder of the Golden Cross of Tepeyac and a Knight Commander of the Holy Sepulchre; 35 years in the priesthood.

Bishop Hugh Charles Boyle, of Pittsburgh; born at Johnstown, Pa., the scene of the famous flood, on October 8th, 1873; prominent for years in school supervision; 36 years a priest.

A discussion of Broadway's perennial subject: the unemployed actor, brought to the mind of Mark Hellinger Molly Picon's favorite yarn about a Jewish actor who once earned $500 a week on the Yiddish stage. Things became very tough, however, and last winter he had to accept a part for $25 a week.

One night after a show, the actor stepped into the Royal Cafe in the heart of Jewish Second Avenue. An acquaintance started to bait him.

"I don't understand this," chided the annoyer. "You once got $500 a week, and now you work for $25. What's the idea?"

"Well," replied the actor, "$25 a week is not a bad salary these days. Besides, in the second act, I eat two salami sandwiches!"

Adolphe Jean Menjou, actor, was fired unceremoniously, they say, from his Cornell College theatrical society as an incompetent. They are now planning to name it for him.

A GLORIOUS picture of opportunity, wealth, chivalry in the motion picture business was painted by Samuel Lionel Rothafel for the benefit of some college graduates who assembled a few days ago at Newark's large Bamberger department store to hear leaders of various professions tell how to choose a career. It was a promotional stunt, summer dry goods business being what it is.

The fact that Mr. Rothafel is still unemployed in his chosen profession of directing de luxe motion picture theatres did not deter the Bambergers from asking him to tell the collegians how they might get a job in the show business.

It is all very simple according to the Roxy formula: merely "get on the wagon and get a good seat."

"There are opportunities in show business for jobs that pay $50,000, $100,000 and $150,000, but they are rare," explained Mr. Rothafel in his best optimistic mood. "If I could only get a $50,000 man, I would be very, very happy," he added.

Roxy probably meant that he would be very, very happy if he could only get a $50,000 job.

Having told all about the opportunities offered in the show business, "the greatest showman on earth" launched an open forum for the college boys.

Question by Graduate: Is backstage life as polluted as fiction presents it to us?

Answer by Roxy: The atmosphere back stage is as wholesome as you ever could expect it to be. Those young ladies who comprise the ballet and the Rockette Chorus, are ladies. I wouldn't be afraid to have any one of them come to my home and sit at my table. (Mr. Rothafel's New York home phone number is Endicott 2-3600.)

"And the stage hands," he continued, "rough and ready as they are, become chivalrous—it is a beautiful thing to see them help those youngsters on and off the stage and provide chairs for them if they see them standing too long."

Atwater Kent has developed a robot radio which plugs in only those programs the listener wants to hear. The machine looks much like any other large all-wave radio, except that an electric clock is set into the front panel. A series of small holes around the clock face mark the quarter periods. Into these apertures are plugged cords much after the manner of a miniature switchboard. The radio owner decides what programs he wants and plugs the cords to suit. The receiver then brings in the desired programs at the appointed hour without further attention. Now the bridge game may go on uninterrupted.

Comedian Phil Baker proved to Jimmy Star that Hollywood has changed since the silent days. On the set of Phil's new picture, "Gift of Gab," the director sneezed—and there was absolute silence.

"A few years ago," Phil explained, "nine yes-men would have yelled gesundheit!"

EDDIE DOWLING'S newest idea for aiding the development of a state theatre system for the drama is to import the famous Russian Ballet for a tour of the country. Besides, thinks Eddie, it would foster more goodwill than a score of ambassadors. Mr. Dowling, as reported in this pillar last week, has been learning a lot about the Soviet-subsidized drama from Maxim Litvinov, Russia's Ambassador to Washington.

Smilin' Eddie's contact with Litvinov was firmly established by his good friend, Franklin Roosevelt. The political news-writing combination of Drew Pearson and Robert Allen now tell how it happened.

It appears that the President had asked Dowling to come to the White House to meet the Soviet Envoy, but Eddie arrived late, and Roosevelt, Litvinov, Bullitt and other State dignitaries had already retired to the Lincoln study for important conferences.

Mrs. Roosevelt, however, ushered Dowling in. And the President interrupted the discussion of debts and whatnot to give him this introduction:

"M. Litvinov, I want you to meet a very close friend of mine, a theatrical producer and an artist, who is interested in the art of your country. I don't know what he has in mind, but I want you to know if he comes to Russia that he comes with my very best wishes and my blessing."

"Mr. President," replied Litvinov, "Mr. Dowling is an artist. And in Russia we welcome an artist and give him the same reception even if he does not come with so gracious an introduction. Now, if Mr. Dowling were a banker or a businessman, he might need your introduction."

We of the modern analytical motion picture trade press, geared to the speed of these scientific times and to the ever-changing demands of a fickle public on the box-offices of our exhibitor readers, felt the urge to answer the call of primitive journalism of the backwoods when we read the other day this refreshingly candid editor's note in the Gallatin County News of rural Kentucky:

On account of the Warsaw Water Works advertisement last week we were compelled to leave out nearly all of our county news. This could not be avoided, but we will try to make up for this a little later.

Of course, you all know, or should know, that we have to make a living or steal. We do want to live, and we are afraid we would be caught stealing. Advertising is the only way we have of getting money. So bear with us and everything will come out all right.

Producers Taking Precautions As Nine Features Are Put in Work; Script Writers Careful

By VICTOR SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

NINE new features were placed before the cameras last week as against twelve for the preceding week, indicating producers are taking extra precaution with story treatments before starting.

Only five productions were completed and turned over to the cutting rooms.

The total number of features in work last week was 32 against 29 for the same period last year.

Warner's three new ones are "The Perfect Week-end" featuring James Cagney, Alan Jenkins, Arthur Aylesworth and Robert Barrett; "Six Day Bicycle Race," starring Joe E. Brown, with support of Maxine Doyle, Frank McHugh, Gordon Westcott and Arthur Aylesworth, and "I'll Sell Anything," featuring Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak, Claire Dodd, Roscoe Karns, Harry Tyler and Russell Hopton.

Many in Work

Sol Lesser started "The Return of Chandu" with Bela Lugosi, Maria Alba, Clara Kimball Young, Lionel Atwill, Jr., Phyllis Ludwig, Lucien Prival and others.

Columbia started "That's Gratitude" with Frank Craven, Arthur Byron, Helen Ware, Sheila Manners and Mary Carlisle.

Fox started "Charlie Chan in London" with Warner Oland, Drue Leyton, Ray Milland, Madge Bellamy, Mona Barrie, Alan Mowbray, Walter A. Johnson and David Torrence.

Universal started "Wake Up and Dream," starring Russ Columbo, with support of June Knight, Roger Pryor, Andy Devine and Henry Armetta.

Monogram started "The Wolf Hunters," with John Wayne, Noah Beery, Jr. and Sr., Verna Hillie, Iris Lancaster, Robert Frazer, Earl Dwire and Ed Parker.

Mascot, after delaying the production of "Young and Beautiful" several times, for the availability of the Wampas Baby Stars, finally got under way with all 13, and with William Haines, Judith Allen, Joseph Cawthorn, Ted Fio Rito, Franklin Pangborn and Vince Barnett.

Pictures completed were "Four Walls" and "Chained," at MGM; "Among the Missing," Columbia; "A Lost Lady," Warner; "Wanted," Fox, and "The Gay Divorce," Radio.

Indicative of the fact that studios are slowing up in putting new pictures to work, is the aggregate total of pictures in the final stages of preparation ready to start. Within the fortnight, 20 go to the stages, which is about around 10 below the normal figure for this division at this time.

Le Pera to Do New Spanish Series

Alfredo Le Pera, writer of originals and lyrics for Spanish language pictures, has been signed by Frank Z. Clemente and Lewis Maisell to prepare the story, dialogue and lyrics for the first of a series of six pictures which will be produced in the east by Latin Artists Pictures Corporation. Mr. Le Pera has long been associated with Carlos Gardel, Argentine star, both having completed "Luces de Buenos Aires," "Esperame," "Melodia de Arrabal" and "Questa Abajo."

RKO-RADIO announces the early presentation of a short feature production of such distinction that it heralds a new era in motion picture art. Filmed for the first time in the amazing new Technicolor Process, it floods the screen with rich and glowing color harmonies never before achieved .... blends story, drama, laughter, music and hues into something so lovely and utterly enchanting that a beholder is eager to see it again and again.

". . . a remarkably fine piece of work has been done in bringing to life . . . 'Of Human Bondage' . . . a picture worth seeing . . . the picture is not one you will forget in a hurry . . ."

MEMPHIS PRESS SCIMITAR

"I do not know how to tell you about 'Of Human Bondage . . . extravagant praise would be an offense to its delicacy, and anything less would be inadequate. Nothing so sensitive and so personally real has ever been put on the screen."

The above chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of twelve key cities during the three-weeks period from June 2 to June 16, 1934, with the receipts for the same cities in the following three-weeks period, from June 23 to July 7. In each city, the total gross for the earlier period is taken as 100 per cent. The white bar indicates this figure. The black bar shows the comparative gross for the more recent period.

PRODUCERS CLOSING CURRENT SCHEDULES

John Auer Will Make Six Classics; Chesterfield-Invincible Announces 18 Titles for New Season; Others Active

Production on the West Coast this week started humming as the companies set about the task of clearing up pictures remaining on the 1933-34 schedules and putting into work the initial offerings on the new season programs. At the same time distributors in New York were announcing final plans for 1934-35.

Auer To Make Six Classics

Arrangements have been made whereby John H. Auer, former director for Paramount and Universal, will produce a series of six classics. "Rip Van Winkle" will be the first. Distribution will be handled by DuWorld, and all production will take place in New York.

Chesterfield-Invincible this week announced its 1934-35 list of 18 titles, including four specials, as follows: "The Dartmouth Murders," by Clifford Orr; "The Curtain Falls," by Karl Brown; "Circumstantial Evidence," by Tom Terriss; "Just Off Broadway," by Charles Belden; "The Ghost Walks," by Charles Belden; "Port of Lost Dreams," by Robert Ellis; "The World Accuses," by George Morrison; "A Song in My Heart," by June Webster; "Fragments," by Will Fiske; "My Son Is Yours," by Charles Belden; "For Love or Money," by Jack Thompson; "The Square Triangle," by Ernest Tye; "Hell to Pay," by Larry Wilkins; "As Youth Desires," by Raymond Stone; "A Girl Must Live," by Wentworth Barrie; "Condemned to Live," by Henri Ferval; "The Dawn Express," by Claude Hendricks; "The Hidden Sin," by Sonia Baron.

Clearing its decks of the last of the present season's product, Columbia is busy on its production program for 1934-35. "One Night of Love," the first for the new season, is completed, and the studio is now at work on "Broadway Bill," "The Girl Friend," "That's Gratitude," "Spring 3100," "Sure Fire," "$25 an Hour," "Eight Bells" and "The Depths Below."

Fox Completes Two

Fox was well under way on its 1934-35 product. "The World Moves On" and "Servants' Entrance" have been completed, and "Marie Gallante" is before the cameras. These and five others will be delivered by Winfield Sheehan personally.

Thirteen one-reel novelties will be produced by Ideal Pictures for the new season. Four of these, "Camera Thrills," "Happy Daze," "Strange Hobbies" and "Something for Nothing," have been completed.

Imperial Distributing, through William M. Pizor, has signed Edgar A. Guest, poet, to supply 13 poems for a series of shorts to be known as "Poetic Gems." Cy Braunstein will supervise production.

The popular radio serial, "Chandu," is to be brought to the screen by Sol Lesser under the title "The Return of Chandu," and will star Bela Lugosi in the role of Chandu. The story will be released as a complete seven-reel feature with eight two-reel episodes to follow, and also as a serial in 12 episodes.

Short Color Series for Orient

Grant H. Stone, heading the newly organized Prizmatic Productions, Inc., using the Cinecolor process, has planned as his initial production effort, the filming of a color short series for distribution in the Orient.

RKO Radio Pictures announced that, in association with Pioneer Pictures, it will produce "The Three Musketeers" in the new Technicolor process. Francis Lederer will play the role of D'Artagnan, made famous by Douglas Fairbanks. Plans are to start production October 1.

George Stout and Ben Cohen of Romance Productions, Inc., were in New York this week for conferences with Harry Thomas of First Division on distribution of "Young Eagles," a Boy Scout serial recently completed by Romance. First Division will handle the picture in 60 per cent of the territories and it will be sold on a state rights basis for the remainder.

Universal will add several pictures to the current cycle of musicals with three already nearing completion and two more to go into production within the next eight weeks. Those currently in work are "Romance in the Rain," "Wake Up and Dream" and "Gift of Gab."

Warner Brothers announced that Rudy Vallee has signed a starring contract. The company plans to feature him in the "most elaborate of all the musical pictures that have come from their studios since '42nd Street' brought musicals back into public favor."

Gaumont Lines Up New Series of 12

Gaumont-British Pictures of America, headed by Arthur A. Lee, will release immediately a pre-season group of 12 features, to be marketed as the "Select 12," and comprising the following:

"Along Came Sally," starring "Cicely" (Cicely Courtneidge) and Sam Hardy; "Channel Crossing," with Constance Cummings and Matheson Lang; "Orders Is Orders," starring James Gleason and Charlotte Greenwood; "The Murder Party," with Leslie Banks and Jane Baxter; "Friday the 13th," to star Jessie Matthews, Frank Lawton and Ursula Jeans, and "Dick Turpin," with Victor McLaglen and Jane Carr.

The second half will consist of: "Strike!" starring Leslie Banks and Carol Goodner; "The Woman in Command," to star "Cicely" and Edward Everett Horton; "Sleeping Car," with Madeleine Carroll and Ivor Novello; "Just Smith," with Tom Walls and Anne Grey; "What! A Boy?" with Edward Everett Horton, Leslie Henson and Albert Burdon, and "The Arson Ring," starring Leslie Banks and Anne Grey.

These productions are in addition to the 1934-35 schedule already announced. All have been completed and are ready for booking.

Meanwhile, Mr. Lee denied that Mundus Pictures, which is affiliated with United Artists, had acquired distribution rights in America to all Gaumont product.

George W. Weeks, in charge of Gaumont and Gainsborough distribution in the west, arrived in New York this week for home office conferences. At the same time Mr. Lee added Rudolph Bach to the New York sales division to handle the Metropolitan territory.

Word was received on Tuesday from the Gaumont studios in London that Lothar Mendes has been signed to direct two features for next season, titled "King of the Diamonds" and "Anna Karenina," from the Tolstoy novel. Madeleine Carroll and Conrad Veidt will be co-starred.

Weber with Laboratory

John Weber, former general sales manager of Majestic, has joined Producers Laboratories, Inc., headed by Harry Glickman, as treasurer and general sales manager.

The Daily Press on Decency

OBVIOUSLY the motion picture is still the world's best story, and grave though many of the problems of the day may be, there is assurance of a depth of public interest in the screen that continues to assure it dominance among the amusement media of the world. The current issues of the campaign crystalized into the Legion of Decency movement have been receiving and continue to receive more widespread and original editorial attention than any other great national concern of the day and certainly well near as much attention as the Blue Eagle revolution in industry commanded.

Motion Picture Herald has been compiling typical newspaper comment, from journals great and small, a cross section of the press of the nation, presented here and in subsequent pages.

Newspaper editorial attitudes include flat approval of the campaign, approval qualified by insistence that there shall be also organized support of good pictures, and lastly flat disapproval of the campaign. It is interesting to observe a wide tendency to relieve the exhibitor of responsibility. That is understandable for a number of reasons—including the fact that the exhibitor is, for each newspaper, the head of local enterprise, which is to be supported. All of which is very well, for every exhibitor's friend is a friend of the industry.

One poignant observation comes to one who has waded this river of attention to the screen—the fact that the evidences in print show the industry to be equipped much more effectively to tell the press about productions and entertainment than about the great world institution of the screen itself. —TERRY RAMSAYE

DETROIT NEWS, JUNE 28: The conscience of the motion picture industry will remain active only while aroused by failure of receipts. If vigilance relaxes, the postponements will end and the old flood of dirty pictures will start all over again. . . .

LOS ANGELES NEWS, June 25: Giving the decent producers credit for what they have always done to exclude nasty stuff, the people have little faith in the others. They will wait for the storm to blow over in the expectation of returning to their wallow.

CHICAGO AMERICAN, JUNE 29: Pass beyond the Eastern fringe of States and the voting in favor of good, clean fun and nice dramatic action is as impressive as Mr. Roosevelt's totals in a straw vote. . . .

NEW YORK HERALD-TRIBUNE, JUNE 30: Hitherto the only index to national taste that the promoters have consulted has been the box office, the most eccentric and misleading of all barometers. They now have a warning in the movement initiated by the Catholic Church and supported by Protestants, Jews and public welfare organizations of all kinds, which they will try to circumvent at their peril. . . .

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE, JUNE 23: It is fortunate that there were leaders and organizations ready to direct individual protest into one potent demand. It is unfortunate that it can be done only this way. For this is bound to be sporadic. . . .

CHICAGO TRIBUNE, JUNE 25: The head most clearly seen to be hardest rapped is that of the producer to whom salaciousness is the main motive, with all other considerations secondary. . . .

MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL APPEAL, JUNE 23: Cardinal Mundelein and his associates in the Catholic church are saying what a great many other people besides are thinking. . . .

PHILADELPHIA RECORD, JUNE 26: The big motion picture producers must heed this timely warning if they are to maintain their control of the industry. . . .

ST. LOUIS STAR-TIMES, JUNE 25: Get rid of block-booking, establish a massed public opinion against the salacious appeal, and there will be a thorough-going reformation, valuable in the end to the industry itself. . . .

BOSTON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, JUNE 26: The voice of the box office is the one thing that the film producers will listen to. Repeatedly they have proved their ability to circumvent every effort to induce them to stop making pictures that the public would pay money to see. . . .

SPRINGFIELD, MO., NEWS & LEADER, JUNE 21: We do feel that the church organizations are not only justified in their united action . . . much good will come of it. . . .

CINCINNATI POST, JUNE 26: The Ohio Board of Censors has made a complete failure of its job. . . . The Leagues of Decency have an opportunity to do a much better job by creating in the public mind a desire to exercise mass judgment against bad movies and in favor of good ones.

INDIANAPOLIS NEWS, JUNE 28: Presumably there is to be a general cleanup, but it will result from outside pressure rather than from the source to which the public has been led to look for action.

DETROIT NEWS, JUNE 23: The output of the studios during coming months will prove whether they are sincere. . . .

CINCINNATI ENQUIRER, JUNE 22: The energetic crusade . . . commends itself at once to the public. . . .

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER, JUNE 23: The public needed an awakening, the awakening is complete and the fight is on. What is now needful is to keep the public awake.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER-PUBLIC LEDGER, JUNE 25: The public will await the result with keen interest. It requires more than a gesture to satisfy an aroused public opinion. . . .

NEW YORK POST, JUNE 26: The well-justified condemnation of the church federations can no longer be disregarded. The overwhelming majority of Americans still hold to the old-fashioned ideals of family life and personal decency. . . .

NORFOLK, VA., LEDGER-DISPATCH, JUNE 26: The movie producers . . . will whine that they have given the public what it wanted. Bah! They . . . will not be long in finding out that the League of Decency is not just another movement for them to disregard. . . .

COLUMBUS DISPATCH, JUNE 26: Few movements have appealed to people generally as has that instituted by the Catholic church. . . . At the moment the country is feeling the effects of a reaction to a period of strong reform. . . .

KNOXVILLE, TENN., JOURNAL, JUNE 28: That the great Church of Rome, as a world organization, has taken up the matter of the screen's reform is a thing for which to be profoundly thankful. . . .

WILKES-BARRE, PA., RECORD, JUNE 27: This demand . . . is spontaneous, not artificial; and it is gaining momentum. . . . Whether the wayward youngster can be corrected with a parental spanking, or whether it is headed for a run-in with the cops, seems to hinge largely upon the next step of Papa Will.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., TELEGRAM, JUNE 27: The campaign, in the words of Rev. McAllister, "is intended as rebuke to the alien influences that have corrupted the industry."

SPARTANBURG, S. C., HERALD, JUNE 28: The crusade for better films is old stuff, but it is old stuff with new teeth in it. . . .

ERIE, PA., DISPATCH-HERALD, JUNE 24: As a rule, boycott is an undesirable thing. . . . But there are occasions when nothing else seems to serve. This is one of them. . . .

COLUMBUS, GA., ENQUIRER, JUNE 26: The League of Decency will either reform the few offending producers or put them out of business.

ALBANY, GA., HERALD, JUNE 23: The change that is coming over the motion picture industry is more than apt to be epochal. . . .

MOULTRIE, GA., OBSERVER, JUNE 27: It is a move that will hit the innocent as well as the guilty, but it may be the only way left open to bring immoral and conscienceless producers to their senses.

GREENVILLE, TENN., NEWS BULLETIN, JUNE 22: It is high time a reformation of motion pictures was initiated. . . .

GASTONIA, N. C., GAZETTE, JUNE 23: The motion picture industry tried to put this rotten, dirty picture business over on the movie public, thinking it was representing typical American life. It soon found itself mistaken. When the people talk, they get action.

NORFOLK, VA., VIRGINIA PILOT, JUNE 25: Reformations within the movies themselves have been so obviously hypocritical that they have become ridiculous. . . .

GALVESTON, TEX., NEWS, JUNE 23: Local exhibitors are helpless to do anything about the situation. They must accept the pictures offered them under their contracts. Reform must originate in the studios, but apparently the impulse must be applied to the theatre box office.

WASHINGTON, PA., REPORTER, JUNE 26: We can see, though we claim no gifts of prophecy, the handwriting on the wall for those who pander to lust through moving pictures. . . .

RENO, NEV., GAZETTE, JUNE 23: They are going about it in the most effective way. They are striking at the box office receipts.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., HERALD, JUNE 26: Too much cannot be said in commendation of the leaders of the Catholic Church for the fight they are making to purify the films. . . .

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., POST, JUNE 25: This sudden, nationwide eruption of indignation can not he taken as temporary excitement bound to blow over in a short time. . . .

BROOKLYN TIMES-UNION, JUNE 28: A good housecleaning in the character of pictures shown has been long over due. This housecleaning should have come from within, but it has not. . . .

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., SUN, JUNE 24: If the producers have been mistaken, it is largely because the public has failed to assert itself. It is good to hear its voice now and know that it is, as usual, raised on the side of decency and right living.

UTICA, N. Y., PRESS, JUNE 27: It is gratifying to note that a movement has been started for moral, or mental sanitation, in this country. It is religious in its impulse, but essentially it is medical and social in purpose and character. . . .

MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL, JUNE 26: The League of Decency . . . could hardly have found widespread encouragement, had the various appraisers of decency within the motion picture industry functioned as capably in the public interest as the same sections of the public may have hoped when Mr. Hays took over his job. . . .

SUFFOLK, VA., NEWS-HERALD, JUNE 25: Resorting to slime and vile, vulgar insinuations and low suggestions at the expense of the nation's morals is too high a price to pay for our amusement or entertainment.

CONCORD, N. C., TRIBUNE, JUNE 26. There will be fewer of these worldly pictures now because the public has demonstrated a reaction and because the public wants something else. . . .

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., SUN, JUNE 26: Morons are numerous. . . . But it begins to appear that the people preferring greater reserve, seemliness and respectability in popular drama are still more numerous. . . .

LONGVIEW, WASH., NEWS, JUNE 23: Undoubtedly the film industry itself will play a lone hand in resisting the movement for no one else is going to rally to its side. . . .

BEL AIR, MD., AEGIS, JUNE 22: Leaders of the Catholic church throughout the United States deserve unstinted praise. . . . The blame rests squarely upon the public—not movie magnates. . . . Clearly the downward drift to . . . demoralizing movies comes in response to the public's demands.

ELMIRA, N. Y., STAR-GAZETTE, JUNE 23: What a relief it will be to get some fresh air, sunshine and clean romance in the movies in place of the fetid, over-sexed vulgarities of the recent past!

ALBANY NEWS, JUNE 26: If Hollywood wanted to know about the effect of films on the box office, Hollywood found out . . . learned that the people do not want filth, do not want sex and crime. . . .

"wholesale fluttering of Hollywood dovecotes"

GALVESTON, TEX., NEWS, JUNE 25: Mr. Hays' announcement is equivalent to an admission that the method used heretofore has produced imperfect results from the standpoint of public morals and good taste. . . .

NEW HAVEN JOURNAL-COURIER-TIMES, JUNE 25: As the influence of the motion picture has become so powerful that it must be reckoned with, so has the demand for greater decency become so powerful that producers must recognize it.

DETROIT NEWS, JUNE 25: It demonstrates that the good sense and moral sensibilities of the American people can not be continually affronted without incurring stern and costly rebuke.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., RECORDER, JUNE 25: Clean films will now be the avowed goal of educators and religious leaders of all faiths.

AUGUSTA, ME., JOURNAL, JUNE 28: Obviously the producer must consider the box office, but for a while he will be well advised to make the most of clean attractions, although this will require better taste and more intelligence than in pandering. . . .

MINNEAPOLIS EVE. TRIBUNE, JUNE 27: In the present instance, the public is striking Hollywood where it hurts most—the pocketbook. There could be no better guarantee that the producers will respond, as a result, with exactly the measure of decency the public insists that it should have.

POTTSVILLE, PA., JOURNAL, JUNE 28: What is happening now was forecast by many people and many newspapers, including this one, for from five to ten years. . . .

NEW HAVEN JOURNAL-COURIER-TIMES, JUNE 22: The Catholic campaign is significant as it aligns with and stimulates the general national movement for a celluloid clean-up through audience selectivity. . . .

NORTH ADAMS, MASS., TRANSCRIPT, JUNE 25: This sort of compaign will prove to the producers that there are a good many people who do not want what the studios have been giving them. . . .

CAMDEN, N. J., COURIER, JUNE 26: Not all motion pictures are pernicious but, unfortunately, a large enough proportion are, to make this protest both opportune and justified. . . .

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., NEWS, JUNE 23: This Catholic movement to clean up the films is in reality a blow to preserve the personality of the American child.

SAN PEDRO, CAL., NEWS-PILOT, JUNE 21: The producers, they are guilty of turning out such stuff, guilty also of forcing it on picture houses. . . .

FAIRMONT, W. VA., TIMES, JUNE 23: How will the movie makers react to this crusade? They are an arrogant lot. . . . If the boycott will not force a reform and a change of attitude then undoubtedly federal supervision will be necessary. The force of public opinion is strong enough to bring it about.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., VINDICATOR, JUNE 23: The producers of pictures can conduct their business at a profit and still keep within the moral bounds insisted upon in the present campaign. . . .

WORCESTER, MASS., GAZETTE, JUNE 25: The churches are performing a task that is properly theirs. . . .

NEWARK NEWS, JUNE 26: The effort of the churchmen . . . must go farther than the current attack on the movies . . . there is much public education to be done if the "reformation" is to be anything more than temporary. . . .

UTICA, N. Y., OBSERVER-DISPATCH, JUNE 25: Reforms . . . must be provided if the film industry is to keep its head above water. . . .

WOONSOCKET, R. I., CALL, JUNE 25: There should be no injustice worked upon an industry so great and so helpful. . . . Yet, there must be a house-cleaning in the interest of the industry itself and of the general public. . . .

LAWRENCE, MASS., NEWS, JUNE 24: If there is any doubt what the pictures are doing to the children of Greater Lawrence, it might be well to ask a few questions of a policewoman. . . .

NEWARK LEDGER, JUNE 24: With such a formidable consolidation and solidarity of clerical effort directed to end the evil, motion picture producers and theatrical magnates would be fools, indeed, to stand against the tide. . . .

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., NEWS, JUNE 26: The movie magnates are after the money and apparently do not care a hang for morals. . . .

WINSTED, CONN., CITIZEN, JUNE 27: It is high time they woke up to the fact that all persons are not sex crazy and that the great majority of movie fans want to see good, clean pictures. . . .

PITTSFIELD, MASS, EAGLE, JUNE 26: The boycott, sad to relate, is about the only method that promises to succeed. . . .

ROANOKE, VA., WORLD NEWS, JUNE 26: Almost every decent man and woman will join in a movement to purge the screen of filth. . . . It is to be hoped, however, that this campaign . . . does not result in imposing upon motion picture producers Puritanical standards. . . .

BURLINGTON, N. J., ENTERPRISE, JUNE 26: What has plainly happened is that a serious notice has been served upon Hollywood. It must improve both its taste and morals or suffer the consequences. This wholesale fluttering of its dovecotes bids fair to do it a lot of good.

POCATELLO, IDA., STATE JOURNAL, JUNE 23: With the list of signers to the Pledge of Decency growing into many millions, we believe the film producers will note the handwriting on the wall and face about, both to their profit and the public pleasure.

DOVER, DEL., INDEX, JUNE 21: At last, but we hope in good time, protest is made against immoral and corrupting movies. This great industry that might mean so much to pleasure and diversity of knowledge has sadly missed its mission in many respects. . . .

SMITHFIELD, N. C., HERALD, JUNE 22: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said in her Duke University speech that we can accomplish anything if we have the backing of public opinion—Our church leaders have undertaken a Herculean task, but if the majority of people want sex and sophistication taken out of the moving pictures it can be accomplished.

LAURINBURG, N. C., EXCHANGE, JUNE 21: There is a bit of irony in a situation that puts Hollywood on the defensive in a clash with the churchmen. The way the picture industry has gone out of its way for many years to lampoon and ridicule the Protestant ministry and the church is scandalous. . . . Perhaps there is retribution in the situation now that brings these producers to the churchmen with peace offerings.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., UNION-STAR, JUNE 25: The public will commend the courageous move of the clergy; but the public would like to know what its salaried censors have been doing all this time.

LANCASTER, PA., INTELLIGENCER & JOURNAL, JUNE 26: It looks to us as if the battle being carried on against immoral movies by churchmen of all classes is the beginning of a revival of what may be aptly termed a "church era." . . .

RICHMOND, IND., PALLADIUM, JUNE 21: There is no doubt about the outcome, for no industry can long withstand an organized movement to correct an evil and to elevate a medium of entertainment. . . .

POTTSVILLE, PA., REPUBLICAN, JUNE 27: The move . . . gives indication of becoming general. It is hoped in this connection that the good work shall not be spoiled by any spirit of fanaticism or by recourse to what is known as reform. . . .

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., RECORDER, JUNE 28: Hollywood fears Federal censorship, and unless the picture producers soon take shelter from the gathering storm they are likely to find themselves under such restrictions.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE, JUNE 28: There is only one way to suppress indecent movies—that is to suppress them. Recognition of this simple expedient has already brought results in the campaign. . . . It is only fair to say that the flagrantly offensive pictures are comparatively few. . . .

MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE, JUNE 27: The only motion picture censorship worthy of the name is that imposed by an alert and self-respecting public opinion. It is that public opinion to which the churches are now making an effective appeal, and the rapidity with which the producers are responding to it is most enlightening. The truth of the matter is that the producers will always give the public about what it demands. . . .

SANTA ROSE, CAL., PRESS DEMOCRAT, JUNE 24: Salacious films are coming in for a good drubbing. And it's about time. . . .

FREDERICKSBURG, VA., FREE LANCE-STAR, JUNE 28: If the various church . . . organizations . . . do not become over-zealous and attempt to carry their reforms to extremes they can . . . eradicate some most distasteful features from films. . . .

FAIRMONT, W. VA., WEST VIRGINIAN, JUNE 28: It appeals to us that the campaign of the Legion of Decency . . . is carrying on right well . . . May continued success mark the efforts of the Legion of Decency.

RENSSELAER, N. Y., TRANSCRIPT, JUNE 29: The people of this country are ready and willing to follow leadership that affords opportunity to show that there are more decent people than indecent people in the country. . . .

SAGINAW NEWS, JUNE 28: Cleanup . . . should come from within . . . the present campaign is an indication that failure to do a thorough job is likely to result in an enforced cleansing that may go far beyond what the public would otherwise accept.

EL PASO, TEX., TIMES, JUNE 26: The Times naturally sympathizes with the Roman Catholic Church which, with the endorsement of leading Protestants also, is starting a campaign for clean motion pictures. This is a matter which lies close to the hearts of parents. . . .

ELMIRA, N. Y., ADVERTISER, JUNE 27: The indications are that reforms which have often been promised in the character of films, but never realized, must be provided if the film industry is to keep its head above water.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., TIMES UNION, JUNE 28: It has been a good campaign and we are glad of it and grateful to those who voiced the best American sentiment.

GREENWOOD, S. C., INDEX-JOURNAL, JUNE 28: The churches have made a gesture . . . which can not be ignored. It is a movement supported by many people not members of churches but whose ideas of decency are none the less rigid.

VENTURA, CAL., FREE PRESS, JUNE 26: Bitter complaints are coming from Japan, China, Turkey and several European countries of the moral debauch being produced by American films . . . For the sake of our youth, for the sake of our self-respect as a nation, for the sake of our name abroad, for the sake of a great educative agency and popular pastime, let's clean up.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN., STAFF NEWS, JUNE 28: Exercising its prerogative, the public can accept or reject whatever entertainment is offered. . . . Genuine entertainment . . . does not need to stoop to vulgarity. It is with recognition of these facts that the new censors are registering a protest. Sentiment, largely, is with them.

SOUTH BEND, IND., NEWS TIMES, JUNE 18: In the end, the pressure of opinion should be more effective than censorship. . . . The newspapers . . . have not found it necessary or wise to stoop to the salacious. . . . Less than two per cent of the American press would cater to the salacious, if it dared.

CORDELE, GA., DISPATCH, JUNE 27: Many a rotten picture has had its influence in lowering the standards of our people and anything which does that brings the penitentiary nearer to our doors. . . .

STERLING, COLO., ADVOCATE, JUNE 19: The fact which chagrins is that the public will consume this sort of diet with evident relish. It is not the fact that bad pictures are made, but that humanity seems to like them which is truly disheartening. . . .

BEAVER FALLS, PA., NEWS-TRIBUNE, JUNE 28: The News-Tribune asks of the movies nothing which the newspapers have not been compelled to do by their readers, that is, to keep clean, out of consideration for the sanctity of the home and the precious right of boys and girls to grow up in a wholesome environment. . . .

MARSHALL, TEX., MESSENGER, JUNE 24: One is forced to the conclusion that Hollywood itself is rotten and it's impossible to expect pure water from a corrupt spring. . . .

TUCSON, ARIZ., STAR, JUNE 25: Methods now being used are temporary in nature. To produce permanent results one of two methods will have to be used: first, legal suppression by government agency; second, a permanent organization to register disapproval. . . .

TRENTON, N. J., STATE GAZETTE, JUNE 27: Evidently, there is at least one argument that Hollywood understands.

ELIZABETH, N. J., JOURNAL, JUNE 28: There should be a stronger appeal to the producers than that of business, but possibly the test must be made from that viewpoint. A great industry, with manifold potential opportunities for promoting public welfare and betterment, should be careful of its responsibility.

BAKERSFIELD, CAL., CALIFORNIAN, JUNE 23: The people of the nation as a whole will give enthusiastic approval to the movement. . . .

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., HERALD, JUNE 27: The movie interests need to take due note and clean out their stables. The religious effort does not appear to be merely another clean picture crusade. . . .

SANTA ANA, CAL., REGISTER, JUNE 22: The Catholic church is now going to furnish censorship and theirs will be the responsibility for the quality of the shows in the future. . . .

KNOXVILLE, TENN., NEWS-SENTINEL, JUNE 26: We believe the campaign will serve its purpose and do the movie business great good. . . .

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., HERALD, JUNE 26: Readers of The Morning Herald in general will be gratified to see that a real housecleaning has been started in Hollywood. . . . The ultimatum . . . has been received from churches. . . .

"There is a great public opinion at work"

STAUNTON, VA., LEADER, JUNE 27: The Bishops took the wise course. . . .

SACRAMENTO, CAL., UNION, JUNE 23: Fight of a council of Catholic priests against salacious moving pictures will win widespread approval. . . .

LOCKPORT, N. Y., UNION-SUN & JOURNAL, JUNE 26: If such a movement can be made to include all decent minded people . . . the reaction shown in the profit and loss sheet should soon enough bring reform. . . .

HARTFORD, CONN., COURANT, JUNE 25: Censorship from above is . . . ineffective but . . . encouraging the public to express its opinion by giving or withholding its patronage . . . is a reasonable method. . . .

BURLINGTON, VT., FREE PRESS, JUNE 26: There is no doubt that this movement is of a highly worthwhile nature. . . .

WATERTOWN, N. Y., TIMES, JUNE 23: The strange thing is that as a people we tolerated the undesirable film as long as we did. . . .

CHICOPEE, MASS., HERALD, JUNE 21: All people should join with whatever leadership will rise up and demand and command that so great power as our movies are must be turned to higher aims.

EUGENE, ORE., NEWS, JUNE 19: The clean-up campaign is intelligently directed and consequently is to be taken seriously. . . . Campaigners have recognized the fact that local exhibitors are generally at the mercy of the producers.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., STANDARD-TIMES, JUNE 26: Discontent and disgust that have long been growing . . . have found a leadership through which their indignation can find effective expression. . . .

WILKES-BARRE, PA., NEWS, JUNE 27: The force which has been set to work is not censorship, which can be as stupid as Hollywood itself, but public opinion aimed at a most important objective. . . .

SHARON, PA., HERALD, JUNE 27: A permanent change in the type of movie fare offered by Hollywood to the public, however, is perhaps more likely to result from the rise of other film-producing units. . . .

DAVENPORT, IA., DEMOCRAT, JUNE 24: It is a movement which promises to not only enlist the church-going population, but . . . the general public. And most people, both within and out of the church, will profess to believe that there is room for reform.

CENTERVILLE, IA., IOWEGIAN, JUNE 23: The producers may believe they can make more money by appealing to the lower instincts. But there is a great public opinion at work in this country demanding that our ideals be preserved.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., EAGLE, JUNE 27: The effort of churchmen and impartial organizations to "clean up" the films is encouraging. . . . Hollywood should be told in no uncertain terms that the country is tired of its typical products. . . .

PALESTINE, TEX., HERALD, JUNE 22: The press has never found it necessary or profitable to stoop to the salacious. . . .

LEXINGTON, KY., LEADER, JUNE 29: The movement . . . will go on, and should go on. . . . It is probable that the industry has seen the light, and that offensive films will be fewer and fewer. There should be none of them. . . .

CORDELE, GA., DISPATCH, JUNE 28: The boycott is the most practical plan to arouse strong public interest and produce results. . . .

OSWEGO, N. Y., PALLADIUM TIMES, JUNE 29: The present campaign . . . will be successful. It has been echoed in every corner of the country. . . .

UNION CITY, N. J., HUDSON DISPATCH, JUNE 29: Far better than censorship is the voice of leadership, the creating of a decent public opinion. That is what the Roman Catholic Church seems to be doing. . . .

LANCASTER, PA., NEW ERA & EXAMINER, JUNE 23: It is palpable that "The Legion of Decency" has been successful in its demand for decent films. . . .

WATERBURY, CONN., AMERICAN, JUNE 28: It may be taken for granted that if the movie-going public can be induced to reform, Hollywood will reform with it. Meanwhile, due credit . . . ought to be awarded to the producers for . . . photoplays of the first rank of excellence from every standpoint.

SALEM, MASS., NEWS, JUNE 26: It isn't the producers that the religious and civic organizations will have their troubles with; it is their own members. . . . Their strength must come from keeping their own people in line should the portion of the public outside the fold show signs of having the greater numerical weight. The producers will produce that for which they find the greatest demand.

UTICA, N. Y., OBSERVER-DISPATCH, JUNE 26: In the long run the box office receipts will regulate the kind of pictures offered. . . .

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, JUNE 27: Of course the answer to the whole matter is response at the box office. It is impossible to compel the public to patronize the class of show they do not like. . . .

HAMILTON, ONT., SPECTATOR, JUNE 23: The churches are unanimous in their demands for cleaner films. But it is one thing to make demands and another to persuade patrons what they ought to like and what is good for them. . . .

DALLES, ORE., CHRONICLE, JUNE 23: In the last analysis motion picture producers are going to give the people what they want. Right now they are demanding a better type of pictures—and getting it.

GREENSBURG, PA., TRIBUNE, JUNE 27: The united church campaign . . . should not only be aimed at the off color productions. It should include a reference to better standards of . . . production. . . .

AKRON, O., BEACON JOURNAL, JUNE 23: Close observers of the cinema industry hold that along with the boycott of questionable pictures there also must go some means of supporting the cleaner pictures with patronage. . . .

ATLANTIC, IA., NEWS, JUNE 25: It seems to us that a successful campaign to clean up the movies needs more than the boycott of bad pictures. It requires also the determination on the part of those engaged in the crusade to show their appreciation of good pictures. Until this is done campaigns to elevate the movies will be rather uncertain of success.

BAKER, ORE., DEMOCRAT, JUNE 21: Apparently there is to be a change for the better. . . . It will last just so long as the public approves by giving its patronage to the better pictures and no longer. So it's up to you.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH, JUNE 26: The audience is being heard from, and vociferously, in the matter of undesirable movies. . . . The movement sponsored by church organizations . . . is making itself felt in Hollywood. . . . If it results in . . . no increase in patronage of high-standard films, the outcome will be only to ruin or greatly handicap a major industry. . . . If high-grade pictures are to be as profitable, there must be audiences to support them . . . a boycott . . . should be accompanied by a movement to show appreciation to the producers, if their promise is kept, by supporting films of merit.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS., HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE, JUNE 28: The motion picture industry cannot be expected to devote its attention to pictures that the public will not patronize. . . . If a sufficiently large number of men, women and children will encourage the showing of worth-while films, the producers will be quick to take the hint.

SIOUX CITY, IA., JOURNAL, JUNE 28: Those who clamor for better movies should back up the demand by showing by their patronage that better pictures are better profit makers. It is unfortunately true that many of those who clamor for cleaner movies patronize the movies very little. . . .

McKEESPORT, PA., NEWS, JUNE 28: If the public demands only the highest type of pictures they will be produced with rapidity. It therefore would appear that if the public and the producers work hand in hand, the quality of the movies would be enhanced a thousand fold. . . .

BROCKTON, MASS., ENTERPRISE & TIMES, JUNE 28: Not until there is a genuine public demand, reflected at the box office, for wholesome screen plays will unwholesome ones be excluded from the theatres. The playgoers themselves are the most powerful of all censors.

VIRGINIA, MINN., ENTERPRISE, JUNE 21: Public responsibility . . . transcends that of the picture producer. . . . Good pictures must be given the better patronage. If production could be in the hands of theatre managers . . . the response to the challenge for a higher nobility in picture presentation would be immediate.

FLINT, MICH., I. M. A. NEWS, JUNE 27: The campaign is not directed against the theatres. . . . It is aimed at the producers. . . . No one wants to see the movie industry paralyzed. . . . It can be a harmless influence or one decidedly harmful. One can discuss the merits of censorship pro and con, but in the long run the public will act as its own censor.

DOYLESTOWN, PA., NEWS, JUNE 27: Let us hope that this laudable effort . . . will open up a better way than wiping all pictures (both good and bad) . . . off the map.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., TRIBUNE, JUNE 29: If the public wants good pictures that are both clean and artistic, it will have to patronize them liberally . . . the standard they set won't be maintained without the support of the revenue that comes from the other kind.

DES MOINES REGISTER, JUNE 29: Hollywood is beginning to prick up its rather elongated ears . . . the objectors can cooperate to raise movie standards not only by boycotting the bad films but also by patronizing the good ones.

MILWAUKEE SENTINEL, JUNE 29: Forthcoming pictures . . . of the type desired by the protesting organizations should, as a matter of fairness and encouragement, be liberally patronized. . . . That is the road to real and permanent improvement. . . .

NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM, JUNE 26: Great care should be taken lest the zeal to cure undeniable evils swing the pendulum too far toward fanaticism. The unhappy American experience of prohibition must not be repeated in unreasoned film censorship. It's the old question of trying to legislate morals. . . .

LOUISVILLE TIMES, JUNE 23: The relative positions of theatre, professional critics and churches is about what it was when "The Black Crook" was assailed—and patronized—two generations ago.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA., HERALD-DISPATCH, JUNE 25: Our hope is that it will not be permitted to develop into a wave of prudery on the one hand or didacticism on the other.

KANSAS CITY STAR, JUNE 23: No one is thinking much of the artistic elements at present. There is considerable danger of the reaction going so far as to bring about a narrow censorship that would later be obnoxious to the American public. . . .

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., REPORTER, JUNE 25: If common sense is lost sight of there is liable to come about a censorship that will make the moving picture a vehicle of propaganda instead of a place of entertainment. And most certainly that would not be wanted.

HIGH POINT, N. C., ENTERPRISE, JUNE 23: We hold no brief for indecent films. On the contrary, we feel there is a need for more wholesome films. We only wish to suggest caution in the matter of censoring of any kind.

DENNISON, O., PARAGRAPH, JUNE 26: Managers of local theatres present well balanced programs that include many times, news, travel, novelties, comedy and the feature picture—all for a few nickels. Where else in the world can one spend a pleasant evening for so little money? No, we do not believe the movies are half as bad as they are painted. Let's go to the show tonight!

HARTFORD, CONN., TIMES, JUNE 25: We do not like the idea of boycott, because so often it is abused, and so often, too, prejudice takes the place of reasonable, helpful protest. . . . Censorships, boycotts, prohibitory laws, crusades and campaigns spring up automatically when society falls into lapse. Movie producers have themselves to thank for what is going on. . . .

BROCKTON, MASS., ENTERPRISE & TIMES, JUNE 25: Boycott is an effectual way to correct objectionable trends and practices, but always it is a weapon which injures or kills. No one wants to see a form of entertainment which is so potential and productive, not only to the industry but also to the public, permanently injured or killed.

ESTHERVILLE, IA., NEWS, JUNE 25: Bad for the industry and for the public would be government censorship, which soon would become a matter of political corruption. Neither can the boycott be approved. . . . Motion pictures are not all bad. A little blue penciling here and there in most cases would remedy all that the decent theatre going public really demands. . . . The worse phase of the churchmen's war is the effect it has on the business of exhibitors, who are blameless. . . .

DANVILLE, VA., REGISTER, JUNE 27: All theological hands have been joined to declare that the movies are Sin. . . . The churches stand to gain something but they also take a risk in the holy crusade against the movies. Very few pictures are, in fact, salacious. . . . To nearly all theologians the devil is a comely woman displaying her charms. If Hollywood will take Broadway off the screen, it may be possible to arrange a quick armistice.

PATERSON, N. J., CALL, JUNE 28: Patrons . . . are to pledge themselves to remain away from all moving picture shows which are considered as unwholesome. . . . Such a movement, if it is carried on in earnest, will undoubtedly aid the efforts of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors under the leadership of Will Hays, to bring about a real uplift in the movies. The Hays' organization has put forth strenuous efforts and has done a great deal of good. . . . We must give the movies their due . . . as a vehicle of entertainment the motion picture is far above the average stage production and even the average modern novel in decency and moral attributes. Any comparison a fair-minded citizen might make will abundantly approve of this fact. . . .

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR JUNE

● Seven productions were appointed June's Champions by the box offices of the nation's key theatres. Only four rankings are represented, however, three pictures having tied for second place, and two for fourth. June's Champions constitute quite a varied fare, with two straight comedy-dramas, one comedy-drama with music, a novelty-mystery, two dramas and one melodrama making up the winners for the month.

The Girl from Missouri

(MGM-Hyman)

Romantic Melodrama

With Jean Harlow, plus the title, "The Girl from Missouri," and support players headed by Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone and Patsy Kelly, showmen have several values here.

The story is romantic melodrama pleasingly told, but efforts to keep within the lines of the present clamor being quite obvious, it has turned out to be somewhat of a direct but mild exploration of the purity of gold diggers. It definitely reflects that a gold-digger can possess a soul of white, despite her craving for the finer things in life. So in this breezy, racy piece of entertainment, Jean Harlow, tired of being a slave to her mother's small town beer parlor, joins up with Patsy Kelly and strikes out for the big town and heavy sugar.

Their exploits toward this end afford many bright episodes and situations, basically built on a battle of wits among all involved. Harlow sets her bait for Lionel Barrymore, powerful political figure, and while she pursues him, continually suggesting marriage, Barrymore's son, Franchot Tone, becomes enamoured of her. Instead of the Harlow-Tone association being what he thought he could make it, it results, through clever complications, that she is the girl for his heart. In the meantime, sensing the romance waxing too warm, Barrymore, to stave off any possible marriage between the two, effectively frames her with an "unknown" man, resulting in her incarceration. While in jail another and close friend of Barrymore learns of her plight, bails her out, and seeing she has lost out with Tone she accepts presents and favors.

Barrymore is about to sail for Europe. With the assistance of a newspaper photographer, Miss Harlow conceives and executes a clever twist to reverse the frame-up with Barrymore. They photograph him in a compromising position with her and in order to save his own neck he effects a reconciliation between Tone and Miss Harlow and they are married.

Patsy Kelly as the hard-boiled companion to Miss Harlow is in humorous striking contrast to Jean's character. Miss Harlow seeks the finer things in life, while Miss Kelly falls for uniforms, doormen, bell-hops and sailors with little thought of acquiring money or fine clothes.

The entire production is lavishly set before a background of luxurious refinement, and is typical Harlow fare that carries the spectators along the half-primrose path with a girl who decided to make good, climb high and have wealth, although she remains pure through it all.

Exploitation should be carefully planned.—SWIGART, Hollywood.

No Ransom

(Liberty - M. H. Hoffman)

Comedy-Drama

An entertaining picturization of Damon Runyon's comic yarn, "The Big Mitten," this production has entertainment for the entire family. The author's name suggests the obvious showman's angle in view of the absence of cast name power. The story is backgrounded with a mild gangster theme dominated by laugh situations and satirical dialogue.

The usual Runyon twist gives the story a good sendoff, establishing the fact that Robert McWade, in the role of a maltreated parent, is willing to put $30,000 on the line to have himself bumped off. The reason for his morose behavior is evidenced in the actions of his wife, Hedda Hopper, who falls for a lily-like philosopher, also in those of his son and daughter, Phillips Holmes and Leila Hyams, who continually throw monkey wrenches into his plans.

Jack LaRue is the considerate gangster who shows up to do the bumping off but gets soft hearted on the job even to the extent of getting soft on McWade's daughter.

A series of comic situations is climaxed when LaRue ships the old man to a health resort and the family thinks he's been kidnaped. McWade thrives on the fresh air and home cooking while the family begin to realize their loss. LaRue kids him into thinking the time has come to knock him off, forcing McWade to confess that he's changed his mind about dying. He finally goes home to an entirely different family, which have thrown out the philosopher and remodeled their habits. McWade talks LaRue out of marrying Miss Hyams and the gangster drowns his sorrows in philosophy.—WATT, Hollywood.

Hat, Coat and Gloves

(Radio - Kenneth MacGowan)

Drama

Beginning as a modern sophisticated drama involving a marital triangle, this one takes a sudden novelty twist and becomes a thoroughly entertaining murder mystery. The title carries a suggestion of drawing room farce, but also contains a mystery element valuable for exploitation. This is strictly adult entertaiment, which, owing to the lack of name power, necessitates the selling of story and title.

The story centers on a trial separation, a typical woman's angle not to be overlooked by showmen. Ricardo Cortez has the starring role of the criminal lawyer, who has struggled through three months of an experimental separation from his wife, portrayed by Barbara Robbins, and is ready to call it quits and go home. In trying to affect a reconciliation he discovers his wife is infatuated with a young painter, played by John Beal.

Cortez, mild, philosophical and addicted to amateur photography outside of the courtroom, visits the apartment of Beal for the purpose of a quiet talk. There he discovers Dorothy Burgess, ex-flame of Beal, who has made up her mind to hang around, wanted or not. The girl is drunk. In a rash moment she picks up a gun to kill herself. Cortez intervenes too late and she dies.

The finger of the law points at Beal. Cortez's wife pleads with him to take the case, to which he finally consents, with the pledged understanding that she return to him after the trial whether he wins Beal's freedom or not.

The trial suspense centers on whether Cortez will let the prosecution convict his wife's lover or win the case, as is in his power. The trial is somewhat of a departure from formula, with Cortez comically riddling the prosecution's entire case in the last two minutes on the stand. Cortez cancels the agreement with his wife, but the trial has proved to her that her rightful place is at his side.

Margaret Hamilton, in the role of a milliner, gives an outstanding performance on the witness stand, with Sara Haden coming in for acting credits in the role of Cortez's secretary.

This will need enterprising showmanship directed at adult trade.—WATT, Hollywood.

Elmer and Elsie

(Paramount-Lighton)

Comedy-Drama

A homely type of comedy drama which seldom rises to its potential peak, this picture offers little more in exploitation values than the title would indicate. Aimed at the comedy side of modern business and domestic life, the story attempts to show the male as master of commercial affairs and woman's dominance over the domestic, with a satirical twist showing the feminine to be subtly governing both. It is potentially of family calibre. Heavy exploitation on comedy is essential.

George Bancroft does as well as could be expected in the lifeless role of a big dumb cluck who juggles pianos in the shipping department of a small piano manufacturing plant. He falls for Frances Fuller, who aspires to become a concert pianist. Roscoe Karns, Bancroft's roommate and co-juggler, tries to block the impending marriage because Bancroft has been paying all the bills and he's afraid he'll lose his meal ticket. The wedding goes on anyway and the wedlock tends to fire Bancroft with ambitions of becoming a vice-president, so he takes up after-dinner speaking by correspondence course.

Meanwhile, the big advertising coup of selling a piano to Albert Conti, who plays the role of Barlotti, the great concert pianist, has been smartly put over by Nella Walker, wife of George Barbier, president of the piano company.

Bancroft's big moment arrives when the piano falls on him as he and Karns are endeavoring to hoist it on the train. He is merely knocked out, but his wife cleverly makes him put his arm in a sling, then invites the president over to extend his sympathies to the man who saved the piano.

Climaxing a series of comedy situations, the two wives get together and promote Bancroft a spot at the speakers' table at the promotion dinner. Karns steals Bancroft's carefully rehearsed speech but Miss Fuller, apologizing that Bancroft has lost his voice from a nervous disorder, comes to the rescue with an extemperanous one, which she reads, pretending it is the one her husband wrote.

Bancroft is boosted to foreman, is hired and fired a couple of times, but all ends well, with the two wives silently negotiating all business maneuvers unbeknown to the males.

Karn's performance is a standout for laughs, with Nella Walker's acting rating above par. Miss Fuller handles her role effectively, and George Barbier is pompous and convincing.—WATT, Hollywood.

Registered Nurse

(Warner)

Drama

The trials and tribulations, romantic and otherwise, of a nurse in a city hospital, are quite entertainingly recounted in this film, with sufficient excitement and action included, and enough emphasis on the romantic angle to make the appeal of the picture justifiably directed at both the masculine and feminine elements of the patronage. Well-spotted comedy takes the edge off a few dramatic situations and serves to add liveliness.

For cast names there are Bebe Daniels, in the title role, and Lyle Talbot and John Halliday, hospital doctors and rivals for the hand of Miss Daniels. Minna Gombell, Sidney Toler and Vince Barnett are familiar names in supporting roles, Barnett supplying the greater part of the straight comedy. The title may be made effective in the selling campaign with a buildup indicating something of the interest and excitement, as opposed to drudgery, to be found in the life of the experienced hospital nurse. The effort of the girl to forget a situation in her past, and the near-crash in her life as a result of the sudden reawakening of that situation, presents an opportunity for copy lines especially effective in addressing women patrons. The girl is confronted with the problem of possibly sacrificing a man's life, with her own future happiness dependent on her decision. That is the type of selling line the picture requires.

Miss Daniels, traveling in a fast set, has difficulties with her husband, Gordon Westcott, as their love cools. She threatens to leave him, the threat being immediately followed by the crash of the speeding car he is driving while intoxicated. Miss Daniels returns to professional nursing, obtaining a post in a large city hospital, where she is arduously pursued after a time by Talbot, shyly courted by Halliday. Halliday is chief of the hospital staff, Talbot one of the leading surgeons subordinate to him. Drawn to both of them, one because of his kindness and consideration, the other because of his appearance and ability to make love, Miss Daniels nonetheless refuses both of them, failing to indicate a reason.

Against the background of the rapidly tempoed activity of a busy hospital, Miss Daniels goes about her duties, the two doctors alternately ask her to reconsider their proposals, and a secondary romance, that of Miss Gombell, capable nurse friend of Miss Daniels, and Ed Gargan, moves forward. Tragedy stalks as Gargan is killed by bandits on the eve of his marriage to Miss Gombell, and comedy has its moments as Toler, rough wrestling promoter, is brought in after a battle royal at a party. His two thug-like wrestlers arrive to cheer him, become entangled in an argument and then in each other, and conclude their impromptu bout in beds and bandages.

A climax is reached as Westcott appears, having escaped from a sanitarium. As he prepares for a delicate brain operation, Toler, understanding the state of affairs, "accidentally" talks with Westcott, points out innocently the situation, and Westcott takes his own life. Learning that Talbot's intentions were not of the best, she finds eventual happiness with Halliday.

The film is an adult attraction, perhaps best played in the midweek.—AARONSON, New York.

Whom the Gods Destroy

(Columbia)

Drama

Rather weighty drama with a strong touch of tragedy pervading the story, this picturization of a well known narrative by Albert Payson Terhune offers chiefly an excellent vehicle for the long unquestioned ability of elderly Walter Connolly.

There is much in the story with which patron attention may be aroused and sustained, in addition to the fact of the origin, since Terhune has long been one of the more popular authors of the country. The title itself has an intriguing ring, and yet carries the implication of strong drama. The selling, in justice to the story and its execution, should be along distinctive, quiet and dignified lines, rather than in the manner of ballyhoo or loud showmanship. The cast in general does not offer any particular opportunity for name draw, the two best names, outside of that of Connolly, being those of Robert Armstrong and Doris Kenyon. As far as Connolly is concerned the exhibitor should make a strong effort to sell him to his public—there should be important value in strengthening his name for future appearances. Heretofore he has appeared in smaller character parts almost exclusively.

The story is punctuated with suspense and thrill action which prevents any lagging of interest. The conclusion, though not striking the happiest note, is nevertheless logical in the extreme and the producers have avoided a definitely tragic termination.

Connolly's role is that of a most successful play producer on Broadway, deeply in love with his wife, Miss Kenyon, and with unending dreams for the future with his son stepping into his shoes. He goes alone to England to produce one of his shows, but en route the ship strikes a derelict and fills rapidly. In the wild panic which ensues, Connolly does his part manfully, until finally, stricken by sudden fear, he dons woman's clothes and is rescued. On the bleak coast of Newfoundland, the villagers curse him, but he is befriended by Hobart Bosworth, who helps to conceal his identity. Eventually, with a planned story, he returns to New York, but cannot face family and friends and the plaque to his heroism which adorns his New York theatre. He, a derelict, seeks and finds odd jobs, watches from afar as he sees his son grow to young manhood, begin his career as a producer.

The boy, Armstrong, meets with dismal failure, and Connolly, concealing his identity, goes to him, instills a new confidence in him, and renders assistance as the boy, coming to the old man's room, works hard on a new play. Connolly claims to be an old friend of the boy's father. Eventually real success greets their joint effort and Armstrong, proud, brings his mother to the room. She recognizes her husband, and as the boy leaves the room, the two decide they still may have happiness before them, without the boy knowing.

Strong, adult material, the film is worthy of the exhibitor's best efforts.—AARONSON, New York.

3 On a Honeymoon

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

A lively and entertaining comedy-drama, with the comedy element definitely predominating, this screen adaptation of the novel, "Promenade Deck," by Ishbel Ross, has the kind of title which should be promising as an incentive to ballyhoo selling, with the greater emphasis on the comedy.

With three romances virtually going on simultaneously, two serious, one highly comic, plus the introduction of a blackmail plot and intrigue, considerable action, and all localed on board a large Mediterranean cruise steamship, the picture offers plenty of active entertainment for almost any type of audience. The tempo is fast, the plot never to be taken too seriously.

Heading the cast are Sally Eilers and Zasu Pitts, with Henrietta Crosman and Charles Starrett offering capable support, Miss Crosman especially giving a performance highly enjoyable. The copy lines, though striking the predominating comedy note, should indicate something of the other phase of the story. The wealthy young girl, spoiled by having too much her own way, and too much money, meets with opposition on board ship, and comes to learn that her own way is not always the best either for herself or others about her. It is romance and comedy, with appeal for both sexes.

she cannot get along, sets sail, much publicized, for a Mediterranean cruise on a ship belonging to a line which her father owns. Aboard she meets Starrett, second officer on the ship, who is delegated by the captain to "look after" Miss Eilers, much to her annoyance—at first. On board also are Miss Pitts, librarian from a small town in the Midwest, and Miss Crosman, elderly but extremely lively passenger, who shares her room with Miss Pitts.

The three strike up an odd acquaintance, and considerable amusement ensues as Miss Pitts, at first bewildered by what goes on about her, sets her cap for Russell Simpson, fellow passenger who is approximately as old fashioned as she herself. Enjoying herself hugely, Miss Crosman encourages Miss Pitts in her pursuit of belated romance.

Miss Eilers makes small progress in her growing affection for Starrett, who treats her as the spoiled child she is, but she is persevering in her pursuit. Also aboard are John Mack Brown and his bride, Irene Hervey, an old friend of Miss Eilers. When, in Algiers, Miss Hervey is confronted by the blackmail attempt of Cornelius Keefe, whom she once knew and who has unfortunate letters, she goes to Miss Eilers in desperate fear that unless she can raise the money Keefe wants, he will go to her husband. Miss Eilers goes to Keefe's room, obtains the letters after a fight from which she is rescued by Miss Crosman, and when Keefe is found to have committed suicide, Starrett misconstrues Miss Eilers' presence in Keefe's cabin. He will not listen to her explanation, and it is only after her injury in a daredevil stunt, undertaken in resentment, and Miss Crosman's explanation to Starrett, that the romance is completed, as is that between Miss Pitts and Simpson.

Lively comedy, this is best suited to a midweek playing position.—AARONSON, New York.

Princess Charming

(Gaumont-British)

Musical Comedy

Evelyn Laye's singing and her personal charm are big assets in this British comedy-musical, but the use of the inverted description indicates the box office values in their proper order; it is definitely amusing material, presented in a spirit of light-hearted burlesque. Nevertheless, the sentimental value is there, with songs to back it up, and accentuates the woman appeal of a picture which is another proof that leading British studios can now successfully handle quick moving musical farce of this description.

Against the usual Ruritanian background, the story is that the Princess Elaine is betrothed for reasons of state, which can be more easily defined as a large dowry, to the impoverished king of a neighboring state. Revolution breaks out. To prevent her seizure by the mob, she goes through a marriage ceremony with Captain Launa, a naval officer from her husband-to-be's country and, protected by her new nationality, is allowed to go.

The King, meanwhile, is having trouble with the Countess Annette, who previously consoled him very completely for the lack of a legal consort and vigorously resents being ordered to the background. When the Princess arrives with her escort, an annulment of the tactical marriage is drawn up. The gallant captain refuses to sign it and is sent to prison, and the overjoyed Princess, who has thought him indifferent, plots so successfully that they eventually escape together over the frontier.

The value of this picture rests on its light-heartedness and speed. The comedy atmosphere is maintained by George Grossmith as the King and by Yvonne Arnaud as his Countess, and the broad satire of the ways of courts is never too broad to be funny. There is a strong low-comedy element provided by Max Miller, as Chuff, the representative of a British insurance company which has "covered" the safe arrival of the Princess. Chuff breaks into most of the action and the revelation at the end that he is not Chuff at all but a lunatic who has stolen the real Chuff's papers does not lessen the humor of the situation in which he has reached Christian-name terms with the king in an endeavor to bribe him to let the Princess go.

There is something to sell to all types of audience in this subject. Four good new song numbers, "Love Is a Song," "Brave Hearts," "Near and Yet So Far" and "Too Many Women," can all be exploited. Evelyn Laye and George Grossmith are both good names and Harry Wilcoxon is a leading man with a definite woman appeal. More than any individuals, however, are the entertainment values provided by spirited direction. The amusement possibilities of minor incident are exceptionally well exploited.

"Princess Charming" can be put up as a musical, a musical comedy or as yet another burlesque of monarchy and will justify each description.—ALLAN, London.

DANNY BOY

Butcher-Panther production, distributed by Butcher's Film Service, Ltd. Directed by Challis Sanderson and Oswald Mitchell. Features Dorothy Dickson, Frank Forbes-Robertson, Cyril Ritchard, Fred Duprez, Archie Pitt and Denis O'Neil.

A typical example of a class of film which does good business in British working class areas and in theatres below the super category. The story, written round the song title, is oversentimental, but that is partially redeemed by broad comedy relief and some excellent singing of Irish songs by Denis O'Neil. A New Year'e Eve cabaret in which the orchestra is formed by street performers is well done. The leading acting, apart from that of Fred Duprez and Cyril Ritchard, is very poor and the recording is mediocre.—B. A.

The Great Defender

(B.I.P.-British)

Murder Mystery

Here are familiar ingredients of the crime drama: an obviously indicated murderer who isn't guilty, an innocent-seeming non-suspect who is surprisingly discovered to have done the deed, a wife who lies to save her husband, and a lawyer who, loving the wife, saves that husband. The new selling angles are that the assembly of these jig-saw pieces is accomplished in the novel environment of a British court of justice and that the real drama concerns the actual and suspected murderer less than the counsel for the defense.

On the first count, the picture offers intelligent American audiences an interesting opportunity to compare British and American social customs, as expressed in legal procedure. It is not merely that the American witness chair is replaced by a "box," or pew, or that the Judge and lawyers are gowned and bewigged. What the film offers is a complete and accurate picture of the procedure, much of it dating back more than 500 years, at the Central Criminal Court—the famous Old Bailey. It's a selling point that these processions, bowings, and traditional forms of announcement are from the life and that their setting is also authentic.

Next in interest is that Matheson Lang's study of the great defending counsel, Sir Douglas Rolls, mirrors many of the professional methods and personal peculiarities of the real life advocate, Sir Edward Marshall Hall, now dead. Sir Edward's fame was international and the public may be promised that his tricks of advocacy, though not his story, are reproduced.

Leslie Locke, an artist, is threatened with divorce by his wife, who has discovered his liaison with a figure model, Phyllis Ware; Miss Ware is engaged to be married to Eric Hammond, an electrician. She is discovered dead from a dagger wound on a night after Locke has visited her. Locke has been seen by a detective, employed by Mrs. Locke to watch her husband in order to obtain divorce evidence. To shield Locke, his wife agrees to swear that he was with her all the night of the crime.

His defense against the murder charge is undertaken by Sir Douglas Rolls, once Locke's unsuccessful rival, who still loves Mrs. Locke. Although seriously ill, he conducts the case brilliantly and, after Locke's false alibi has been exposed, succeeds in forcing a confession in the witness box from the model's electrician lover. The effort is the famous counsel's last; he dies in the ante room of the Court.

Leaving aside the British atmosphere, which can be made an asset, "The Great Defender" offers good opportunities for "mystery" exploitation. There's the point that a detective identifies the accused by the light of a lamp which had been extinguished by a current failure; was the breakdown at the time of the murder? "Why did Eric Hammond refuse to take the Oath?" is another line suggested by the fact that the electrician, guilty of murder, balks at perjury because, as is later revealed, he is a victim of religious mania.—ALLAN, London.

Dog-Gone Babies

Amusing

Ernest Truex, long a comedy star of the stage, herein contrives to be definitely entertaining, as the only man in the office who dislikes babies and prefers dogs. For that reason the boss offers him an out-of-town promotion, but his wife, to bring a change in his attitude, borrows an infant with which to arouse her husband's sympathy and interest. It works, but not without complications which are quite entertaining. An enjoyable comedy number.—Running time, 20 minutes.

NRA NAMES INDUSTRIAL APPEALS BOARD TO HEAR CODE COMPLAINTS

New Organization Succeeds the Review, Compliance Boards; To Consider Only Specific Charges of Code Unfairness

The National Recovery Administration this week made a new approach to the problem of settling complaints against existing codes of fair competition through the creation of an industrial appeals board to hear and pass upon charges of discrimination against small business.

Headed by Amos J. Peaslee, former head of the administration's compliance division, with John S. Clement, president of the Sandura Company, floor covering manufacturers, and Msgr. John A. Ryan, professor of social ethics at Catholic University, Washington, as the other members, the board will not receive general complaints against codes—as did the Darrow board, which it succeeds—but will hear and act upon specific charges that code provisions or orders of code authorities are onerous.

The new organization is generally considered to be a logical outgrowth of the National Recovery Review Board and the National Compliance Board, which recently was abolished. Cases coming before it will be the result of non-compliance charges to which the defense will be discrimination.

Profiting by its experience with the Darrow board, the administration is said to be determined that if discriminatory provisions of codes are to be considered it shall be done by some group within and under the control of the organization. Thus, the new appellate board, while nominally independent of all save the Administrator himself, will never be really free of administration dominance, a fact which undoubtedly will soon be stressed by those who bitterly fought codes before the National Recovery Review board.

New Board Will Hear Complaints

The object of the new board will be "to hear all complaints relative to the operation of the National Recovery Administration or the codes, particularly complaints of small businesses that the codes oppress or discriminate against them or favor monopolies."

When communications are received at NRA headquarters that some action of the NRA has operated unjustly toward a business firm, administrative officials, unless they can correct any abuse revealed, will forward the complaints to the Industrial Appeals Board for appropriate action.

"Likewise," it was explained, "should action of a code authority be alleged to bear unjustly upon a business organization, failing redress by the code authority, the matter will be taken up with the deputy administrator in charge, who will forward it to the appeals board."

No Direct Industry Connection

It was stressed that the board will have no direct connection with industry, but its appellate character will follow within the

In cases of complaints by small businesses, the new board may recommend the granting of relief by exemptions from, exceptions to, or modifications of, codes.

The Motion Picture Code Authority this week put its foot down hard on local clearance and zoning boards, ordering members immediately to dispose of all pending protests on current and new schedules filed before July 1. The order came as a result of the complaints of various distributors that holding up of the schedules had considerably retarded the 1934-35 sales season.

Of the 31 exchange centers, only 17 have been heard from, and while these key cities have sent in schedules for 35 cities in their territories, the Code Authority declared this week that local boards will not hear any complaints filed after the beginning of the current month.

On and after November 1, however, protests and new schedules may be filed for the 1935-36 season.

Assents Extended to August 15

The extension of the code assent date to August 15 by the Code Authority came up for discussion by Allied during the week. In its weekly advisory letter to members, Allied issued the following statement:

"Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt and the Big Eight in defending the code have many times asserted that it has the support of an overwhelming percentage of the exhibitors

IN COMPLIANCE WITH GRAPHIC ARTS CODE

The Code Authority of the periodical publishing and printing industry has issued to Quigley Publications an emblem symbolic of acceptance of, and compliance with, the Graphic Arts Code.

This emblem supersedes the Blue Eagle issued to Quigley Publications for compliance with the President's re-employment agreement. It establishes that MOTION PICTURE HERALD and the other Quigley Publications are carrying out the hours and wage conditions of the code of the publishing industry and that they are complying with the code of fair trade practices adopted by the industry.

Important under the provisions for fair trade practice in the publishing code is a pledge of absolute editorial independence and a requirement that advertising rates comply with the registered rate cards of publications.

Film Code Authority Orders Quick Disposition of Local Clearance; Allied Interprets Extension of Assent Date

as witnessed by the number of assents on file. This contention was dishonest because (1) actually only a small percentage of independent exhibitors filed assents and (2) assent did not imply approval, as was made plain by the Johnson-Richberg interpretation dated February 21, 1934.

"Now the truth is out! So few signed that the Code Authority has not been able to make expenses and another attempt will be made to get exhibitors to come in and share in the expense of the elaborate code machinery. Accordingly, the time in which to assent will be again extended until August 15."

Producer selections to the actors' and writers' committee were made last week by the Code Authority. These supplement selections made by Mr. Rosenblatt and are as follows:

Actors: E. J. Mannix (MGM), J. J. Gain (Fox), Frank O'Heron (RKO), Nat Levine (Mascot), Sam Briskin (Columbia). Respective alternates are: Fred Pelton (MGM), William Koenig (Warner), Al Kaufman (Paramount), M. H. Hoffman (Liberty), Abraham Lehr (Samuel Goldwyn).

Writers: Irving Thalberg (MGM), Darryl Zanuck (20th Century), I. E. Chadwick, Henry Henigson (Universal), Sol Wurtzel (Fox). Respective alternates are: Hal Wallis (Warner), Samuel Goldwyn, Larry Darmour (Majestic), Harry Cohn (Columbia), Merrill Hurlburt (Paramount). Victor H. Clark was named to succeed Al Berries as temporary alternate for Pat Casey on the code labor committee.

More than a dozen complaints against theatres using the game "Screeno" have been upheld by the Chicago grievance board, which previously had called the practice a lottery. The inventor of the game has indicated he will take the matter up with the Code Authority on the ground the game is one which involves skill. Screeno is the old game known variously as Keeno, Bunko, Lotto, Corno, etc., and theatre patrons are given a card to punch while numbers are flashed on a dial-faced clock operated from the projection room.

The throwing out of cases against the Harry Huffman theatres in Denver for lack of evidence and the declaration that "bank nights" are unfair to competing exhibitors were the highlights of last week's meeting of the Denver board. Eight theatres had filed protests against the Huffman theatres.

In Kansas City, 27 theatres, including 24 independents and three downtown first runs, have filed formal appeals with the Code Authority on the new clearance schedule adopted for the territory. Inadequate protection for first runs is the burden of protest by Loew's Midland, Publix Newman and the RKO Mainstreet.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG

Warner

The outstanding showman's sales punches are suggested by the facts that the story ran serially in Liberty; that it is an unusually mystery yarn involving three murders, and a novel twist in the solution, credited to the criminal lawyer.

Erle Stanley Gardner, the author, has sold the screen rights to his next four stories to Warner. Ben Markson, who collaborated with Earle Baldwin on "Here Comes the Navy," did the screen play. The director is Alan Crosland, whose latest previous effort was "Midnight Alibi."

Warren William, who had top honors in "The Dragon Murder Case" and will do "The Case of the Curious Bride" as his next, plays the featured rule of the attorney. The other important names are Mary Astor, who was in "Return of the Terror," Helen Trenholme, New York stage actress, Dorothy Tree and Allen Jenkins, which comprises a part of the familiar Warner contract group.

The story has all the essentials for a fast moving, thrilling and puzzling screen drama. It involves a series of secret love trysts, mistaken identities and matrimonial snags among a big city's social set, ultimately ending in the mysterious murder of three, with an eerie effect achieved by a mournfully howling police dog moving threadlike in the background and yet a substantial element of the story.

Important to showmen is the fact that Warner plans a series of similar mystery thrillers, featuring William in the same characterization he creates in "Case of the Howling Dog." These in all probability will be penned by the same author.

Inasmuch as there is to be a series of these same mysteries and judging from the unusual nature of this one, it appears that resourceful showmanship possibilities are open for the exhibitor.—M. W.

NOW AND FOREVER

Paramount

This modern drama is based upon the play, "Honor Bright," authored by Jack Kirkland and Melville Baker, whose previous screen credits include "Zoo in Budapest." The screen play is by Austin Parker, who did "Shanghai Madness," "Broadway and Back" and "Mandalay." The director, Henry Hathaway, made "The Witching Hour" and "Come On, Marines."

The cast is of unusual showmanship importance inasmuch as the leading players have been associated with currently successful pictures, and a well known newcoming stage actress is introduced. Gary Cooper, currently in "Operator 13," has the lead. Opposite him is Carole Lombard, whose work in Columbia's "20th Century" with John Barrymore has given her a new prestige. Listed third, but probably the one having more patron drawing influence than any of the others, is little Shirley Temple. The stage actress making her screen debut is Charlotte Granville, who has appeared in many metropolitan successes. Best known of those in the supporting cast are Henry Kolker, Jameson Thomas and Gilbert Emery. Atmospheric and bit parts are handled by unknowns.

In addition to the showmanship potentialities of the cast, there is a novel value in the story. It revolves around a situation that is unique and builds to a climax seldom attempted. The locale includes Paris, Monte Carlo and other Continental spots. Cooper, a confidence man, desiring to go straight, adopts Shirley Temple. Driven, however, by Miss Lombard's insistence upon easy money, and the influence of Sir Guy Standing, he becomes involved in a robbery of Miss Granville, which compels him to surrender the child to her. Standing being eliminated, Cooper and Miss Lombard take up their old game of "taking" the suckers.—McCarthy.

HIDEOUT

MGM

Here is romantic comedy drama which begins on the "great white way" and has an ironic windup on the Connecticut country side. It's about an easy-money boy, who works his racket among the bright lights and takes his pick of dames, but finally falls for a farmer's daughter. Penned by Mauri Grashin and adapted to the screen by Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich, the story appears plentiful in mass appeal suggesting ripe exploitation possibilities. W. S. Van Dyke, whose last picture was "The Thin Man," is the director.

The star is Robert Montgomery, the same Montgomery of "Riptide," in a tailor-made role. The important supporting cast names are Maureen O'Sullivan, seen in "The Thin Man," Edward Arnold, Elizabeth Patterson and Mickey Rooney, a youngster who is said to add much to the picture.

The story deals with a young racketeer, who plays Broadway to the limit. The town gets too hot for him and the cops chase him out. He is shot in the shoulder and is taken in by a simple country family. He recovers and sticks around, milking cows, while romance blooms between himself and the farmer's daughter. He's finally sent up the river but the girl waits.

Incidental music includes two numbers by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed titled "The Dream Was So Beautiful," sung by Louise Henry, new MGM contract player, and "Shake Your Feet," already published with music and records now available. Lynn Cowan, musical director and master of ceremonies and composer of "Dream House," also appears in the picture.

From all indications "Hideout" affords star name power, comedy, romance and fast moving action for showmen to work on.—M. W.

AMONG THE MISSING

Columbia

This is an action drama of jewel thievery, carloads of cops and an old lady who becomes implicated but finally reforms the crooks. The title suggests an element of mystery and points to a particular brand of showmanship which fits in well with the present trend for mystery yarns.

Florence Wagner is the author. Screen play credits go to Fred Niblo, Jr., and Herbert Asbury. The director is Al Rogell, who directed the Edmund Lowe-Victor McLaglen picture, "No More Women," for Paramount, and "Below the Sea" for Columbia.

Richard Cromwell, who ranks first on fan mail at Columbia and is now working in "That's Gratitude," is starred. The old lady, who is among the missing and subject to an intensive search by the law, is played by Henrietta Crosman, star of "Pilgrimage." The other featured players are Billy Seward, unknown to the screen but known to New York legitimate audiences; Arthur Hohl, who had one of the important roles in "A Man's Castle," Ivan Simpson, Ben Taggart and Wade Boteler.

The story centers around the sudden disappearance of Miss Crosman. Cromwell and Hohl, jewel thieves, reach her first, plant the hot jewelry on her and take her with them. There follows a series of chases and robberies culminating in the arrest of Miss Crosman on theft charges. Cromwell exonerates her at police headquarters and while the gang takes a rap, he is handed a suspended sentence and given over into the custody of Miss Crosman, completely reformed.

The picture indicates general audience appeal to be hopped on with heavy showmanship artillery.—M. W.

WANTED

Fox-Wurtzel

Here is tropical romantic drama involving a woman and two men, etched against the somewhat primitive and colorful background of the East Indies. The immediate locale is a fictional kingdom in British North Borneo. In this locale and love triangle possibly lies the key to the showman's campaign. The story is a screen adaptation by Lester Cole and Stuart Anthony from the short story, "The Painted Lady," written by Larry Evans. Louis King, responsible for "Murder in Trinidad," directs.

The cast has such names as Rosemary Ames, who was featured in "I Believe in You" and "Such Women are Dangerous." She appears in the main characterization, as a woman who has fought life at many stations. Victor Jory is the heavy, a ruthless half-caste. This is Jory's first role on the home lot in three pictures, having been on loan to Warner for that number, among them being "DuBarry." Russell Hardie, who did a featured role in MGM's "Murder in the Private Car," and under contract to that studio, has the romanic lead. Will Stanton does a comedy role.

The story is a typical drama of the tropics. The girl falls in love with a man whom she believes too good for her. She flees from him but returns when he is injured. She destroys his enemy and their love ultimately overcomes all moral obstacles.

Sidney Clare and Harry Akst, who penned the music, have included a song titled "Wanted, Someone," which is of popular calibre. Miss Ames sings it.

The colorful locale and general nature of the story suggest a definite type of ballyhoo for elemental interest and elemental drama in romantic setting.—M. W.

MGM Signs Chevalier

Maurice Chevalier has signed a long term contract with MGM. He will begin work at the studio following a picture for Alexander Korda of London Films.

Close Deal on Short

Film Exchange, Inc., New York, has closed with Edward J. O'Toole, for distribution of Mr. O'Toole's two-reel subject, "Desert Dangers."

Blessed Event FOR SHOWMEN

It's cause for rejoicing when showmen get together and kick out dat ole debbil double bill. Educational steps up its production budget and the short subjects step out for finer entertainment all through the show.

Here's dog-gone good news for the exhibitors who are just going back to the ideal form of varied picture program . . . and for the wise ones who never left it . . .

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Unionville, Missouri

DEAR HERALD:

Down here in this wooded part of Missouri is where the oldtimers keep a pack of hounds to chase foxes. Chasing foxes is an event with a lot of Missourians that supersedes the county and state fairs in importance. The oldtimer down here who doesn't have a pack of hounds is not considered eligible to belong to the F.F.V.'s.

To kill a fox down here would be equal to killing a bullsnake out on the range, for out there the bullsnake is considered the deadly enemy of the rattlesnake, and when he finds a rattler's trail he goes up it like a streak of lightning and it is just too bad for Mr. Rattler, for the bullsnake won't leave him until he is dead, so when you come down here don't kill any foxes. If you want to get one of these oldtimers interested don't bother to ask him about his crops and his hogs, but ask him about his hounds, how many he has and if any of them have had pups yet. Of course they are not all this way. Many have moved in here from other states and have not acquired the fox chasing habit yet. There are some who don't even own a hound, but they are not real Missourians.

A Missourian and His Hounds

Some people claim they can tell a real Missourian by the number of mules he owns but we know a surer way than that, and that is by the number of hounds he has, but for all that they are delightful people, very accommodating and courteous and we don't care to know any better.

Perhaps some of you remember the story a theatreman told us some time ago which we reported in this supposedly intelligent colyum. It seems that a preacher came out here to visit an old friend of former years who happened to own a pack of hounds, and to show the preacher a good time he took him out on a fox hunt. The night was cold and frosty and they built a log fire to ward off the cold. Nothing happened until along about midnight when the pack picked up a fox trail and the entire bunch began to beller as loud as they could. The owner got so excited that he jumped up and down and clapped his hands and said: "Listen to that heavenly music, Elder." The parson, who was somewhat cold and pretty thoroughly disgusted, replied: "Why, Ezra, I can't hear anything for them damned hounds."

If chasing foxes with hounds is as much fun as hunting coon of a night with a coon dog we could qualify as a fullfledged Missourian without being vouched for. Anyhow we hope to be always as courteous as these people, for they will go out of their way to accommodate you.

Meeting Some Showmen

Over at Unionville we found one of those who look upon fox chasing about the same as we do fishing for muskies. His name is G. W. Summers and he operates the Royal theatre. We had a delightful visit with him and also met his operator, Otis H. Butler, who has been in the business ever since Lucy got sick on parsnips that time, and we found that both of them swear by the HERALD. We don't mean that they use profanity, for they don't, but they both know a good thing when they see it. We hope to meet them again some time.

C. L. Hurdle is working for the film companies at the Karyl theatre at Milan but he has succeeded in saving out a few dimes for himself. We know some other of the boys who would like to learn just how it is done, and Mr. Hurdle does it by hard labor and honest tactics.

Virgil Harbison at Tarkio has his hands pretty well filled trying to make one end meat and the other bread at the Tarkio theatre. We haven't any bullfrogs but if we had some we'd bet the whole bunch that Harbison would make it go.

Frank Anderson operates the Family theatre at Kirksville and Frank keeps both eyes on the business, and that's why the Family is one of the popular playhouses of the northwest.

The Foam Ran Over

Jerry Baker gives them their money's worth at the Kennedy theatre at Kirksville. Kirksville is where they teach the boys how to rub the lumbago and other things out of 'em at so much per rub and it is the Mecca of the whole osteopath fraternity, besides some of the other boys and girls. The guy who rubbed our lumbago out of us graduated here. Jerry rubs the dimes and nickels out of the customers at the Kennedy; he is also a doctor, for he prescribed for us but the foam ran over the top.

Chillicothe has two theatres. The Ritz is operated by Dick Curry and the Dickinson is under the supervision of J. E. McCannon. Neither of them have patches on the seats of their pants, which indicates that they are both hustlers and do the most of their work on their feet. McCannon is the second circuit operator who ever subscribed for the HERALD from us; the other boy lived in Idaho, as we remember it now. Too many of these circuit operators leave the heavy thinking to New York and not to the HERALD, and New York sometimes gets things wrong end to.

L. A. Williams operates the theatre at Mexico. Mexico is a town in Missouri and not a country south of the Rio Grande, although there is a country down there by that name, but Williams would sooner operate the Liberty and live in Missouri than live below the Rio Grande, which shows good judgment on Williams' part. We've been in both places.

Might Fish Out the Window

Were you ever in Louisiana, Missouri? This town is located in a canyon. It is about three miles long and seventy-five feet wide except at the business end and here it spreads out a little to give the former Champ Clark room to build a bridge across the Mississippi.

If they had built Louisiana a hundred feet farther east they could have sat in the back bedroom and fished out of the window in the Mississippi for cat fish, and wouldn't that have been something?

One of the things that makes Louisiana famous over this Midwestern country is Russell Armentrout of the Clark theatre. If you ever go to Louisiana look up the Clark theatre and go and see a good show and tell Russell we sent you there. He probably won't care anything about that, but, anyhow, you will get to see the Mississippi and a mighty good show, and that will be worth the trouble, and you might get to see Russell also, which ought to help a whole lot. He came out to our camp and spent the evening with us and we had a delightful visit. Somehow when we visit these boys we always feel like the fellow did when he wrote:

Life is a plank of driftwood
Upon the watery main.
Another plank encounters,
Meets, touches and parts again.

Thus 'tis with us forever
On life's unresting sea,
We meet and greet and sever
Drifting eternally.

We wouldn't want to say that all of the best people moved west, but we will venture to say that all of those who moved west were mighty good people, and there have been some born here, besides, which includes these Missouri exhibitors. After you have been to Louisiana you want to go and see the Bagnell dam. This dam is the wonder of all of Missouri, and several other nations. It is built across the Osaga River and it backs the water up and forms a lake 95 miles long and has a shore line of thirteen hundred miles. The water in some places is said to be 125 feet deep, and we are taking their word for it rather than try to prove it. This lake is formed right in the Ozark hills and it is, indeed, as they say, "The Playground of America." Fishing is said to be excellent, and fine cabins can be had all along the shore line in the timber. Boy, but wouldn't we like to put in September and October there? Wish we had more space to give to this beautiful spot, but Ernie thinks we have already said too much; he's so particular that way.

NEW CONTRIBUTORS TO THE DEPARTMENT

This week we welcome two exhibitors to the ranks of the reporters to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. Their initial contributions will be found in this issue. They are:

C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla.

Oze Tessier, Jr., Bayliss Square Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF!

GAUMONT BRITISH is definitely committed to the policy that exhibitors should be accorded the privilege of seeing all product before buying. We are selling pictures, not promises.

Another policy of outstanding importance to exhibitors is based on our firm conviction that pictures of the highest entertainment quality can be produced without resort to suggestive action or dialogue; that wit and humor, tense drama and convincing realism can be achieved without sacrifice of decency.

We are now prepared to screen any, or all of our "SELECT TWELVE" group, for exhibitors who are desirous of presenting clean pictures with one hundred per cent audience and box-office appeal.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones—A good western. Worth running if you play westerns. Played July 3-4.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—Very good, plenty of action. Fine for Friday and Saturday. Recording good. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HOLD THE PRESS: Tim McCoy—The usual run of Columbia's action pictures, nothing to tear your shirt about. McCoy out of his western roles seems lost. Played July 6-7.—Bob Ouellete, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable—One of the most satisfactory offerings. We did better than normal business. Everybody pleased. Played June 13-14.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Solus, N. Y. Neighborhood patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable—This is the first picture in three years that has built up each day, the last night being better than the first. Everybody liked it and every exhibitor should try to play it. It is pictures like this, so clean, so wholesome, so very entertaining, that our patrons want to see. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 1-2-3.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—An excellent production of its kind, but various commencement week festivities cut in on attendance. Played June 27-28.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robson—We played this remarkably fine production late, but by giving it our personal guarantee we did better than normal business for this time of year. We consider this offering as good as it is possible to present anywhere. Played June 30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William—This one is way above the average. Wish we could play fine pictures like this all the time. May Robson should be thanked and Columbia deserves credit on such films. Played June 30-July 1.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—Poor recording and, in the estimation of our patrons, a poor picture, and believe me, they did not hesitate to tell us that they did not like it. We were very much disappointed, both in picture and box-office. Played June 16-17-18.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Good western for Saturday. Played June 23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—A good programmer, but our business was hit by warm weather and the opening band concert of the season. Played June 23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Ralph Bellamy—A fairly entertaining picture that seemed to please. No walkouts. Held up for three days to average business. Played June 3-4-5.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Walter Connolly, Ralph Bellamy—This is a mighty good program picture. One of the best hospital stories we ever played. Great acting and a good story and clean entertainment. Played July 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Walter Connolly—Just fair. Did not see this, but nothing big. Just a program. Running time, seven reels. Played May 19.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi—A rather uninteresting program picture. Our customers didn't care for it. Put this one over on your off nights, or better still, put it on the shelf and no one will ever miss it. Did average business here. Played June 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SONG YOU GAVE ME, THE: Bebe Daniels—If you haven't played it don't play it; trade it for anything. Never so many walks on any picture. Rotten recording and another English cast ruin a good star. Poorest box-office picture I ever ran. Played May 20.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy—Seems to be enjoyed by McCoy fans. Everyone seems to like him in his new pictures better than when he was in westerns. Played May 30-31.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

STRAIGHTAWAY: Tim McCoy—Very ordinary thrill drama. The newsreel shots in this have been used so often now that they don't thrill anybody any more. Business under average.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHTAWAY: Tim McCoy—Here is a picture of the auto race tracks that has plenty of thrills. Lots of action but didn't draw so big. Played June 26-27.—Harold C, Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones—Don't know if you would classify this as a western picture or not, but it has plenty of action and pleased the midweek patrons. Did better than average business. Played July 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas. Wash. Small town patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—A good action picture. Story entertaining. Tim always makes a good showing in any picture but I still say westerns are his long shot.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt—Just a program picture. Played to slightly less than average business. Picture would have been more satisfactory if they had given it a happier ending. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 20.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

First National

CONVENTION CITY: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This proved to be a washout for us. Had a good Sunday night house, then only had 16 on Monday night. Personally I feel like this is one of the pictures that has caused the church people to launch their fight against salacious pictures. Everybody in it gets drunk or nearly.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DARK HAZARD: Edward G. Robinson—Although I have read lots of comments to the contrary, personally I think this was a very good picture. We ran this on a Family Night and every one seemed pleased. Of course, Robinson has made much better pictures, but this one will get by very nicely. Played July 4-5.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis—Kay Francis is a good draw. I didn't think much of this one so only gave it one day, but it comes up to snuff though its locale makes it bad to play during hot weather. Played June 26.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—This I call one of the best musical pictures of the year. Powell did great singing. Rogers and O'Brien did great acting. In fact, the whole cast was fine and a good plot to the picture. Cawthorn, Jenkins, Mitchell and other old timers helped make this one of, if not the best entertainment of all the musicals we have played and it is clean. I could not see one suggestive spot. Played July 8-9.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—Joe E. will have to make two or three humdingers to make his "dear public" forget this one. There isn't a good laugh in it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson—Gave satisfaction but didn't do business. Not as well liked as "Footlight Parade." Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 17-18-19.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

Fox

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, John Boles—A swell show with everything it takes to make one. Business was way off on account of the heat, but still it did better than "Stand Up and Cheer" which cost much more. Played June 29-30.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: John Boles—Very entertaining musical that probably would have done nice business if we had not had such hot weather. The romance and the comedy in this are all above par. Pat Paterson is a darling.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Paterson, Spencer Tracy—Very good, but not as good as some of the other musicals. Running time, 10 reels. Played June 22-23.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: "Pat" Paterson, Herbert Mundin—Nice story. lots of action, good acting. Made a dandy Saturday picture. It's full of entertainment. Played June 30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor—Nice picture, well acted. Did not do as well as expected, but "nothing draws as of old." Running time, 10 reels. Played May 17-18.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A good show for every one. Clean, wholesome entertainment. Don't fail to get behind this one. Why don't Fox make more like these with this ideal screen pair. Running time, 78 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor—Better than expected from reports. Not as good as some of the Gaynors but went over in nice shape. James Dunn helps the picture immensely.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—This is a big letdown from "Carolina." It is more like "The First Year"; just sweet but slow. It's too bad that a better story was not selected for the reunion of these two stars. Receipts fell off sharply after first day and lots of folks complained about being disappointed.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—A good all-around picture, amusing but not silly. Drew very well. Running time, 10 reels. Played May 17-18.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—This one pleased the Will Rogers fans as well as drew extra business to the box-office. There were people at the theatre that hadn't been for over a year.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—A very good western that is sure to please your western picture fans. O'Brien's westerns always have the best scenery shots. Played June 29-30.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—A nice musical. Some of the songs a little raw, but it seems that is all songwriters' and producers' minds run on now. I do not agree with some that this feature is slow. In spots real good musical. Running time, nine reels. Played June 13-14.—C. A. Kelly, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Ran this on a Family Night and it seemed to please very well as it is a very good piece of entertainment. This Claire Trevor gal is becoming very popular, more so with each picture, and teamed up with Dunn makes a pretty good picture. Can't kick on this one. Played June 27-28.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—This was a very interesting story of the carnival with a few spots and scenes that were a little hot. I found my patrons were fully entertained. Drew a little above average and was much better than the first effort, "The Barker," with Milton Sills.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn—Pleased nearly all but fell flat at the box-office. I just couldn't get them to come and see this one. Personally thought this was the best from this pair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—This one got $13.10 more than any Will Rogers picture in the past. Must have been Zasu Pitts that helped as it was very hot both days. Couldn't take care of the crowds; had to send them away; should have played another day. Every one pleased and was commenting on the picture next day. It's old but play it anyway if you haven't already done so.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—This one nearly starved to death in my town and what few came failed to care for it, so I will have to leave Harvey out of my town.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor—We played this rather late but the undisputed excellence of this little drama drew for us quite a number who had seen it elsewhere and who declared themselves as much pleased with it, even more so, than the first time they saw it. Very few pictures are as simple and easily understood by patrons in all walks of life and all ages. One would have to go far afield indeed to find any little tiniest spot on which to pin any adverse criticism, and the one who saw, or thought he saw, such a spot would have to be endowed with super-eyesight or afflicted with jaundice, where all things look yellow. In other words, such an individual would be adjudged a crank, not a critic, by 99 per cent of the movie fans. We had a 40 per cent attendance which returned a 100 per cent approval. But what we started to say was: "Paddy" is not "next best" but of the "best." Played July 5.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor—I played this one so old the print was shot to pieces and was forced to call the Memphis office to get me another picture to take its place.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY: Otto Kruger, Nancy Carroll, Heather Angel, Herbert Mundin—If you have to pay for it, do so and don't play it. The nearest to nothing I ever saw and patrons agreed with me. This man Nigel Bruce is terrible. Can't understand half he says. Hope never to have him in a picture again. Played June 28-29.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, James Dunn, Shirley Temple—A hodge podge of nonsense and a mess in every sense of the word. How and why they wasted a wonderful cast on a thing like this is beyond the ken of me and my patrons. Plenty of complaints on this one. July 4th was a good time to play it, but even then it meant less than nothing. Played July 4-5.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, Shirley Temple—Personally, I liked it better than any musical I have seen this year. Entertainment from start to finish. I can't understand but my patrons (with a few exceptions) did not like it. Our newspaper man said the story was silly, others said they were bored and could hardly wait for it to end, and a few left. The longer I am in the show business, the less I know about what the public wants. Played July 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—An average program picture to average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Zasu Pitts, Charles Starrett—Here's another one that provides real enjoyable entertainment. I had people telling me about it two or three weeks after we played it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Zasu Pitts, Sally Eilers—Gave splendid satisfaction. Picture has a little of everything to make it good comedy. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 21-22-23.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

Majestic

YOU MADE ME LOVE YOU: Thelma Todd—The funniest comedy feature I have run this year. It will take your customers for an evening of laughs that come from away down low. Played June 20-21. —M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

MGM

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—Good entertainment for the classes but not a box-office picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—Better than I expected after reading some adverse comments on this picture. I found this to be a little above the average comedy, also drew a little above average at the box-office on Bargain Nights.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—This is a fairly good picture of the drama type that will appeal to the masses. Nothing big but a good little program picture. It is practically different from anything before and should please everyone. In addition to the stars it has an excellent supporting cast that adds much to the entertainment value. It is a little old, but we played on Bargain Day to a good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—Yes, it cost a lot of money to make and the exhibitor paid and paid, but not the public. The worst business on Sunday and Monday in over a year. Just an educational picture that will make your patrons squirm and move around. They couldn't take it nor could I, nor can you if it does as little business for you as it did for me.—Robert K. Yancey. Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All Star Musical—This is certainly a novelty and our patrons liked it. Most all of the funny guys are in it and they were all working. All I can say is it satisfied all we got in to see it. Did not break the house record, but none of them do nowadays. The bigger they are the harder they fall. Played July 1-2.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker—This gal Parker is sure to be one of the big ones in the next few pictures if she will just get the breaks in story material. This one drew above average and pleased as nearly 100 per cent as possible.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—Was a little above the average for a mystery picture and so was my business. Seemed to please generally.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—A real good mystery drama that will keep them on the edge of their seats. The romantic angle is also blended in nicely and a wow of a thrill ending. Clean enough to use Sunday. Drawing power about what you expect during the hot spell.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhod patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery—Regardless of the fact that this is Shearer and she has a definite following that will come, it is a large, juicy piece of fromage (cheese to you). The haw-haw British dialect is back and as I have repeatedly said before, this dialect is a plain pain with the average small town audience. When an exhibitor said that Shearer acted simply silly he put it mildly. She does. Fair business the first day, and I and the house cat made up most of the audience the second day. Most of our patrons that I contacted were bitterly disappointed. Figured they had wasted an evening. I think that the Purity League is ninety per cent wrong in the pictures that they have listed, but it is such pictures as this type that have added fuel to the fire. Marshall, who I know to be an Englishman, used the British dialect in this and I know from pictures that we have run that he can talk American if he wants to.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer—Not well liked and not a drawing card. Banned by churches.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—Did good business on this and pleased all who saw it. It's a pleasure to run pictures like this one. Played June 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller —Swell. Business was good even for the hot weather and that's saying something in this town. Everyone that came liked it. It was full of thrills and the public isn't wise to the way they take these pictures. Besides it was so well done that you couldn't see anything faked about it unless you looked twice. Played July 1-2-3.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore—This was a surprise picture for me as it made expenses and that is very out of the ordinary for a Barrymore picture to do for me. It was a good picture with a very interesting story but as far as my box-office is concerned Barrymore can go on the farm.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Baintor—A splendid entertaining picture. Clean and well acted. The whole cast fine. If we could get more like it we could begin to get people back to picture shows. They have gotten tired of suggestive pictures. Even the roughnecks won't come to see them. I hope they will clean them up or out. The day has gone by when you can do business on unclean pictures.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore—A very good and entertaining picture, with the usual superb acting of Lionel Barrymore and a supporting cast that makes this picture please your patrons. Above the average of the ordinary run of program pictures. Had quite a few comments on this one. Played June 27-28.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery—A big show in every respect and should do big business but for some reason or other it doesn't. Average business here in spite of heavy advertising campaign. Running time, 112 minutes. Played June 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery—Truly one fine show that got way above average, and did it get the money? Boy, they came and came until they ran the theatre over, then came some more. This is a story that will please only the men and boys.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery—It is a big noisy picture. Not much to write home about. Beery will draw them in whenever he is the star. But such pictures as this do not leave a good taste for people to want to see such pictures again. It don't help us theatre folks to build good will for the future. Running time, 115 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson—This one is a natural and if Metro keeps on giving Robson this type of role she will be another Marie Dressler. Laughs, human interest, comedy, drama, everything in it is good clean amusement, and our patrons on the way out asked when we would get another picture with May Robson in it, so it must be good. Played July 4-5.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

Monogram

BEGGARS IN ERMINE: Lionel Atwill—Extra compliments on this one show that it was enjoyed very much. A real down-to-earth picture which makes customers glad they came. Average business. Played June 20-21.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

BROKEN DREAMS: Randolph Scott, Martha Sleeper—A mighty good program picture. Clean and entertaining. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CITY LIMITS: Ray Walker—Hats off to Monogram for this splendid comedy that shakes the customers with real belly laughs. This Ray Walker is a whiz. Played June 13-14.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

GALLANT FOOL: Bob Steele—A circus picture that is so good that my patrons easily forgave me for not giving 'em their regular Saturday night western. I'm here to tell you, and I'm telling it. This little picture was not sardine hut a full grown whale. I didn't exactly "mop up," but then I'm no scrub lady nohow. After all, the people did fairly well by our "Little Nellie," meaning our box-office, of course. I saw it three times myself, which is not exactly "damning it with faint praise." Monogram needs to offer apology to no one for this picture. Played June 30.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HE COULDN'T TAKE IT: Ray Walker—A very good program picture liked by everyone. Did extra business on Wednesday and Thursday. Don't pass it up. Played June 6-7.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

HE COULDN'T TAKE IT: Ray Walker, Virginia Cherrill—Played this on a double bill and it satisfied a Saturday crowd. Good comedy, little rough in spots, but story clean and moral. Good entertainment of this type. The star is very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—Monogram has hit the nail on the head again. This time Ray Walker wisecracks his way through 65 minutes of darn good entertainment, ably assisted by pretty little Jacqueline Wells. Plenty of laughs and it pleased every one 100 per cent. Don't be afraid to step on it, and keep your eye on Monogram this year; they are coming through with pictures that the big producers would be proud to release. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 23.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage. The above report appeared in the July 7th issue as a Majestic picture.

SENSATION HUNTERS: Arline Judge, Preston

Foster—Played on a double bill and the other picture was good. The less said about this one the better. It did not give satisfaction. We played it old; perhaps it was better when it was first released.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage. The above report appeared in the July 7th issue as a Majestic picture.

SIXTEEN FATHOMS DEEP: Sally O'Neil, Creighton Chaney—A very good novelty picture. Well acted. Played on doube bill and gave good satisfaction. When people think enough of any picture nowadays to tell you about it and say it is good and they are satisfied, it is worth playing.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Buster Crabbe—A sweet little picture which pleased everyone. It is far better than some of the major productions, and the only mar was a badly damaged sound track on one reel. We played this very old, but it drew a fair business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 20-21.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins—Now don't do like I did. Noticed many reports and all of 'em said this was poor and they were right. If you want mc to tell you, pay for this and leave it, for goodness sake don't show this picture in any part of the week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BOLERO George Raft, Carole Lombard, Sally Rand—The kind of picture you expect it to be. It is dance, dance, dance, and the execution of the dances is better than any movie thus far. The censors can not say anything as they did not give Sally a break, but even at that she put it over. It is exotic. Business opened better than average first night at advanced admission, but did not hold up as good as average for balance of run. Only attracted socalled better class of patronage.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard—A splendidly produced picture that is well acted. but it did not gross much more than film rental. Advertised it heavily. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 24-25-26.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft—Can be classed above average. George Raft has about the most important role to date. This is expensively produced. The music and dancing of a highly entertainment nature, all almost spoiled by George Raft's death at the end. The picture does not really call for a tragic ending. He was not such a bad guy, true he was not such a hero, being rather selfish, but for story purposes the tragic ending was not needed. I wonder why producers can not learn such simple basic facts, that folks come to be entertained and not to take death from the theatre, where they seek relaxation. Tragedy has its place in drama. it is true, and should only be used where it is absolutely needed and not worked in when it can be avoided. Fair drawing power in hot weather. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft—A very good picture. Well acted, good dancing. Pleased most people who saw it, which were not too many. Running time, nine reels. Played May 25-26.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen—A rollicking picture. All patrons came out smiling. Ye exhibitor answered smile for smile as they emerged. From force of habit, I continued to smile after counting up the receipts, but this was altogether a different smile. Something like the one I wore when I first learned about my frost bitten deposits. But if banks did freeze your deposits and potential patrons did not potent, what are you goin' to do, I ax you? Played July 3-4.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino —Plenty of action, regular marine talk. A good Saturday show if you are not too particular about rough stuff. Several funny situations, not the smut you get in McLaglen pictures. Played June 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino —Our weekend crowd enjoyed this light comedy drama of the Marines in jungle troubles. No serious angle except when bandits attack the tourists and are battled by the Marines. Running time, 66 minutes. Played June 29-30.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—One of the finest pieces of acting I have ever seen. Have been reading reports where this picture flopped for most exhibitors. Well, we did not make enough to pay off the mortgage, but it more than paid expenses, and pleased about 50-50. Advertised it big. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 27-28.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—Good picture. Not a box-office asset.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March, Evelyn Venable—Rather heavy drama with Fredric March, the "Angel of Death," taking a holiday and visiting earth as a mortal. Exceptionally good acting and good production work made this a high class picture that pleased Sunday crowd. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 10-11.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Fredric March, Gary Cooper, Miriam Hopkins, Edward Everett Horton—A very good picture. Miriam Hopkins deserves special mention to hold her own among this flock of performers who command the situation whenever they appear on the screen, but this little girl held her own and did it well. Business less than average first four days of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

GOOD DAME: Sylvia Sidney—Very good to average business. Will please the women.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—Drew and pleased nearly 100 per cent. In fact, the first Zane Grey in a long time to make any real money. —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—Paramount gets the medal for the best western picture of all time. This is absolutely the prize winner of all westerns. It is based on Zane Grey's story and is full of action, thrills, fast riding, fighting and romance. Just the type of show that will please all western fans and should draw extra business. Boost this as the best western ever made. Played one day to best business in months. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—If you ask me, Paramount, please do not make any more Jackie Cooper pictures. They do not make good box-office for general patronage. I am not so sure this one would even make good entertainment for kids' matinee, as it features a man running away with another man's wife. Very weak material for photoplay.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Ann Sothern —The play had some wonderful singing and Charlie Ruggles furnished the comedy. It was a play that pleased everyone. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 16-17.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross—This picture is entertaining. Although it has its lagging moments, it keeps your interest throughout. It has comedy, music and romance. With a good surrounding bill you have a good clean show. Running time, 78 minutes. —Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland—Very fine. Draws extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

PRIVATE SCANDAL: Ned Sparks—A lot of hokum but a preview crowd enjoyed it immensely and that's what counts. The last half "rolled 'em in the aisles" which doesn't happen often. Yet I still say it's a lot of hokum. but it's the kind they like and so did I.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Buster Crabbe, Ida Lupino—This one got plenty of fine comments from my patrons as well as got some money in midweek dates. This was far better than an average story.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Buster Crabbe—For some reason this picture did not draw. We did very poor business with it. I don't think it was the picture's fault, as it was fairly good amusement, but the title did not help much, and the people here never heard of Paramount's "Search for Beauty" contest. I don't see how this picture could make much money for any small town. Played July 1-2-3.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Richard Arlen, Sally Eilers—A fair offering that is nothing that will live very long in the memory of your patrons, and if it does as little business for you as it did for me it won't be forgotten nearly as soon.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—Just fair. Recording not too good on some of it. No draw. Running time, nine reels. Played June 1-2. —C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland—With this lineup of comedians you would naturally expect a knockout, but it's too silly. It gets on your nerves before it's over. Didn't please and below average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Nice little program that should please. Played

June 26-27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Clean, clever comedy drama of the little actress substituted for the princess, as she tours the United States, hoping to secure a loan for her country. Best Sidney for many a month. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 20-21.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE-CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert—This picture caused me to get the razz for several weeks and it was a shame. I played it when Colbert had just made such a grand start in my town in "Torch Singer," Just not the type of story, entirely too silly.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott—Good western. All stars good. Business very good. It is hard to beat some of the old timers like Beery and others. Running time, six reels. Played June 29-30.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer City, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—Story of two brothers in love with the same girl. How Raft (one of the brothers) leaves to become a famous matador. The entire action is slow and will not carry your interest throughout. Running time, 69 minutes. —Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft, Frances Drake—Mexican locale, with a bullfight for climax. Clean and fairly interesting. Not a special. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 24-25.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Burns and Allen, Ethel Merman—Good musical with the women nuts about Crosby, so the audience was predominantly women. A few men dragged in by their wives and sweethearts. Further they had a girl that has what it takes, in Ethel Merman, that can dance and sing, and if they had left Bing out of a couple of songs of which he sang too many if you ask the audience, the picture would have been better. This Merman girl is easy on the eyes and has a splendid voice. Paramount is building too much of the show around Crosby and he is not the knockout they think he is with the average audience. A little restraint in this would have been better, and the girl Merman should have been given more of a part. Her first number with Errol was a knockout and it was my opinion that the audience were waiting for more from her and less of Crosby. Here's hoping that Ethel Merman comes again soon. She captured the audience with that first song.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby—Here is good clean entertainment. The only criticism heard, Bing sang too much and I agree, his singing really became tiresome. Other than this it's great entertaimcnt for all classes. Played June 21-22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—The most unique murder play that I have ever seen. The people will go for this play. Paramount gave us something new when they gave us this one. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 18-19.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown, John Halliday—Mystery murder case, with the solution having to do with the power of hypnotism. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 17-18. —P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. O. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Adrienne Ames—Clever comedy that pleased all. Wish we could get more of these. No sex rot, which is spoiling so many other pictures for our all-age crowds, typical of small towns. Running itme, 70 minutes. Played June 9.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—A good aviation picture. Dix good and cast likewise. Business only fair. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 28-29-30.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

BLIND ADVENTURE: Robert Armstrong—Played this on a double feature and wish I could have left it out. Another fine piece of junk. RKO say they didn't make it, some independent did it for them and he had to have his money. RKO just can't seem to make the grade with their own or anyone else's pictures. Played June 26.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Another good western by this popular star. The kind the country people enjoy on Saturday and go out of the show satisfied and tell you so.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan. Frances Dee—Not bad but did not bring any extras. Played June 28-29.—Harold C. Allsion, Baldwin Theatre. Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—It certainly is a pleasure to hear our people laugh instead of coming out of the movie with a sour face. Of course, the story is impossible, but it's funny. Played July 7-8.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

IF I WERE FREE: Irene Dunne, Clive Brook—A very nice little drama to which Irene Dunne and Clive Brook did full justice. Their acting talents were hardly extended in this picture, but it ended happily for all concerned except the box-office, and that's my concern, is it not? Played July 6.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston—Just fair. Did not please many, although Huston's acting is great. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 29-30. —A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn, Frances Dee. Constance Bennett, Paul Lukas—An excellent production which drew to the theatre many who seldom attend a performance. Played June 20-21.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff—A good picture of the kind. Great acting but a terrible flop at the box-office. The few that we did get in said they liked it, but the customers were scarce.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre. Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Very fair performance to fair business. Played June 16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts, Ned Sparks—Fair play. Zasu Pitts was the main attraction and her supporting cast was good. Wasn't much to the play, but all the actors were good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 12-13.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Pert Kelton, Nat Pendleton, Ned Sparks, Zasu Pitts—This is a silly picture and only the cast with Pendleton, Sparks and Kelton saving it. Zasu Pitts is wearing out with our public and she is the weak sister in the cast. Three in the last thirty days with her in the cast. Why they can't find another star that can do these dumb parts is beyond me, but in every picture you know just what she is going to do, no variation at all, another feminine Jimmy Durante. This, I know, that our public are tiring of her and are not backward in saying so. She has waggled her hands through so many pictures that she is getting to be an acute pain to our clientele.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts—Just seventy-two minutes wasted. This is one rotten picture. There is nothing in its favor. Keep Pitts in two rcelers and make feature pictures that are feature pictures. Running time, 72 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong—An overdrawn impossible picture for kids.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

SON OF THE BORDER: Tom Keene—Not much of a picture. Of course the picture is old and in the print we got the recording was terrible, but even with a new print it would still be a poor picture. Business average. Running time, 55 minutes. Played July 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—Good picture but too slow. Will draw some extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

SUCCESS AT ANY PRICE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—This picture had possibilities, but they were not used. As it is, it is not a picture for the mass because they won't understand it. Not for children, due to the drinking and other insinuations made by the characters of the photoplay. Running time, 74 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Irene Dunne, Ralph Bellamy —Very good program picture. Irene Dunne is a sweet singer. Recording good. Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker—Double billed this picture. It is a sweet little programmer, nothing big, but very clean and a pleasure to show. Pleased the ladies. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 29-30.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN: Lee Tracy, Sally Blane—It's as good as "Blessed Event." Just the type of show this Tracy should always be in. Patrons mostly young folks. Played July 1-2-3.—M. D. Utterback. Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

BITTER SWEET: Anna Neagle, Fernand Graavey —Terrible. Set it out.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft—Not worth running.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding—Very fine picture to extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre. Hartington Neb. General patronage.

HALLELUJAH, I'M A BUM: Al Jolson—Pleased about 90 per cent and drew a little above average at the box-office.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss, Boris Karloff—This is an excellent picture and pleased all who saw it, but business was smaller than expected. It is a historical drama of Europe in the late 1790's. Arliss turns in the best performance of his entire career as do the excellent supporting cast. This is perfect in regard to direction, acting and settings and should prove the best picture of the year. The closing scene in color was highly pleasing and very beautiful. Too bad that business should be so poor on such great entertainment as this. Played three days to fair business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 2-3-4.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman—With the English accent this was the poorest picture we have played in a long while. We repeat, very poor sound. Played July 5-6.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett—A big picture but we did not get film rental out of it. One of our worst box-office flops. Big enough, good enough, but no drawing power. Played June 24-25.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett—Good picture almost spoilcd by Constance trying to sing. Some extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Nev. General patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII, THE: Charles Laughton—Poor recording. English cast ruined this picture. Only thing held this picture was the acting of the star. Played June 17-18-19. M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor, Ruth Etting, Gloria Stuart, David Manners—This is only fair entertainment. It is a musical comedy with plenty of good music, beautiful girls and gorgeous costumes, but just another flop at our box-office. There are two drawbacks, the dream angle and the historic setting. These two types of shows never draw any business in our town as our public seems to be against them. Cantor is fast losing his popularity here and the receipts on each picture get smaller and smaller. The best scene in the entire show is the chariot race in the end. That is a "wow" and my patrons enjoyed every second of it. Practically every scene of Ruth Etting was cut, but the little part she did have was played beautifully and beautiful Gloria Stuart turns in some great acting. Played two days to only fair business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played June 25-26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHOOPEE: Eddie Cantor—This is one old reissue that turned them away for lack of standing room. Every one has been raving about what a show it was. Positively one of the best box-office draws ever produced. This picture did turn away business against the worst competition in months. I have yet to see a person who didn't like this show. I would like to see this picture reissued again in about five years. If you haven't played this over by all means do so, you won't be disappointed.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, David Manners—Just another one of those horror pictures that the people don't want to see. That must be it as they did not come to see it. The acting is great, but who wants to be horrified nowadays. Did not draw any business here. If you like this kind, this is a good one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—This was hard to follow and evidently has no drawing power, for we established a new low on it. Patsy Kelly just about stole the show. She was its one good asset.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson, Onslow Stevens—Pretty good mystery tale. Clean. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 15-16.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Paul Lukas, Constance Cummings—Several juveniles had been warned by their religious teachers not to attend the showing of this picture. Personally, I could not find much to warrant this ban. I don't, however, think Constance Cummings was properly cast here and I do think it was a little over-rated by the producers. I should call it a fairly good program picture entitled to only program picture rental. Played July 1-2.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Constance Cummings, Paul Lukas—

Fair program picture that fell flat at box-office. Recording fair. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

GUN JUSTICE: Ken Maynard—I do not usually play a western in midweek, but on my original date for this picture, June 16, a storm put our power and light company out of business for a few hours so our theatre remained dark on that night. Naturally, many patrons wanted to see that picture pronto. You know how it is. While I did not get a Saturday crowd, the receipts were above the average midweek. Those exhibitors who have a goodly number of western fans can offer this one with a guarantee. Played June 28th.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard, Cecelia Parker—Good enough western, but not up to Maynard's standard. Purposely or not, it harked back to the ten or fifteen-year-ago period of picture making.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HONOR OF THE RANGE: Ken Maynard—The usual Maynard western that drew a little extra at the box-office and pleased the western fans. Some said his best, some said good show. Played June 29-30.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—A great comeback opportunity for Lee Tracy after that little Mexican affair. This one has plenty of punch and if any exhibitor thinks that Tracy has lost his popularity, let him run this one and find out for himself.—Oze Tessier, Jr., Baylies Square Theatre, New Bedford, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—One of the poorest Saturday night grosses for a long time. Did not see the picture, so can judge only by the box-office report. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 22-23.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—It starts slow, but once it gets going it's typical Tracy. Lots more came to see it because I ran the Baer-Carnera fight pictures with it, so maybe the next Tracy pictures will do more. Played June 27-28.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Lee Tracy as a reporter, who follows the archduke from New York, uncovers a plot to kill the princess before she takes the throne and wins her for herself. Pleased Saturday audience. Clean comedy. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 22-23.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris—Only remarks was the ending of this picture didn't seem to please. Played June 11-12.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan—Only a fair program picture with poor recording. I can't understand why they put Douglass Montgomery in as leading man. He is no actor and can't talk plain enough. Margaret Sullavan very good, but she has no support. Picture not near as good as "Only Yesterday." If there is anything special about this I couldn't see it. Running time, 84 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Here is another picture from Universal that has no drawing power in our town. This team may go great in other places, but here it is just another flop. It is a comedy with plenty of laughs. As a matter of fact, it is most too silly for real enjoyment. A comedy never does any business here and this was no exception. Played one day to very poor business and pleased about 50 per cent. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Here's a pair to tie to and when you add Mickey Rooney to the cast you have a real set-up. You can say they do not make sense or anything you want to say about them, but my patrons ate it up and old and young laughed right out loud. Better than average business, three days last part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Inc. General patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—A good western picture. Story interesting, lots of action. Hero gets the girl and there you are.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Warner

EASY TO LOVE: Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—Too spicy for our town. The poorest Sunday ever with this one. Where they got this code for lovers idea is beyond me. Played June 24-25.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell—A very nice program picture that gave very good satisfaction. Good cast. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 24-25.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Another good program picture from Warner. Lots of action, good story, well acted and clean. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MODERN HERO, A: Richard Barthelmess, Jean Muir—This is only fair entertainment of the drama type and will appeal only to certain classes of patrons. It is a story of an ambitious young man who lets nothing stand in his way to achieve his goal. In spite of the excellent cast, this is only fair. Not as bad as many reviews state, but rather a true to life story. We played one day to a fair business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—Every one liked this picture and it drew fairly well. Lots of comedy. I call it just a good picture for them that want to laugh and it is clean enough for anyone.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

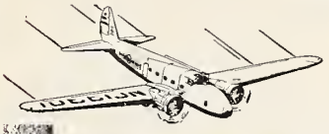
SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—This is a little old but the boy Wayne gets stronger every time I run him and if they make them all like Warner makes westerns, they sure would stake a comeback on western fans. Played June 22-23.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—A poor vehicle for Joe E. Brown. His fans don't want to see him cast as a racketeer. There are few laughs in this one. Let's have Brown in more stuff like "Going Wild." Business, despite a stage show at the same time, was poor. Played July 6-7.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

CURIO SHOP, THE: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Fair. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.



FAST FANGS: Minute Mysteries—The recording on these Minute Mysteries is bad.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

AIR CONDITIONING CHARTS

that represent standard practice in air conditioning engineering, adapted for the first time to motion picture theatre use. Originally published in Better Theatres, these charts and their explanations are now made available to theatre managers and technicians in a durable form suited to ready reference. Each chart is readily accessible by itself, while each is accompanied by an explanation that also gives practical advice on how to attain the best atmospheric conditions for any season. These chart sheets therefore apply to operating routine for any time of year, winter or summer. They are contained in a single sheet of cardweight paper measuring 22 inches wide and 17 inches high, so folded according to chart divisions that each readily fits the pocket. Unfolded, the sheet may be tacked on the wall. The folders may be had until the supply is exhausted at 25 cents each. Send payment with order. Use the coupon below.

real good single reel. Deals with horse carriage racing. Running time, eight minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MICKEY'S COVERED WAGON: Mickey McGuire—Here is a good one for the children.—Harold C, Allison. Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

UM-PA: Jack Osterman—Only fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WHEN DO WE EAT?: Broadway Comedies—Fair, maybe not that good. Holtz is better on the air. Running time, 17 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

Educational

BOSOM FRIENDS: Treasure Chest—Showing how different animals can be friends, eating and playing together. For instance, a cat that lets a mouse crawl all over him. It's extra good. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—Here's a good one for a wonder. Buster can still make people laugh. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Fox

SENTINELS OF THE SEA: Magic Carpet Series—A most interesting reel showing our lighthouses, light ships and life buoys along our coasts. Running time, nine minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

APPLES TO YOU: Musical Comedies—Too vulgar. With all the justifiable complaints against the degrading influences of the movies, why release such junk merely to flaunt the red flag in the bull's face? Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BEAR HUNTING: Oddities—Very good. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

DAVY JONES' LOCKER: Willie Whopper—Excellent colored cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

DAY IN VENICE: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Among the best of educational shorts, although this was not so good. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

FIRST ROUNDUP, THE: Our Gang—A pleasing comedy that any theatre will welcome. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FOR PETE'S SAKE: Our Gang—Nice little comedy if the adult actors had been left out. Their efforts surely queered the whole ending of the picture. No doubt Spanky directed it. No director older than Spanky, I hope. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—Played this a little late, but not late enough. Metro-Goldwyn slipped badly on this one, but they produce so many good comedies we can overlook this one. However, if Charley makes many more like it, I would recommend, yes, rather insist upon the addition of one letter to his surname and that would be "D."—Peter Bylsma, Victor Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

REDUCING CREME: Willie Whopper—I have no complaint to make against MGM's cartoons. They move like most of the other brands. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

JUST AN ECHO: Bing Crosby—Not so good. All of Bing Crosby's comedies are similar. They could be good but are rather silly. Running time, two reels.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL (No. 4): Good—This is a good series. Nearly always interesting. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

SEASIN'S GREETINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Splendid. Our patrons surely like all of the Popeye Cartoons. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

SPORTING MELODIES: Grantland Rice Sportlights.—One of the poorest. These are usually very good. Running time, one reel.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, Ideal Theatre, Burns, Ore. Small town patronage.

Universal

PIE FOR TWO: James Gleason—Only a fair comedy.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

OUT OF GAS: Louise Fazenda—Fairly good comedy which seemed to be enjoyed by the patrons.—M. D. Utterback, Lyric Theatre, Wellington, Kan. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

RUFUS JONES FOR PRESIDENT: Ethel Waters—Words can not describe how good this comedy is. Ethel Waters certainly can sing and the small colored boy sure can dance and sing as well. Why didn't she sing "Stormy Weather?" That would have made it sensational. This comedy should be advertised as much as a feature.—J. C. Dart, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevities—A very beautiful bit of entertainment. Will make a hit anywhere. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

NEEDS NO COACHING

The inestimable influence of the rapidly expanding Legion of Decency, the torrential flood of violent publicity, the attacks upon the motion picture from every quarter, have succeeded in throwing into a panic many usually level headed theatre executives who are unfortunately communicating their befuddlement to the manager.

Bulletins pour forth from home offices containing instructions on the proper conduct in the face of the "enemy," and the poor manager is warned to watch his slightest utterance and to guide his every step so as not to crack even the most fragile of eggshells.

It is our contention that the less admonition lavished upon the theatreman by his jittery superiors, the better it will be for all concerned. There are thousands of able showmen in every part of the country who enjoy the full confidence and respect of their communities, and whose opinions are regarded highly. They can be depended upon for good judgment and discretion in dealing wisely with the present situation, and should be allowed to do so without the dubious benefits of outside influences.

Though the task is a difficult one, if left to his own devices, the manager will do a far better job locally of unscrambling some of the eggs laid by the industry.

DOES IT PAY?

Well, if you do it and do it well there's plenty of business. But if you sit down and let nature take its course, the answer may be written in red ink and that's what Manager L. J. Williams discovered recently regarding exploitation at the Coliseum, San Francisco.

It seems that when first released "Little Women" had kicked up a loud box office rumpus round town—so loud that when the attraction came to Williams' house, a third run, "L. J." figured it was in.

"Did no exploitation," he reports, "merely congratulated ourselves on saving money and sat back, opened our doors and waited for the big rush. It never came."

So on "It Happened One Night" this member revised his ideas on subsequent run picture selling, got behind the date and walloped over a campaign that busted a flock of attendance records, and won for himself a First Mention in the Quigley competition for June.

The moral of this story, boys and girls, is "thar's gold in them hills," but it takes more than a prayer and fond expectations to bring it to the surface.

ON GETTING AHEAD

Not too infrequently and with pleasure we have utilized the above head in chronicling various promotions to higher posts of theatremen risen from the ranks. Today the list is lengthened by the inclusion of a number of Loew executives who started in front of the house not so very long ago, and now again step up the ladder.

The activities of the four Loew-ites named, H. M. Addison, Carter Barron, W. A. "Billy" Downs and Harry Long, have from time to time appeared in the Round Table pages. On behalf of the membership, we extend to them every good wish for a thumping success in the new posts.

Good times or bad, there is a demand for theatremen who have earned their spurs to fill executive positions of responsibility, a comforting thought for showmen become skeptical of the opportunities for advancement.

From Lionel H. Keene, a recent letter recalling the old days in Knoxville, Tenn., reminds us of one of those "really happened" gags. It seems that one of the standees, a young ruralite, was invited, after the break, to seat himself, but replied that his admission did not entitle him to that privilege as he had only purchased a standing room ticket.

THAT CASKET GAG

Every now and then members forward to this department reports of campaigns in which are included photos of caskets used for street bally or lobby flash as advertising on chill pictures.

It is not our purpose in these columns to act as a judge of exploitation values, but frankly we cannot wax enthusiastic over this form of publicity despite assurances that the stunt clicks satisfactorily and creates desired comment.

Spook pictures have a definite place and while they may run a bit haywire now and then what with the rattling of skeletons, pieces of ghost business and other hokum, directors usually manage to film these blood-chillers without giving too much direct offense to picture audiences.

Showmen do not have these advantages, and therefore the planting of a business like coffin in the theatre lobby for the edification of patrons who have paid their admission for a few hours of pleasure, may not contribute to the evening's gaiety.

Premiere of "Navy" Compliments Fleet

As the Navy cooperated with the studio in the production of "Here Comes the Navy," the Warnerites returned the compliment by staging the world premier of the picture at Loew's State, Norfolk, Va., coincident with the arrival of the fleet at that naval base. Charlie Einfeld sent Sid Davidson down to work with Manager Allen Sparrow on the advance, and the boys put it on pretty.

The opening was very "hollywood" with a broadcast via lobby mike, over which high naval officers and leading citizens spoke. Giant floods and searchlights were borrowed from the Navy and local cameramen took shots of the event. The theatre front was decorated with fleet pennants and signal flags, plus a further sailor touch of ship's hammocks suspended from the marquee, with port and starboard lights as additional atmosphere.

Radio was also used for spot announcements, and plugging by local orchestras of the picture's theme song. Other tieups were plenty, such as Domino Sugar hookup wherein miniature boxes of the sugar were distributed, copy tying in a "sweet surprise" angle, referring to the attraction. Old Gold cigarette advertising was also promoted in co-op page, and the tobacco company sent out copies of the paper to the fleet as a further plug. Window displays showing Cagney and the cigarettes were planted in many prominent spots.

The star was again hooked in to the advance with a special broadcast from Hollywood to the fleet, and Western Union came in with a flock of jumbos containing a message from Cagney to the Navy for the help in making the picture. Copies of the message on regular blanks were also distributed.

A neat water bally was put over by means of a sailboat which circulated among the ships (see photo), the sails carrying theatre copy on the date. Bulletin board announcements were also planted on ships, in navy yard, navy YMCA, and Chamber of Commerce.

Sizer Stages Male and Female Beauty Contest

Staging a girls' beauty contest and a Tarzan-like men's contest was the highlight of Eaton Sizer's campaign for "Once to Every Woman" at the Jeffris Theatre in Janesville, Wis.

For a street bally, Eaton had fourteen girls on bicycles advertising the style show and beauty contest. One girl wore the name of the theatre, playdate, etc., and the others spelled out the words "beauty contest"; girls wore white sweaters and sport shorts.

The first night was elimination night and the finals were held a week later. Pictures were taken of the contestants and the winners had their photos taken by a cooperating photographer. Newspapers furnished plenty of free publicity and the theatre broadcasting system announced the contest and gave a plug to each of the merchants donating prizes. A large table in foyer was used to display gifts with appropriate credit card for each of the participating stars.

Promotes Contest On Subsequent Run

Exploitation on a third run of a picture at a neighborhood house, his drive in many respects equal to the best efforts expended on the biggest first run attractions, earned a well deserved First Mention in the Quigley June competition for Manager L. J. Williams, Coliseum Theatre, San Francisco, on "It Happened One Night."

Realizing the attraction still had plenty of box office life were it sufficiently exploited, Williams tied in with a string of neighborhood newspapers represented in his district and the Pacific Greyhound Lines to sponsor a contest on the date. The winner received a free round trip to Hollywood by bus, plus a round of entertainment in the studio city, including a visit to the Columbia studios, hotels, meals, etc., being included in the prize. And the trip was given to the one coming nearest to guessing the total number of adults and children who would attend the theatre during the run of the picture. Contest ran for a week ahead.

The bus company came in for plenty of window cards, ads in the papers, half the cost of the guessing coupons, cutouts of Gable and Colbert, and various lobby material. Williams states the transportation company would have gone in more extensively were they permitted, but were not allowed to do so, so that the theatre would not be overshadowed in the contest.

Newspapers Cooperate

The papers, of course, gave the idea plenty of spread, running the rules and coupons in every sheet of the string, with front page streamers for the opening blast. A booth was set up in the lobby where entrants could fill out coupons with their guesses, after reading the trailer copy on the screen. This trailer was carefully arranged, being animated to secure more immediate attention.

Thousands of stock heralds were distributed, copy including rules of contest with guessing coupon attached, and on the day before opening, all papers carried another blast, bus ads in the same issues also plugging it. "L. J." also sold the idea from the stage during the last days of the drive, and spoke of the contest at merchants' meetings and lunch clubs.

Other gags were put on to stimulate interest, the bus company sending over a de luxe sleeper which was parked in front of the theatre (see photo) and inspected by thousands during the week. Ads were carried in all bus stations and at various stops around town.

Winner's Campaign Covers Many Angles

Among the raft of whale money stunts put over by Quigley June Award winner, R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight for his date on "20 Million Sweethearts" at the Fairmont, Fairmont, W. Va., one of the outstanders was the creation of a complete broadcasting station in the lobby (see photo), from where, by remote control, programs were sent out over Station WMMN, which loaned and set up all the necessary equipment. Between programs, sound was switched to marquee loudspeakers. Setup caused lots of curiosity as many patrons had never seen a station in action. Outfit was also used to publicize Hollywood premiere put on opening night.

Newspapers cooperated on many stunts, featured being "memory song contest" and co-op pages. Street stunts included promoted sound truck, theatre copy lettered on sides and back of autos, and plane towing 70 foot banner, total cost reported to be $10. Costless large banner across Main street also helped, as did signs worn by newsboys, banner at golf club.

Waitresses in leading eat spots wore printed ribbons across waists, barker was used for first time in front of house, and 500 pound ice block with display frozen inside, promoted free, planted on corner also attracted crowds. Giant postcard carried about town, addressed to stars in picture, secured hundreds of signatures, and streets were stenciled with "Flit" gun which Fuzzy states made possible more extensive use.

Uses Camera Street Bally

New open car was promoted in which five "sweethearts" covered the town banner copy calling attention that these were five of the "millions," and a motion picture camera was used on the streets, supposedly taking shots of passerby, camera decorated with copy.

Other angles were covered effectively, such as cashiers calling all numbers in book, announcements at various conventions, and free ice cream given to children at first show. Company supplying cream also bannered trucks, as did Coca Cola delivery cars, and Knight also promoted bumper cards planted on cars in and out city.

Small envelopes with copy—"dare you to hand this to your sweetheart unopened"—with theatre plug inside, were promoted from restaurant and distributed there and at theatre. Fuzzy also sent "while you were out" cards to all stores and offices.

Each usher phoned the heads of five families he knew personally, announcement cards were put under doors of hotel rooms, heralds were placed in all laundry packages, and phone cards put on instruments at all pay stations.

Knight's Lobby Broadcasting

R. E. ("FUZZY") KNIGHT

About every good window in town was promoted, Knight stating that two of these were obtained for the first time for a picture hookup, and Western Union jumbo wires advertised picture in window and in hotel lobby.

And all in all, this member neglected nothing in obtaining fine coverage in his city and for many miles in the surrounding area. He did a bang up job, rounding out his campaign with a host of other good routine stunts that helped to swell the grosses. James H. Brownfield, assistant manager, and Floyd Kidd, house artist, aided Knight in working out the many angles.

Winner's Sudden Illness Disrupts Contemplated Holywood Ceremonies

Plans were being made by Warner Pittsburg division manager Harry Kalmine in conjunction with the Warner Studios and Motion Picture Herald to make the presentation of the Quigley Award for June next week in Hollywood, where Knight had intended spending his vacation.

On his way West, however, "Fuzzy" was stricken suddenly in Chicago, and upon doctors' advice, returned to Fairmont, where he is recuperating. Further plans will be announced in our next issue.

Here's rooting for Fuzzy's complete and speedy recovery.

And now for July.

The winners in the seventh month are being anticipated with out-of-the-ordinary interest, for division managers and district supervisors are keenly aware that the managers who finish in the money in July will prove their showmanship by licking the hot weather as well as landing up front. That's a tip to you managers to be sure and forward a campaign this month.

Mexican Gags Click For Curtis-Finlay

That fast moving team of Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay, of the Palace, Montreal, certainly turned up a flock of Mexican tie-ups on their "Viva Villa" campaign, the sum total of their stunts copping a healthy "First Mention" in the Quigley competition for June. To mention a few:

Montreal papers are quite hard to crack, and therefore a full page feature story in one of the Sunday papers was very helpful. Another daily went for a co-op page, and the leading French paper ran the serialization supplied by MGM.

A previous tieup with a chain of drug stores on a giveaway contest for auto racers, previously described, was extended to include a street parade on opening day, with trucks, auto racers and delivery cars (see photo) headed by a horseman dressed as Beery. Chain put out heralds, plugged "Villa" sundaes, ran big displays on the date, and had girl in Mex costume giving out the "mileage" coupons with purchases. Druggists also took page ad to stimulate campaign, and included it over regular broadcasts.

Shirt boards in laundry packages, boards to be colored for cash prizes also built up very big, copy tieing laundry and date. Other lead stores came in on fashions, a new shade of stockings being named "Viva," bathing suits and accessories featuring Mexican colors, and jewelers plugging Mexican styles—all carrying display ads and ace window displays to hook in to the attraction.

Mexican Consul Cooperates

Various radio ideas were put on, with a special dramatization the night before by the artists of a local Mexican cabaret. The Mexican consul also put on a special program, and Gene Curtis helped the air plugs on his weekly theatre broadcasts. "Villa" programs were put on at the above mentioned Mex night spot, and florists tied in on flowering cactus, advertised from the land of "Villa."

The four-star rating given the picture by Liberty was good enough reason for tieup with local distributor who planted window cards on every newsstand and bannered delivery trucks.

Leading tailors and men's stores advertised clothes for Montreal Mexican weather, date getting breaks in all ads, book stores and circulating libraries were contacted, and on opening night, prominent Mexicans locally resident were on hand for premiere.

Edwards Uses Chair Sitter for "Wonder"

A paper-tearer and a chair-sitter stunt was used by J. G. Edwards, Hayward Theatre, Hayward, Cal., as exploitation on his showing of "Wonder Bar." Three days ahead a man was engaged to sit in chair on sidewalk facing box office (see photo) with sign reading, "I'm waiting to see 'Wonder Bar,' etc., etc." Man also was clever at paper tearing and did his act much to the amusement of the crowds that gathered.

Tying up a local bakery Edwards had ads wrapped with all loaves of bread, copy reading, "you've started the day off right with Blank bread, now finish it by seeing 'Wonder Bar.'" Bakery trucks serving neighboring towns plugged showing with banners and heralds.

Soda fountain featured "Wonder Bar Brandied Sundaes" and "J. G." reports the spiked fruit syrup went over so well that the sundae is being kept on the menus permanently.

Robertson Uses Sound Truck For Theatre Reopening

Bob Robertson, Kelley Theatre, Iola, Kansas, finds himself pretty busy with the reopening of the Iola Theatre there, reporting that about fifty merchants cashed in for a full page congratulatory message to Mr. Kelley, the theatre owner.

A big time grand opening was staged with all the trimmings and Bob engaged a sound street bally truck to tour the city plugging "20 Million Sweethearts" (see photo).

Newspapers were generous in their praise of the beauty and comfort of the house and the Club's well wishes go to both Mr. Kelley and Robertson.

Ralph reports this treatment as an improvement to the attractiveness of the usual vacant store window—an angle that might be used on conservative rental agents.

St. Louis "Little Man" Date Plugged Five Weeks Ahead

George Tyson and Christy Wilbert of the Ambassador, St. Louis, opened fire five weeks prior to the showing of "Little Man" and kept up a constant barrage until the picture premiered.

In addition to using special trailers in both the Ambassador and St. Louis theatres, the newspaper ads were underlined and an announcement made over the theatre's loud speaker system for the five week period. Special art panels in both houses were installed as opening guns in the campaign and through arrangements with three of St. Louis' leading broadcasting stations, the engagement was mentioned eleven times daily for two weeks in advance.

The cooperation of the local taxi service netted roving ads on 150 of the company's cabs. George and Christy also hooked up every major bookstore and lending library in the city for the display of special panels on which were mounted stills, and selling copy for picture and book. Other national tie-ups resulted in several large department store window displays. Duke Hickey, Universal exploiteer, assisted.

Bishop Promotes Many Tieups On "Rothschild"

To depict the advances made in communication since the period of the picture, Manager H. A. Bishop, Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Canada, on "House of Rothschild" tied in with the Canadian National which wire company distributed jumbo messages, copy signed by George Arliss, alluding to the pigeon sequence in the feature. To distribute these messages, telegraph boys were given silk lapel ribbons carrying title and date, wearing these in advance and during the run. Ribbons were also worn by house staff.

Bishop under his personal signature wrote letters to all bank managers, assistants and other of the personnel and also communicated with local stock brokers, messages of course tying in the feature to modern banks and stock transactions. Circulating libraries used book marks and also made window displays. Other press book tieups were made.

One of the local papers ran a biography of George Arliss and editor of another daily previewed the picture, giving it editorial mention. Local Jewish publications also publicized the date which was also announced at meeting of B'nai B'rith.

Among the many merchandise tieups, one meriting especial attention was that arranged with the Hudson's Bay Co. (see photo) which gave over much space to plugging a brand of tea in conjunction with the picture.

Merchant tie-ups consisted of Old Gold posters in cigar stores, jumbo telegrams in Western Union branches and window cards in prominent department stores.

Pollack Uses "Hard Ticket" on "Rothschild"

Working along the lines that "The House of Rothschild" had played the New York Astor at the $2.00 scale, Lester Pollack, Loew's Rochester, N. Y., had facsimile "hard" theatre tickets printed stressing the "no advance" in prices and distributed to all parking lots, bus stations, hotel desks, etc. In addition, a de luxe trailer was used calling attention to the New York run.

Opening of the baseball season started off with a parade to ball grounds and Les hopped to it by printing ball game schedules, passing them out at opening game with "Rothschild" plug.

An attractive window display (see photo) featured the dress worn by Loretta Young with stills in photographic mounts. A current copy of one of the fan magazines was prominently shown with pages open to a Loretta Young story, with center frame plugging picture and playdates.

Daily broadcasts of fifteen minute periods were made and "etherized" dramatization was picked up on the portable radio broadcasting station in front of theatre.

Egan and Bayne Promote "Wonder Bar" Candy Bar

One of the last campaigns put over by Manager Pete Egan and exploiteer Dave Bayne, at the Palace, Calgary, Alberta, before that house closed for the summer, was on "Wonder Bar," inaugurated two weeks ahead by a series of daily organ broadcasting recitals during which the song hits were featured. To make it more interesting, the first ten women phoning into the station and referring to the program received star stills.

A week ahead, attractive six foot star panels were placed in lobby and moved up front (see photo) during run. Especially named candy bar was put out by a local manufacturer, and to advertise it window strips and 22 by 28 window cards illustrated with stills from the picture were spotted in prominent locations.

Fish and Game Exhibit Featured by Two "Bobs"

The two Jersey City "Bobs" of the Stanley Theatre, Manager Paskow and ad chief Deitch had the town all excited with their campaign on "Wild Cargo," the highlight of which was the mezzanine showing of a live fish and wild game exhibit in addition to mounted specimens of tiger, lion, elk, moose, bear, leopard, etc., secured through tieup with local taxidermist. The success of the display was further assured by feature stories in many Jersey and New York papers, many of which sent reporters to cover the showing.

The boys went "press agent" by inadvertently (?) allowing a live fox to escape from the exhibit, the aid of emergency police squads being called in to capture the animal. Story broke front pages, and in many instances the picture also was given a break.

Special nights were set aside for civic officials as was a showing for the Western Electric Sportsman's Club attended by a membership of over 1200. The wild animal angle was also stressed by the lobby showing of skins of beasts of almost every known species.

Sizer Parades Jockey Through Streets on "Harum"

Eaton Sizer, Jeffris Theatre, Janesville, Wis. went "horsey" on David Harum by borrowing a race horse, race cart and jockey suit plus an experienced driver to tour the city with a banner over horse's back with copy. On the back of the jockey was theatre sign and he sang the "ta-ra-ra-boom-deeay" aria as he drove through the streets.

All newsboys wore aprons with imprinted theatre copy. These boys also handed out programs, calling "extra" and on opening day paraded to theatre. Records were played from broadcasting booth in theatre lobby and went out over p. a. system both inside and outside of house. The broadcasting booth itself is unique, Eaton reports, in that it is of half-moon design, painted black and silver. Both sides of booth have imitation radio towers painted in silver with red lights and wires strung across the towers to make it look more realistic. In the booth announcing and playing records is an attractive girl.

As a lobby display, Sizer built a small cottage of beaver board, erected it on a platform with fence around and used an animated head of Rogers behind the cottage which moved back and forth. Display was illuminated at night by colored spots in upper corner of lobby. The cottage, fence and head were gaily painted. Huge sign atop marquee was illuminated by flood lights from across the street.

The Indian float was trimmed in oak leaves with Uncas monument and a group of three generations of Indians. On the float was Chief Matahga, direct descendent of the Uncas, and his two nieces.

As an additional hookin Hamilton staged a free show for 2,000 children who marched with the Norwich Elks Boys' Band from the local Recreation Center to the theatre. Members of the welfare committee of the Elks, Recreation commission and playground instructors assisted in seating the children; extra firemen aided and Bob says if you can judge by the applause and laughter of the kids, "a pleasant time was had by all."

Lund Plants "Cargo" Bally at Air Party

Kenosha, Wisconsin, recently celebrated a Lithuanian Day at the local airport, where thousands gathered in honor of two of that country's well known flyers, visitors for the day. Manager Jesse C. Lund, of the Kenosha, had a combination animal float and sound truck (see photo) working the section on his "Wild Cargo" date and promoted himself into the celebration by having the float cover the party.

Jesse had the driver take a ride in one of the planes and speak on his experience over the loud speaker in the bally. After the thrills of the trip were detailed, the pitch wound up with—"you will be even more thrilled over 'Wild Cargo,' etc., etc." Float also made other spots where crowds assembled, the animated "animals," controlled by motors, stirring up plenty of comment among the assembled thousands.

SOME ADDED "FAN" LETTERS

RICHARD L. MOSS, Manager California, San Diego, Cal.

Some time ago last year, Mr. Bassin wrote a very well constructed and intelligent article on "Exploitation." I agreed with him in every respect. Recently Mr. Bassin wrote another article regarding "fan magazines," but this time I am afraid that I cannot be favorable towards his idea.

In Mr. Bassin's previous article he had commented on the fact that fan magazines were detrimental to the show business because they printed derogatory reviews which no amount of theatre advertising could eradicate. This is absolutely true. However, this time Mr. Bassin states that nothing can be done about correcting this evil, and that we should now turn around and help boost the circulation of these magazines. To slightly alter an old saying, "Feed the mouth that bites us."

Asks Studio Regulation

I say that something can be done about it and shall try to prove it logically. It is true that the picture business is greatly dependent upon these publications for publicity. On the other hand, where would the magazines be if not for the picture business? And where would they be if all the studios refused to furnish them with hot news, with interviews, with gossip, and with photos? So, I believe it works both ways.

I feel that a concerted effort should be made by the publicity departments of all the studios to stop the publishing of the complete plots of pictures. It's very easily seen that once the complete story is known, the greater enjoyment of the picture is ruined. The most facsinating part of watching a motion picture is wondering how it will all come out. Would 50,000 persons have paid over a half million dollars to see the Baer-Carnera fight if they had known exactly what would take place in each round? The same applies to motion pictures.

This is just one way in which the fan magazines hurt box office receipts. They also do untold harm by printing malicious gossip, and unpleasant detais of a star's private life. After all, it's what the star does on the screen that counts, not what she or he pursues in private. It's their personality, looks, etc., which are shown on the screen that counts, and not that which is an actuality that makes good or bad entertainment. Does it matter if Garbo has big feet as long as they don't get in the way during the picture? Does it matter if a screen star looks lousy upon arising in the morning, as long as her screen image makes men's hearts palpitate? This business is 90 per cent glamour, and producers have spent fortunes in trying to build this glamour. Don't let's lose it. And, one of the surest ways of losing it, is to tell the actual existence of our screen players.

I believe that this is a great deal more serious than most of us in this industry realize. It deals with a psychological problem that is probably not visible on the surface, but which is taking a great toll in theatre patronage.

Since the studios are in control of the issuance of this publicity, I don't see why they can't whip these magazines in line, and demand the proper type of material. One or two studios alone could not accomplish this, but all the studios working together could.

My suggestion is that we should cooperate only with the fan magazines that are conducting their publications for the best interests of the motion picture business. I don't say that they should turn their papers into publicity "rags" for the industry, but they should substitute favorable publicity for the destructive material they now use; print human interest stories rather than that of the malicious type; and they should completely eliminate the policy of telling the complete story of the picture.

There is just as much competition in the fan magazine racket as there is in our business. Those who will not cooperate with the studios would quickly fall into line when their competitors scooped them a few times on stories or interviews, and received a few choice breaks in art.

When these magazines conform to the standards outlined, when they decide to work hand in hand for the betterment of our industry (and their's too); then I would say that we should do everything to help them, publicize them, work with their circulation departments; and let the studios give them every help.

Because we will then be helping our business, and building an army of theatre-goers, rather than just an army of readers.

LARRY CARROLL, Manager Flynn, Burlington, Vt.

I believe that the fan magazine has done more to take the glamour away from the movies (and the crowds away from the theatre) than any other influence connected with the business. They have exposed every known trick of trickery and fakery and all the other artifices that go to make a successful movie and the result is that the public come in now (if they come at all) with a "show me" attitude and the pictures have lost their old-time lure.

THE MEMBERS STILL HAVE LOTS TO SAY

Evidently Charley Bassin opened up a spirited discussion with his suggestion that managers cooperate more closely with the fan magazines, for the returns from the field have been many, and they're not all in yet.

Last week, members M. C. Moore, Louis Lamm and Roy Pritz gave us their opinions, and in addition to the thoughts expressed on this page, others will be heard from next, the last week of the debate.—MIKE.

WALTER MORRIS, Manager GEORGE BROWNING, Publicist Stanley, Baltimore, Md.

. . . Making a short story long, Mr. Bassin explains something that has been going on for years. . . . The movies have always been friendly to the picture publications. Time and again, film magazines have been utilized in publicity campaigns. Theatre managers have gone so far as to use the periodicals for distribution in, as Mr. Bassin suggests, doctors' and dentists' offices, beauty parlors, barber shops and other establishments where time weighs heavily.

When fan magazines publish a story of interest concerning a coming attraction and the story is well told, picture publicizers will do well to take advantage of the situation. They will benefit through a tie-in with that particular issue eulogizing a certain production. But any effort, week in and week out, to promote circulation of these magazines merely because they tell about the talkies would, quite naturally, lose its punch.

Every screen attraction necessarily needs its own campaign in order to build box office grosses. Each week, the theatre has a new entertainment to sell; a new product that, to borrow a phrase, must be merchandised. That being the case, plans for publicity require variations.

In his timely article, Mr. Bassin inquires shall we be belligerent or persuasive in our attitude toward the movie magazines. He admits that certainly the picture industry could no more rout the movie periodicals from their present position than the fan journals could topple the cinema industry from the peak of its well rooted pedestal.

Warlike methods will accomplish little, if anything. A friendly attitude is sure to be of greater benefit. At the same time, this friendly cooperation need not extend to theatres giving screen notices, lobby displays. or free ads in their programs as suggested from up in Mattapan, Mass.

Favors Cooperation

An attitude of cooperation seems far more commendable. The picture industry might bow, yet it need not scrape, to the fan magazines. In other words, we'd say, when fan magazines set forth an unselfish effort to promote certain screen productions, the theatre may do well to avail itself of a friendly avenue of mutual cooperation.

In the meantime, why not let the millions of magazine fans enjoy their reading? They have a mind of their own and know a good story or a good cast when they see it—even in the picture periodicals.

At the same time we must not forget that, to put it politely, fan magazines are practically a step-child of the movies. They were, if memory serves, unknown until the cinema industry came into existence and flourished. All of which scores another point today in favor of the theatre managers who decide not to take film fan publications too seriously. We hope to be able to continue to cooperate with the magazines when it is mutually beneficial.

"Glory" Director Aids Cowan's Date

Taking advantage of the fact that Frank Borzage, director of "No Greater Glory," was due in Boise, Idaho, with his all star Hollywood Polo Team simultaneously with the showing of the picture at the American Theatre in Caldwell, Manager A. L. Cowan promoted the studio-ite for a personal appearance together with the rest of the team.

Every hour two days prior to opening the stunt was plugged over radio stations and newspapers gave it plenty of space. Ministers, Lions' Club members, school teachers and scout masters were sent special letters acquainting them with the nature of the picture and suggesting they see it. Boy scouts sold tickets printed so that they could be pinned to coat lapels, thus acting as a further plug for the date.

Cowan contacted the Railroad company and secured signal fuses which were placed in conspicuous spots around theatre. This created quite a flash, "A. L." reports, and as people were drawn to front of theatre, scout buglers and drummers played. These same boys paraded through the business districts and wound up at the theatre.

Reeths Creates Novel "Coming" Throwaways

Among the recent novelty throwaways forwarded by Fred Reeths, Jr., of the Sheboygan and Majestic Theatres, Sheboygan, Wis., are a few that were reported to have brought more than passing attention. These include a small sized, single fold herald on "Journal of a Crime," copy on front cover stating, "How Far Does a Woman Dare Go for Love?," rest of copy on inside page.

More elaborate is a die cut folder which announced a number of coming attractions and included a signed endorsement of these pictures under Fred's signature. Front cover read, "Great News for All," and back cover carried further urge copy.

COIFFURE CONTEST CLICKS

4-Week Hairdress Competition For Valuable Prizes Put Over to Ace Returns by Lionel Greene

Thirty beauty shops paid $10 each to enter Lionel Greene's four week "Oceana Theatre Coiffure Contest" at that Brighton Beach, New York spot, hundreds of local women endeavoring to compete for the prizes, valued at over $1,000, including fur coats, dance courses, summer vacations, etc.

The idea went over very successfully, and the entire plan, detailed as follows, should prove helpful to those members in the market for another angle of the always popular hair dress competitions.

First, the number of shops allowed to enter were limited to 30, and upon receipt of the $10 entry fee, given contracts with the following clauses:

Theatre agreed to accept three competitors from each shop, either employee or patron, hair dress to be executed by shop owner or regular operator. Engagement of professional model or operator not regularly employed by shop was not permitted.

Theatre further agreed to take motion pictures on stage of contestants, filming hair dress from front, back and sides in closeups.

Theatre further obligated itself to show the completed films of each shop's entries for an entire week, the name of shop incorporated in the reel, and after the contest to give each entrant that portion of the film showing shop's contestants.

Each shop's name and address was to be displayed in lobby, included in programs, and names of contestants were also to be publicized. This was carried out further in circulars, distributed house to house. Theatre also supplied window cards

Patrons Witness Screen Tests

During the preliminaries, patrons were invited to remain after the regular show to witness the filming of the contestants on the stage, which of course helped business. Films of 30 numbered contestants were shown each week for a full week, patrons given voting coupons (see photo) upon which were listed 30 corresponding numbers, and were asked to ring any three of the numbers on the ballot.

Thus at the end of the third week, 90 contestants were filmed, and for the finals, the one from each shop securing the highest number of votes of the three contestants from that shop entered the finals. This insured representation from every one of the 30 entries. Final judging took place on the stage, the 30 finalists appearing in person to compete for the grand prizes on designated night of the final week.

Shop owners were invited to consult with Greene in the selection of these judges, who were chosen as impartially as possible and who all possessed technical knowledge of the fine points of hairdressing. Among these were Miss Kozlay, editor of American Hairdresser, leading coiffure trade paper.

It is expected that the August number of this magazine will contain a complete account of Greene's contest, which should be brought to the attention of beauty shop subscribers to the publication in other spots by managers who intend putting over or adapting Green's idea in the near future.

To make the contest more attractive, Lionel promoted pairs of shoes which were given to all 90 contestants. Each of these was advised by letter when her picture was to be shown, and it is reported that many brought friends along as well as sending others to the box office to help out the cause. Another smart idea was the personal appearances on one night each week of the 30 weekly winners, this added feature being strongly plugged by the theatre.

Each Shop Awarded Certificate

Other prizes included pastel portraits, de luxe photos, and possible screen tests at the Vitaphone Brooklyn studios of some of those contestants finishing up front who rated that break.

And as a final gesture and a smart one, Greene supplied each competing shop with a certificate of merit to be displayed in windows. Not only did this build up the good will, but as each certificate carried the theatre name and address, it made for good advertising.

All in all, this member and his staff did an effective job, one which helped to tilt the grosses over the four-week duration of the contest at a proportionately low expense due to the $300 in entry fees which paid for a lot of advertising.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 232.—(A) What is the speed of light per second? (B) In electrical formulae, what do the letters E, C and R represent? (C) Suppose I wrote $\frac{E-20}{C}$, what would it mean? (D) Suppose I wrote .125 ÷ 7, how would you solve it? (E) In a common fraction what does the horizontal line mean? (F) What is the "rule o' thumb" applied to Ohm's law calculations? (G) What is the length, in fractions of an inch, of one mil?

Answer to Question No. 226

Bluebook School Question No. 226 really represented, in Sections A, B and C, repetition of a previous question. The only answers to be published, therefore, are to the section which asked, What various losses are almost certainly set up by incompetency in the projectionist, or carelessness in his work?

To the entire question, including all sections, the following made acceptable answers:

C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; C. Oldham; R. J. Arntson; R. De Totto; J. R. Walker; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; L. Cimikoski; D. Ferguson; A. F. Sprafke; L. J. O'Melia; B. Doe; R. and K. Wells; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; D. Arlen and M. Spencer; M. and J. DeVoy; T. T. Golley; L. R. Doty; D. U. Granger; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; B. H. Sanders, J. Gensen, D. L. Lode and K. Y. Spencer; M. and S. T. Gibson; J. Jurts and D. Howard; K. L. Knight and M. Henderson; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; L. U. Genesen, B. True and S. True; R. Geddings and L. Grant; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; F. H. Dalbey, S. Dalbey and P. Dalbey; L. M. Richards; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; F. L. Benton and A. L. Dodson; P. and L. Felt; A. Richardson and L. N. Haynes; P. Itt; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; O. Allbright; L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; P. T. Daniels, T. K. Aldridge and G. Howard; M. F. Fallon; L. H. Daniels and B. W. Williams; G. R. Squires; M. U. Sampson; F. Y. Gradley and B. L. Donald; B. S. Howard; R. and K. Wells; D. L. Sinklow; B. T. Canter; D. H. and L. B. Palmer; G. N. Guidetti and F. L. Savlor; D. D. Davis and L. Thomas; H. R. Baldwin; Nic Granby; R. S. Fielder; J. Hendershot; D. U. Danielson; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; G. J. Donlas and B. Samuels; B. R. Walker and M. Walker; L. R. O'Leary; P. F. Michaelson.

To the question, "What various losses are almost certainly set up by incompetency in the projectionist, or carelessness in his work," Richard DeTotto replies, "Losses at the box office, as well as to the whole motion picture industry, is incurred by incompetency or carelessness. There may be loss of electric power, waste in carbon consumption, waste in oil, in film cement, fuses, tubes and other things under his care. There may be loss through failure to properly lubricate and care for the expensive, sensitive equipment, including increased upkeep cost by the frequent parts replacement thus made necessary. There might be loss through necessary box office refund in case of a breakdown. There may be loss caused by abuse of film, which makes for increased film rentals, as well as injury to the show. In fact, poor or careless work may set up loss all along the line."

L. J. O'Melia says, "If a man is incompetent he has no business in a projection room, as he can work more havoc than can a snake at a girl's picnic. Besides permitting the equipment to run down from lack of proper attention, there is loss in wasted electric power and carbons; loss from poor results on the screen and in sound; eye-strain and ear-strain, which loses the theatre business. In fact, the general dissatisfaction and the expense resulting makes the incompetent or careless projectionist a mighty expensive article, no matter how it is looked at."

D. Danielson says, "Ye Gods, what losses aren't set up by such a condition! Examine any piece of projection equipment and imagine where losses might well occur through careless or incompetent handling. Lamps, amplifiers, rectifiers, mechanisms, drives, optical losses, losses in electric power. The careless or incompetent projectionist certainly will set up loss of quality which will result in loss of patronage. It would require a book to enumerate all the various possible losses, and I am no author."

G. R. Doe replies, "To relate all the points of loss such a condition might and probably would entail, would require pages of the Motion Picture Herald. What I imagine you want is generalities. First of all there certainly would be a too rapid deterioration in equipment, which might well run into a large sum per year. Second, there certainly would be deterioration in screen results and in sound, which might mean almost anything in the way of loss of patronage. Third, there might be a considerable waste in electric power. Fourth, there almost certainly would be a large waste of light, which would of course mean waste in electric power as well as loss in screen illumination. Fifth, there would be large loss of managerial temper. Sixth, there would be the probability of film damage, which would not only affect the show in the theatre where Mr. Incompetent Careless is employed, but would also work injury to the show in every theatre that must use the films afterward."

There were other excellent answers, but all ran along the same general lines. It is to be hoped that the many exhibitors and managers who read the answers will realize that they represent cold truth. Incompetency, no matter how cheaply it be had in the matter of wages, is never a real saving. It is, instead, when the certain losses resulting are taken into account, a very expensive thing.

When the complexity, high-sensitiveness and cost of modern projection equipment is considered, it should be evident to managers and exhibitors that what has been said is rather obvious—that it spells plain common sense. It pays to have genuine competency in your projection room at almost any reasonable wage figure. The trouble is that the dollar "saved" in wages is plainly apparent, whereas the money lost through the process is something one must estimate, with no sure basis to proceed on.

However, if one really applies cold reason to the proposition, it should be obvious that there must be loss, and at least fairly apparent that the loss may be a very serious matter. That is the objection to a flat union scale of pay. It offers no incentive to excellence in work. The union scale should, as I have many times said, be merely regarded as a minimum to be paid the poorest workman, those of better grade commanding better wages.

Oh yes, I know all the stock arguments against that, both by union officials and exhibitors, but when the arguing is all finished and done, both sides very well know what I have said is exactly true. From the union side the matter might very easily be handled to the benefit of everyone concerned, but that is perhaps more than we may expect will ever be done, since it would call for placing and keeping the poorest men in the poorest jobs and advancing systematically to better ones as knowledge and quality of work produced warrants.

On the whole, however, considerable might be accomplished toward giving superior ability, including determination to apply knowledge to betterment of the work, some real value.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified.

SALARIES

ONCE again, this time because of an NRA report, the newspapers are a-twitter with excitement over the fact that a considerable number of motion picture persons draw salaries greater than that of the President of the United States.

One wonders why the salary of the President must always be cited. We object on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

The salary of the President is not a bench mark in American employment scales. The salary of the President means precisely nothing in any endeavor to measure the value of personal services. The President gets the prescribed and legal salary whether he is worth it or not. The President's salary is an award which goes to the winner of a popularity contest held every four years.

The job of President of the United States on any fair salary basis demands a man worth as an executive considerably more than the salary and perquisites attached to the post. It has frequently been held by men who were worth a great deal less.

These United States are a big business and the stockholders could afford a much better executive staff than they have ever had.

All of which has nothing at all to do with motion pictures and motion picture salaries. The 110 motion picture salaries which are "above Roosevelt's" are properly the concern of the stockholders of the corporations involved for purely business reasons—not because they are greater or less than some one's else.

The question in business is properly never, how many dollars? but rather, how much for a dollar?

PICTURE FIGURES

THE impressive array of dollar data which Mr. Donald K. Wallace has assembled for Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt's NRA report on Hollywood operations and production costs, amply spread before the reader in the news pages of this issue, represent the most effective effort of the sort that has been made in behalf of a public presentation in the history of the industry.

The motion picture as a great industry has ever been lamentably lacking in sound, basic statistical data. The condition is not a shortcoming of youth, but a result of factors less flattering.

In the motor car industry, to take an example from a great business which has grown up in the same years as the screen, one can readily lay hand upon ample and immediate data on employment, production, exports, prices, distribution. At the same time it would take a set of statistical detectives and burglars to discover how many feet of positive film had been shipped to exchanges in any week or month of this industry.

Figures issued in the publicity of the motion picture industry are not remotely even estimates, rather they are bids for a headline.

Individually the principal corporations of the motion picture do a handsome, complete and competent job of bookkeeping. Collectively the industry does not do any. That is one reason why in so many industry conferences the man with the strong voice wins.

This lack of a collective, cooperative and centralized cooperation on fundamental data and figures is one of the endless array of sources of unnecessary and expensive duplication of effort involved in motion picture operations.

The ramifications and elaborations of destructive misunderstanding which grow out of the guessing system which is in operation extends in all directions. One is reminded at the moment of the continuous presentation of erroneous figures in the daily press, where the repute of the industry is made. For instance, in last Sunday's New York Times, a special writer made solemn discussion based on his statement that there were some nineteen thousand and odd picture theatres, operating in the United States. Also that magnificent bunk boast of 115,000,000 persons in weekly patronage of the box office has been persisting now for some three years.

The figures which Mr. Rosenblatt presents will be found illuminating—and in spots confusing—one wonders for instance how, and if not why not, his examination of salary ratios related itself to foreign revenues?

A SEASON FOR SHORTS

GLEAMING through the season's announcements, encouraging and renewed attention to the short product appears. The motion picture cause with the public will be well served by a really competent line of short film production. It has been our pained observation these many years that the public has always been more concerned with and interested in shorts than the film distributors have been. No small part of the repute of the screen was made by the newsreels and the short travel and adventure film in years gone by. There were thousands of persons of the influential strata who were drawn to the theatre by nothing else. Now, while the motion picture is taking its production job more seriously than ever, it seems that at least a portion of the shorts will be made and distributed as something more than "filler." The "filler" policy is one of the most destructive. The public knows nothing of "fillers" but it can be bored as completely in one reel as in eight. The short is bigger than its footage.

THIS WEEK----

THEATRE UPTURN

Indicative of an upturn in theatrical attendance during the past year are Internal Revenue Department figures released at Washington this week. For June, 1934, admission tax collections totaled $1,597,238, compared with $1,000,751 in June, 1933. However, tax receipts for the fiscal year ended June 30 totaled $14,613,414, compared with $15,520,512 the previous year. . . .

STAGE SHOWS OUT

Casting off stage shows, the Paramount theatre in New York, one of Broadway's largest de luxers, will go to pictures only on August 17. With film lined up for the house until December, the house management has dropped discussed plans for a pooling arrangement with the Capitol, up the street, which will continue its present film-stage policy. . . .

MEMPHIS VICTORY

Once again emerging the victor, Charles Mensing, Memphis exhibitor who initiated the sandwiches and free shows on Sunday as a blue law evasion, was the object of a considerate grand jury's second refusal to indict. Last week other downtown houses were open with a guarantee to the Memphis Community Fund, but without sandwiches. Persistence is having an effect, apparently. . . .

CONSOLIDATED NET

Reported by Consolidated Film Industries this week was net profit for the quarter ended June 30, of $320,782, after all charges. The figure equaled 23 cents per share of 524,973 shares of common outstanding, and compared with net of $317,781 in the previous quarter. Six months' net: $638,563. . . .

ST. LOUIS THEATRES

This week taken over by Harry Koplar and Allen Snyder were the Missouri, Grand Central, Ambassador theatres, St. Louis. Ambassador and Missouri will reopen August 4, under Fanchon & Marco management, Grand Central plans are not yet set. Long a subject of legal controversy, the houses will be managed by Mr. Koplar in association with Harry Greenman, manager of the F. & M. Fox. . . .

STRIKES, THEATRES

As film theatres of San Francisco reopened during the past weekend following a forced shutdown as the general strike gripped the city, Portland houses were in a state of uncertainty, with the threat of strike, perhaps general, hanging over the city. Theatre owners were prepared to add riders to riot insurance policies, seeking thus protection from vandals who follow closely the movement of industrial unrest. . . .

WRITERS' CODE

From the writers' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast has gone a letter to the executive committee of the Writers' Guild, pointing out that the writer-producer code is no move to strengthen the Academy, but is meant to serve the best interests of writers, whether Guild or Academy members or not. . . .

CENSOR RESIGNED

A Democrat, and at the urging of local party leaders, Mrs. Zelma L. Redmond of Kansas City, Kan., has submitted her resignation as a member of the Kansas state censor board, effective August 1. "All companies are making efforts to improve their productions," she declared. "But there has been no effort to improve pictures morally.". . .

Fox countered with considerable less, and an adjustment was reached, reported at $1,250 weekly. . . .

STUDIOS FAIL TO CUT COST TO EARNING POWER OF FILMS: ROSENBLATT

Highlights of Rosenblatt's Report

Sol A. Rosenblatt's report as NRA Division Administrator, of an investigation into the machinery of the motion picture to determine the enforceability of code legislation to control excessive salaries and "star raiding," reveals a mass of statistics pertaining to the business structure, some alleged abuses and not a few charges of unsound business practice. Highlights of Mr. Rosenblatt's report follow:

The proposed and suspended code clauses to control socalled unreasonably excessive salaries and to regulate "star raiding" should not be enforced.

Producers flew in the face of sound judgment by raising salaries of stars and executives to abnormal heights.

The public's equity in the common stock of the five largest companies has been reduced from a high of $960,000,000 in 1930 to $140,000,000 at present—a loss in value of $820,000,000.

Enforced readjustments already have had a salutary effect upon exhibition, but no concrete evidence exists to indicate that basic production costs have been greatly reduced. Rationalization of production costs remains the essence of the problems in the financial rehabilitation of production.

The payment of excessive salaries constitutes a major factor in the maintenance of high production costs.

The public following established by a director or star is the dominating element of sales appeal possessed by the distributor in offering an entertainment schedule to the exhibitor.

No salary is too high or excessive if the picture produced by the individual receiving the salary meets with unusual public favor.

Inflated values which producers have placed upon executives and talent have created a vicious circle of bidding for their services. The creatures of the system have returned to plague their masters.

The value of talent is apparently nil when it is "unhappy."

During 1933 compensation to all individuals in motion pictures represented 41.3 per cent of the gross—actors' and actresses' compensation, not including extras, taking 8.6 per cent, clerical and office employees receiving 8.4 per cent, studio mechanics, 4.6 per cent, supervisors, 4.4 per cent.

Compensation to all individuals in production increased 13.5 per cent, on the basis of gross receipts, between 1931 and 1933, inclusive.

Distributing companies paid 25.3 per cent of their grosses to employees for compensation in 1933, 28.9 per cent during 1932, and 24.7 per cent in 1931.

In exhibition, during 1933, compensation to all individuals represented 25.6 per cent of the gross.

Gross receipts of 77 companies were: 1931, $543,190,309; 1932, $444,646,442; 1933, $390,967,556.

Capital investment of 77 companies: 1931, $498,078,488; 1932, $360,602,575; 1933, $345,189,254.

Surplus and surplus reserves of 77 companies: 1931, $93,023,825; 1932, $77,080,737; 1933, $48,160,904.

Total assets of 77 companies: 1931, $938,158,321; 1932, $762,115,547; 1933, $667,875,161.

Profit or loss of 77 companies: 1931, (profit) $21,459,058; 1932, (loss) $41,364,149; 1933, (loss) $19,589,393.

Highest salary in 1933 was $315,000, paid to an unnamed actor for one picture.

Sixty-two in production-distribution received more than $100,000 compensation in 1933; 102 got between $50,000 and $100,000, and 782 received more than $12,000.

Highest compensation during 1933 in exhibition was $94,760. Only four in this branch received more than $50,000 for the year.

[A statistical study of the industry, part of the Rosenblatt report, starts on page 31.]

The studio generals of Hollywood, laboring with the problems created by the Legion of Decency drive for a higher moral standard in motion pictures, were further disturbed Saturday morning when the National Recovery Administration severely and publicly reprimanded them for not having reduced basic production costs to conform with the reduced earning power of product, and for not having made any substantial progress toward elimination of practices responsible for unreasonably excessive salaries and for "star raiding," both of which were said to tend to depress the quality of screen entertainment offered to the consuming public.

Attacking the "star system" as at present "exploited" by producers who have placed inflated values upon a limited number of their executives and artists, thereby creating a "vicious circle of bidding for their services," the NRA charged that "the creatures of the system have turned to plague their masters."

Having spent some six months quietly dissecting the internal business structure of the industry to ascertain the cause and effect of the "evils" of excessive salaries and of the problems of producer-talent relations, Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA Division Administrator, last week recommended to Administrator Hugh S. Johnson further indefinite suspension of those provisions of the motion picture code which had been proposed to regulate star salaries, star raiding and star employment.

Says No Material Progress Made

Mr. Rosenblatt's report, supplemented by a mass of statistics on compensation paid in all branches, on earnings, corporate structures and whatnot, concludes: "The industry has made no material progress in setting the production side of its house in order."

"Rationalization of production costs," the report emphasized, "remains the essence of the problems in the financial rehabilitation of production."

Stars Win "Moral Victory"

Mr. Rosenblatt observed, however, that "enforced readjustments have already had a salutary effect upon the financial structure of exhibition."

Producers were criticized for having indulged in practices which create an artificial scarcity of talent and force the supposed values of artists to fantastic figures out of proportion to the reduced scale of earnings established during the recent business deflation.

The stars themselves, however, won a moral victory when Mr. Rosenblatt declared that no salary is too high or excessive if the picture meets with unusual public favor as a result of unusual artistry of the star receiving that salary. Regardless, he would substitute a guaranteed minimum salary with percentage payments for talent.

Indefinite suspension of the provision in the code which would penalize excessive inducements to employees was recommended because the power granted to the Code Authority under this provision is not contemplated under the terms of the National Recovery Act, and, further, the provisions are not capable of effective administration.

Mr. Rosenblatt's recommendations for continued suspension of the clause which would regulate competitive bidding of stars is attributed to his belief that such restraint would be contrary to public interest. Arbitrary power and an increase of unreasonable inducements would result if these sections were put in force, he added.

The study determined that "the intangibles of human talent, not celluloid, constitute the basic ingredients of the entertainment service offered to the consuming public by the industry. The public following established by a director or star is the dominating element of sales appeal."

Development of screen personalities, it was pointed out, was resorted to in an effort to build up a business dwindling from depression conditions, but with no accompanying reduction of tremendous fixed charges.

The star system, according to the report, is responsible for "star raiding." Investigation in Hollywood disclosed that producers have been induced to use every means at their disposal to entice away from other producers those individuals of proved box-office value who are under contract to another producer. Producers lending stars to another company have charged many times the regular salary which the star was entitled to receive from the original employing producer, it was asserted in the report.

Production Costs Increased

All these practices caused increased production costs, it was pointed out. In dealing more thoroughly with the "star raiding" situation, it was found that while the law of contracts provided protection to a producer against offers which another producer might make to induce an actor or actress to breach his or her contract, there was no protection against dealing with temperamental artists who, while under contract, have been offered larger salaries at the expiration of their existing contracts.

"The practice of competitive bidding for stars, which has led to a great deal of mischief in the production division of the industry, is based upon the stuff of which stars are made," said the report. "It appears that the services performed by stars and directors are of such character, and moreover, their temperament is of such character, that complete contentment is necessary to the proper performance of their work. Their value is apparently nil when they are 'unhappy.'

"It is a common experience of producers that where offers of increased compensation are made to stars during their present employment, their services become practically worthless to their employers unless their salaries are increased in accord with the competing offer. The mere offer to a star of substantially increased compensation upon termination of his existing contract apparently produces a psychological effect in his work which tends to decrease or to actually destroy the value of his services to his present employer."

SAYS STARS ARE THE PRINCIPAL SALESMEN

"If the movie industry, in a year when it is losing money, must go on paying salaries bigger than President Roosevelt's, there is," in the opinion of the New York "Times," "some comfort in the thought that most of the big pay checks go to the player folk. As a tribe they are notoriously incapable of holding on to money; their popular vogue is like the wind which bloweth where it listeth, and in the long run those huge salaries average down to fairly moderate compensation. They are not the only artists in the trade," concluded the "Times," "but by their drawing power with the public they are its principal salesmen."

"By these actions producers were flying in the face of sound judgment. Business management in every line of commercial activity was drastically reducing operating expenses, including salaries. The combined operation of these trends made it difficult, if not impossible, to adjust production costs to the new era of generally depressed earnings."

Outlining the financial conditions of the larger companies, the report declared that factors contributing to this situation were "a greatly reduced mass audience for screen entertainment by reason of widespread unemployment; great operating losses, due to undoubted over-investment in large-type theatres; 'cut-throat' competition for the services of outstanding screen personalities, resulting in excessive salary ranges, making it difficult to secure economical production."

Readjustments have taken place, the report said, and capital structures have been deflated, while substantial economies have been imposed upon theatre operation, "but no convincing evidence exists to indicate that basic production costs have been greatly reduced."

A statistical study of the industry disclosed, according to the report, that there is a tendency toward an increased ratio of compensation in producing and producing-distributing companies in proportion to increased gross receipts and that the tendency in the industry in producing and producing-distributing companies is for a greater share of salary costs out of gross receipts than is customary in other forms of enterprise, where the ratio of salary costs to receipts generally ranges around 25 per cent.

Creation of an industry committee, either with or without government participation, to investigate, study and report on specific subjects is recommended. This committee, Mr. Rosenblatt suggested in his report, should investigate and make a report on:

"A method for compensating those engaged in artistic, creative, interpretative, directorial, technical, and supervisory capacities on the basis of a minimum guaranteed compensation against a percentage of the receipts of the respective pictures upon which they may be engaged."

It was also suggested that this committee make recommendations for a uniform production cost formula; a uniform production report system; a uniform budget schedule, and uniform salary ranges for classifications of production employments.

It was further proposed that this committee decide whether it would be "desirable, practical, proper and legal to establish a permanent industry commission, with or without government participation, but in any event composed of a representative of producers, and a representative, depending upon the interest affected at any time, of any of the following classes of employees, and restricted solely to such classes, to wit: actors, writers, directors, technicians or supervisors," which might possess with the consent and approval of the industry, among other things, the power

(1) To require all proposed offers of employment to be transmitted to the commission for its approval prior to the same being actually made.

(2) To require all proposed negotiations for employment to be with full disclosure to the commission.

(3) To provide for regulation of salaries in proper cases.

(4) To direct that the services of employees not utilized by the then employing producer may be available upon such equitable terms and conditions as the commission may prescribe, and in a proper case, to other producers.

(5) To make findings and report to the producing company concerned when in the opinion of the commission corporate assets have been wasted by production executives in their employment of any members of the foregoing classes of employees above mentioned.

The report was ordered made in the President's Executive Order of Nov. 27, 1933, which order accompanied the Presidential approval of the NRA's motion picture code. At that time, following a protest by Hollywood talent, Mr. Roosevelt temporarily suspended the code clause on talent raiding and excessive salaries.

The machinery for gathering the material from which Mr. Rosenblatt made his deductions embraced a set of questionnaires, copies of which were distributed Jan. 15, 1934, to 2,000 persons, firms and corporations.

With respect to compensation, it was requested that all information be supplied only with reference to individuals earning an aggregate of $150 or more per week.

The NRA promised that all names would be held in strictest confidence, and, therefore, schedules published in the report appear anonymously, both as to the identity of the companies and the employees.

Information covers activities of 77 separate companies and corporations, including all the large interests. Mr. Rosenblatt said that he felt a representative cross-section of the three industry branches is revealed in the findings, especially since only nine companies represent the bulk of employment above the salary limitation of a $150 weekly minimum which was established as a dividing line between the companies which were and were not required to supply the necessary information. As a result of this limitation, it was necessary that only a few theatre companies in the field answer the questions.

Gross receipts of the 77 companies reporting in all branches totaled as follows:

Year	Gross
1933	$390,967,556
1932	444,646,442
1931	543,190,309
Total for three years	$1,378,804,307

The producing-distributing companies as a unit and the exhibiting companies suffered the principal losses in the decline of gross income during the three years, as indicated by the following tabulation.

TOP EXECUTIVE PAY WAS $273,596

Type of Companies	Gross Receipts 1933	1932	1931
PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING	$197,418,377	$209,022,769	$258,815,862
PRODUCING	15,343,757	13,542,747	15,913,545
DISTRIBUTING	6,335,741	5,188,798	8,050,304
EXHIBITING	171,869,680	216,892,126	260,410,597

The capital investment of the 77 companies likewise shrunk considerably since 1931, the report indicating a loss of $152,889,234 in this connection, as follows:

Year	Capital Investment
1933	$345,189,254
1932	360,602,575
1931	498,078,488

The capital investment in 1933 was equal to 88.29 per cent of the gross receipts, as compared with 81.10 per cent of the gross receipts of 1932 and 91.70 of the 1931 gross. Capital investment was divided as follows:

Type of Companies	Capital Investment 1933	1932	1931
PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING	$ 97,322,632	$ 94,672,768	$189,886,810
PRODUCING	9,170,194	9,757,491	10,411,471
DISTRIBUTING	382,590	286,300	263,800
EXHIBITING	238,313,838	255,886,015	297,516,406

Surplus and surplus reserves of the 77 companies in 1933 were $45,000,000 less than in 1931, having declined as follows:

Year	Surplus and Surplus Reserves
1933	$48,160,904
1932	77,080,737
1931	93,023,825

Surplus and surplus reserves were divided in this manner:

Type of Companies	Surplus and Surplus Reserves 1933	1932	1931
PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING	$22,086,376	$30,328,360	$19,510,850
PRODUCING	4,238,276	4,976,439	6,184,729
DISTRIBUTING	1,929,572	2,050,231	2,586,511
EXHIBITING	19,906,678	39,725,706	64,741,732

Total assets reported by the 77 companies answering the questionnaire were listed at $667,875,161 at the end of 1933, having shrunk $271,000,000 under their evaluation at the end of 1931. Total assets reported were:

Year	Total Assets
1933	$667,875,161
1932	762,115,547
1931	938,158,321

The bulk of the assets, as is generally understood, is in the exhibition branch, with the producing-distributing companies and producing and distributing units following in the order of their worth. The following compilation is a breakdown of assets reported by each branch:

Type of Companies	Total Assets 1933	1932	1931
PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING	$180,327,079	$217,094,840	$313,141,517
PRODUCING	21,349,484	19,593,992	19,966,486
DISTRIBUTING	5,210,547	4,114,481	5,393,837
EXHIBITING	460,988,049	$21,312,233	599,656,480

The relation of these assets to the total gross receipts has not changed much in the last three years. Assets in 1933 were equal to 170.83 of the gross of all of the 77 companies, and in 1932 were equal to 171.40, compared with 172.71 in 1931.

The report struck an encouraging note, indicating the beginning of the return to normalcy in listing the net loss for all companies as having been reduced some $21,000,000 during 1933 under the loss of 1932. Profit and loss for all companies follows:

Year	Profit or Loss
1933	—$19,589,393
1932	— 41,364,149
1931	21,459,058

(— Minus sign indicates a loss.)

Both the producing and the distributing companies reported profits for 1933, while the producing-distributing and the exhibiting companies showed losses. A comparison of profits or losses during the three years follows:

Type of Companies	Profit or Loss 1933	1932	1931
PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING	— $9,481,361	— $26,022,328	$15,154,241
PRODUCING	53,181	— 1,069,069	407,970
DISTRIBUTING	107,678	— 293,541	842,234
EXHIBITING	— 10,268,891	— 13,979,210	5,054,611

(— Minus sign indicates a loss.)

The 77 companies reported 399,215 persons employed in 1933, receiving total compensation of $135,113,135, with an average compensation of $338 per employment—meaning, per engagement. These figures compare with 350,126 and 316,176 employed in 1932 and 1931, respectively, receiving total compensation of $153,093,481 in 1932 and $175,302,105 in 1931.

Some 24,468 clerical, office and service help were paid some $29,211,000 in 1933, representing 7.47 per cent of gross receipts. Actors and actresses, numbering 28,055 got $25,834,000 in compensation, representing 6.61 of the gross receipts for the year.

Supervisors in production were paid $11,766,380. There were 1,621 listed.

Of interest was the reduction of $40,000,000 made in 1933 salaries under total salaries paid in 1931.

The charts found elsewhere in this issue detail the number of individuals employed by the 77 companies, together with individual payrolls for each class and the average compensation per class and per employee, together with a comparison with 1931 and 1932.

287,661 Engagements for Extras

The companies listed 287,661 engagements for extra players in 1933. They received only $2,756,643; 19,363 studio mechanics were paid $9,747,113; 9,538 musicians, received $3,712,477 in 1933, and 370 directors and 289 executives were paid $6,988,930 and $6,799,157, respectively.

Earnings and other data regarding compensation of some 3,800 individuals—listed by numbers, without names—comprise some 110 pages of the 131-page printed report, these individuals receiving a minimum of $150 a week. The individuals are ranked according to total compensation received last year. One company listed "an actor" as having received $315,000 for one picture made in 1933. The next highest paid "artist" was employed at $10,000 per week, but received only $296,250 for the year.

Some 782 persons were listed by producing-distributing companies as having received $12,000 or more in 1933; 102 got between $50,000 and $100,000, and 62 received more than $100,000.

The report showed that the highest paid producing-distributing executive, listed as such, received total compensation for the year of $273,596, of which $104,000 was salary and the remainder "other compensation." The highest paid counsel received $179,599; the highest paid director, $150,000. Top compensation for a writer was $93,541, while the best paid studio manager received $57,183, a composer received $52,416, a supervisor $48,500, a "camera manager" $46,000 and a sales manager $43,200.

The report left little doubt, if any existed, that the large paychecks are mostly all drawn in Hollywood.

Some 923 persons made less than $2,000 in 1933.

Reports of exhibiting companies showed the highest compensation to be $94,760, of which $24,500 was salary, the remainder "other compensation," and which was paid to a president. Top compensations paid other exhibition officials included $55,109, to "a director of radio"; $44,681 to a zone manager; $36,750 to a lawyer; $26,887 to a music director and $20,192 to a theatre manager. Only four persons received more than $50,000 for the year in this group.

The figures disclose that there is by far more press agenting than truth in many of the stories of fabulous Hollywood salaries. Few artists received a full year's work at their agreed upon weekly stipend. Cases demonstrating the gap between weekly salaries and annual compensation are numerous, especially among those listed in the lower annual compensation brackets. Some carried at $10,000 a week made but one week's pay, while one actor with a reputed weekly salary of $5,000 received throughout all of 1933 but one day's pay.

Income Taxes and Other Costs

Furthermore, the report pointed out, those who made large sums were also subject to heavy income taxes which materially reduced their net earnings, and it is wellknown that much of an actor's earnings is expended for what in other industries would be called business costs, such as wardrobe, managers, agents, press representatives and the like.

Distributing companies listed only 32 executive employees receiving in excess of $150 in 1933. It is assumed that the dozens of others earning above that figure in distribution were listed under producing-distributing company returns.

Mr. Rosenblatt prefaced the 110-page listing of salary payments made during 1933 to individuals who received upwards of $150 a week, with an elaborate thesis on (1) the general financial problems of the industry; (2) the specific production problems embraced within excessive salary payments and "star raiding"; (3) an analysis of the fundamental characteristics of production and talent; (4) the "Star System" of selecting actors, directors, technicians and other so-called creative talent; (5)

ALADDIN'S LAMP IN THE MOVIES

"There's something obviously irrational and unsound in the manner in which a system of reward for services is being conducted in the film industry," commented the New York Daily Mirror. "Until the Rooseveltian era the question of 'a man's earnings was sacrosanct, and no agency dared look into it. Remember how the bank presidents put their backs up when their salaries and 'bonuses' were probed —and how quickly they put them down when the unfairness and the downright injustice of their earnings was discerned? Well, the same thing is going to happen with movie salaries and justly so!" warned the "Mirror."

SCREEN GUILD PLANS PROGRAMS FOR RADIO

MPTOA Protests Plan for 13 Screen Writers to Do 13 Radio Plays with Film Stars

With radio broadcasting serious competition with the motion picture, an industry organization is actively assisting the broadcasters.

The Screen Actors' Guild, an organization of motion picture stars and feature players, of which Eddie Cantor is president, is planning to sell a series of radio programs to an advertiser for a nationwide chain broadcast.

The Screen Actors' Guild plan is for 13 wellknown writers in the Screen Writers' Guild to write 13 radio plays to run 25 minutes each. These sketches will be cast with leading film stars from the Screen Actors' Guild, the program to be sold to an advertiser for a 13-weeks' broadcast and the proceeds to go to the two guilds. The actor receives no compensation for his services and the identical type of entertainment which exhibitors try to sell in their theatres will be given without any charge during theatre hours with the same players over the radio.

"Coming at this time when the motion picture industry is beset by boycotts, hot weather, weak pictures, outdoor amusements and other forces to lessen attendance, this seems to us an unbusinesslike, unfair and unreasonable plan to undermine theatre attendance," the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America stated officially this week. "Many patrons of established motion picture theatres whose film rentals pay the star salaries, will remain at home to hear these stars and radio plays for nothing rather than go and pay admission to the theatre and hear the same star do the same or similar 'stuff.' How can we sell such entertainment, stars and personalities if the advertiser subsidizing the performance gives it away for nothing?

"Prompt and strong action should be taken by theatre owners to protest and prevent such broadcasting. Write or wire the Screen Actors' Guild and let them know how you feel; protest to the stars and studios against such unfair competition. Do it now, before it gets underway in order that you may not have to regret not doing it later on."

Zukor Coordinating Studio and Home Office

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, arrived in New York from Hollywood early Tuesday morning and immediately went to work on what he described as an effort to coordinate Paramount's studio activities with the home office and to lend aid to the corporation's financial reorganization.

Mr. Zukor's arrival was coincident with an authorization issued in New York late last week by Federal Judge Alfred E. Coxe to the Paramount trustees in bankruptcy to retain the law firm of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine as counsel in the reorganization proceedings under the new bankruptcy laws and, in addition, to retain special counsel for other legal work in Chicago, Los Angeles and other cities.

Universal Shows $31,000 Profit

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and its subsidiaries, last week reported a net profit of $31,001 for the six months ending April 28. The statement shows a gain of approximately $633,256, the company reporting a loss for the same period in 1933 of $602,255.

Actually, the company states, the net operating profit was $199,609, but $158,608 was written off as a loss on settlement of notes receivable with a bankrupt theatre estate and $10,000 in closed banks.

Mississippi Exhibitors Form an Association

A group of exhibitors met last week at Jackson, Mississippi, for the purpose of establishing a permanent, statewide theatre organization, to be known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Mississippi. R. X. Williams, Jr., of Oxford, was elected president.

Other officers are: J. E. Alford, McComb, first vice-president; J. A. West, Louisville, second vice-president; W. E. Elkin, Aberdeen, secretary-treasurer. Approximately 50 theatres were represented at the meeting.

Committees named are as follows: Legal, W. E. Elkin, J. T. Sandford, J. A. West; resolutions, Mrs. J. B. DeVoto, H. W. Evans, W. S. Tyson; press and publicity, W. E. Elkin, J. E. Alford, Frank Foresman.

Will Hays Returns to New York from Coast

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, returned to New York on Wednesday by airplane from Hollywood, where he supervised, with Joseph I. Breen, his assistant, the launching of the industry's new plan of self-regulation to raise the moral standards of motion pictures.

Mr. Hays said that Mr. Breen's new censorship powers already had accomplished many reforms, with a staff enlarged by six new assistants. He praised Martin Quigley's article on "The Legion of Decency" in Motion Picture Herald July 21.

GFFA Files in Bankruptcy

The Gaumont-Franco Film Aubert Corporation, one of the most important producing and exhibition firms in France, this week filed a petition in bankruptcy in Paris before the Tribunal of Commerce. The corporation controls more than 40 theatres.

Hays Defended by Terre Haute Star

Out in Terre Haute, Indiana, there remains still a certain calm friendliness of the sort that so long ago inspired that homely verse of James Whitcomb Riley's with the refrain, "The little town of Tailholt is good enough fur me." And now we find the editor of the Terre Haute "Star," with just a touch of local pride and loyalty, rising to make remarks concerning Mr. Will Hays and the Decency Campaign, thus:

"When the correction of any abuse is delayed overly long, it generally takes the least desirable method to effect final adjustment. Sentiment appears and runs to excesses. Innocent victims are made to suffer as the pendulum swings to an extreme. We have the current example in the movie boycott.

"There is no brief for the movie producers who have ladled out crime in romanticized cloak and give vice a mantle of decency. They have been told often that there would be a rebellion against an unbalanced diet of such pictures. They were unable to read the writing on the wall and refused to listen to the one man whom they hired to censor their pictures, Will H. Hays.

"There is the rankest injustice in the cry that goes up from some quarters for Mr. Hays' removal. We can only believe that the movie boycott has reached the stage of being mob action in some quarters when they demand Mr. Hays as a victim. Excellent testimony to this assumption is given by Marlen Pew in his department in Editor & Publisher.

"'To my certain knowledge,' writes Pew, 'for I have studied the situation independently in Hollywood and read the rules written to govern the making and distribution of motion pictures, Will H. Hays had established a code for the picture makers which would fairly conserve decency according to the American standard, but Hollywood directors for years have flouted their own rules, though warned time and again that some day there would be disastrous reactions. If ever a prophet could say "I told you so," it is Mr. Hays in this dark movie hour. Be it said to his credit that he took the slurs of his critics and played "goat" with conspicuous fortitude, but kept on trying to compel the motion picture industry to accept the spirit as well as the rules of the association of which Mr. Hays has been misnamed "Czar."'

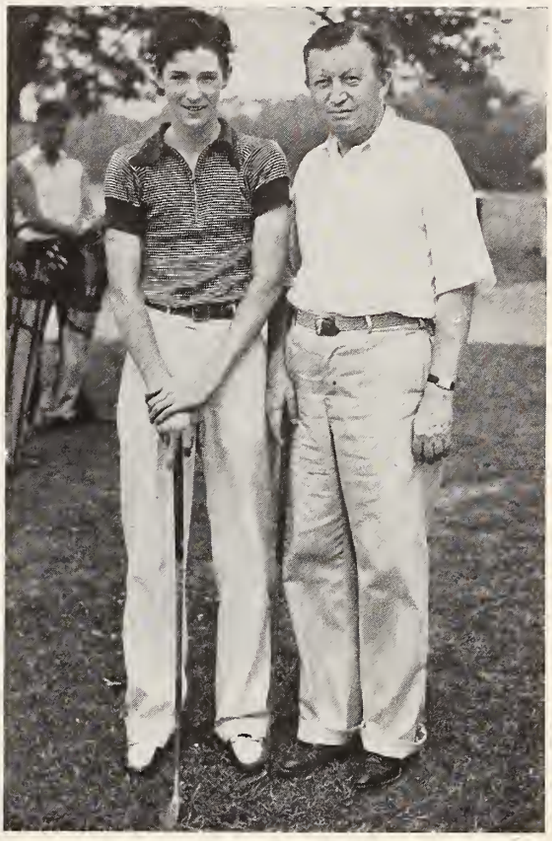
"This is an excellent tribute to the man whom most of us in this section of Indiana and Illinois know as a neighbor. That criticism of him in the present situation is unjustified is given further evidence in the fact that the producers now are accepting the code which Mr. Hays laid down four years ago, as their rescue from a bad situation."

Fox Metropolitan Reorganizing Asked

Bondholders of Fox Metropolitan in New York late last week further complicated disposition of the 87 theatres in the circuit by filing a petition for reorganization under the new bankruptcy laws, thus, temporarily, at least, halting any immediate possibility of sale of the houses to the combined Loew-Warner group.

Ultimate acquisition of the circuit by Loew and Warner appeared to be certain earlier last week as a result of an agreement reached with the bondholders' committee for purchase of the circuit's bonds deposited with it for approximately $4,000,000.

THE CAMERA REPORTS



HOMEWARD BOUND. From Newark Airport and a European vacation, and both returning to work as well, since Lou Brock is an RKO Radio associate producer and Mrs. Brock, who is Helen Collins, appears in pictures for the same company.

COMEDIAN. Is Will Mahoney, stage-famous, set to appear in Educational short comedies.

TANGOIST. Is Carlos Gardel, Argentinian, in Spanish films in the East for Paramount.

PAPA GETS A LESSON. "Papa" in this case being Charles C. Pettijohn, executive of the MPPDA, and teacher being Charles, Jr., who at 15 has hooked several scholastic golfing honors to his belt. The home field is the Westchester Country Club.

AN INTERESTED VISITOR. Was Mary Pickford recently on the set at the United Artists Studio, where she chatted with Anna Sten, young star from Soviet Russia, and Fredric March, in the opposite lead, as the two were at work on "We Live Again," the picturization of Leo Tolstoy's famous novel, "Resurrection."

AT LONDON PREMIERE. Arthur Dent, at right, managing director of Wardour Films, Ltd., major English distributing company, and Richard Tauber, famous European tenor, at the midnight premiere of "Blossom Time," in which British International film Mr. Tauber stars. The showing was at the Regal.

HENRY VIII. Otherwise, and more properly, known as Charles Laughton, English actor, as he arrived recently in Hollywood with Mrs. Laughton to appear in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

O.H.M.S. But a little out of routine, as officers of the British Cruiser Norfolk visited the Warner studio and were greeted by Joe E. Brown.

NEW SLANT. As imparted to Dolores Del Rio by the still photographer. The Warner player has been signed to a long term contract as a result of her work in several pictures.

THEY GOT THEIR SHOTS. And dressed for trouble were these two Universal Newsreel cameramen, Mervyn Freeman and John McHenry, as they took up their positions with a National Guard squad during the thick of the rioting which accompanied the recent San Francisco strike. Gas masks, steel helmets and bullet-proof vests are their protection.

LET IT RAIN. Is the thought expressed in the attitude of Roger Pryor and Heather Angel, as, blissfully unaware of the downpour, they indulge in "Romance in the Rain," a forthcoming Universal film.

LEGION AIMED AT UNCLEAN FILMS, NOT AT INDUSTRY, SAYS LEADER

Archbishop McNicholas Says Public Opinion Has Many Advantages Over Censorship; Cancellation System Argued

Public opinion of millions of Americans aroused to a consciousness of the dangers of salacious motion pictures and to take individual action against them, rather than censorship or destruction of the industry, is the sole purpose of the Legion of Decency.

This official statement of the movement will be made in the August issue of the Ecclesiastical Review, by the Most Reverend John T. McNicholas, O.P., D.D., Archbishop of Cincinnati, and director general of the Legion as chairman of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures, in his first published expression on the movement.

The church campaign brought these additional new developments this week:

Controversy developed over the privilege of cancelling pictures on moral grounds.

The Catholic News expressed the fear that the crusade is in danger of becoming unworkable through the activities of "notoriety seekers."

The Association for the Preservation of the Freedom of the Stage and Screen was working to line up religious and "free speech" opposition to the movement.

Protestants started their campaign to enlist 35,000,000 churchgoers.

All stories and scenarios will be passed on first by Joseph I. Breen's Production Code Administration in Hollywood.

Harry Warner charged Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, with un-Americanism for saying "it is a sin to go to the theatre."

Dr. A. H. Giannini decided to withhold production loans until the scenario is approved by Mr. Breen's board.

Senator Lonergan asked NRA to check "bad movies."

"A loyal Catholic people, as well as many other groups of different religious beliefs, convinced of the urgent necessity of a clean and wholesome screen, are registering their protest by staying away from theatres," said Archbishop McNicholas in his Ecclesiastical Review article. "This has been done, not to destroy an industry, nor to ruin the business of exhibitors, nor to lessen opportunities for wholesome amusement, but, in the interest of the general good of society, to secure the assurance that only clean pictures would in the future be exhibited."

The Archbishop explained that at the Cincinnati meeting of Bishops, June 20-21, the Episcopal Committee was assured by the industry's representatives that henceforth the production code jury would be in New York and that its members would consist of the company presidents in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, thereby doing away with the jury in Hollywood, "the weakest provision" of the production code.

"The Bishops were pleased to learn of this change," said Archbishop McNicholas. "But, mindful of the broken promises of the past, the Bishops did not overestimate the value of the new assurances given.

"The struggle, therefore, is not over. Public opinion must now be aroused and sustained everywhere as the strongest barrier against the immoral cinema. Public opinion, if governed by good sense and relentless in its opposition to the evil motion picture, has many advantages over censorship. It is to be hoped that the industry will be faithful to its promise—not to produce objectionable pictures.

"It may be well to make clear that the Church is not asking for a solemn type of picture that gives no real amusement and no opportunity for a hearty laugh.

"The producers and distributors who through their delegates met the Bishops at their recent conference represented 90 per cent of the motion picture production of the country. Assuming that this organized industry will keep its word, there is still the danger that the other 10 per cent of production may resort to an output that is cheap and immoral. If this should happen, our people will be on their guard to stay away from theatres showing the films produced by this 10 per cent of the industry.

Pettijohn vs. Steffes on Cancellations

While exhibitors were starting to take advantage of the distributors' offer permitting cancellation of pictures released prior to July 15, W. A. (Al) Steffes, head of Allied in the Northwest, and C. C. Pettijohn, of the Hays organization, were arguing over its possible effect in creating local censorship.

Mr. Steffes holds that the fact an exhibitor must have an organized protest from his community in order to obtain a cancellation may result in a censorship board in every hamlet. Mr. Pettijohn replied that the Legion does not issue a national "list," and that the distributors' purpose was to help the sincere exhibitor who might be faced with an actual protest on moral grounds actually existing in his community.

Allied of Wisconsin charged the cancellation privilege was not working out.

Scores "Notoriety Seekers"

At the same time that "free speech" advocates were meeting in New York to organize opposition to the crusade, the Catholic News warned that notoriety seekers threaten to make the whole movement unworkable, if not ridiculous, by distorting the purposes with the cry that it is designed to bring censorship.

The Association for the Preservation of the Freedom of the Stage and Screen compared the film boycott crusade to the prohibition movement.

The Federal Council of Churches started to send Legion of Decency pledges to 35,000,000 Protestants, and the Interfaith Committee of Catholics, Jews and Protestants in New York decided on a house-to-house canvass to enlist 3,000,000.

Mr. Breen this week gave certificates of approval to the following new features: "Man with Two Faces," "Dames," and "Dragon Murder Case," Warners; "Affairs of Cellini," "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back" and "Last Gentleman," Twentieth Century; "Girl from Missouri," MGM; "Ransom—$1,000,000," Universal; "Name the Woman," Columbia; "Now and Forever," Paramount; "Servants' Entrance," Fox.

While agreeing with Postmaster General Farley, who was a luncheon guest at the Warner coast studio, that pictures should respond to public sentiment, Harry M. Warner charged that Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, is "un-American" in his attitude toward pictures, because the Cardinal said "it is a sin to go to the theatre."

Dr. A. H. Giannini, in New York from Hollywood, said the "cleanup" movement will bring many benefits to the industry.

Reformers, "selecting the wrong place to fight," could better throw their support to meritorious and unusual pictures so that it would be at least moderately profitable to exhibitors to show them rather than to demand elimination of block booking as a means to film betterment, in the opinion of Arthur L. Mayer. Mr. Mayer, operator of the Rialto theatre in New York, and formerly advertising director of Paramount Publix, expressed himself in detail in a four-page article in last week's Liberty Magazine, with its announced 2,191,678 readers.

Catholic "News" Warns of Notoriety Seekers Raising Cry of Censorship; Breen to Judge All Stories and Scenarios

"I believe there is no exhibitor who does not greatly desire to be numbered among the socially useful members of his community. I think most exhibitors would make heavy personal sacrifices to forego showing shabby, meretricious or salacious pictures," said Mr. Mayer.

"The reason they do not do so is unrelated to any trade practice—it is because the public has thus far been completely indifferent to pictures which failed to conform to the accepted canons of public entertainment."

Exhibitor Challenges Mayer

Questioning Mr. Mayer's conclusions was Joe Crivollo, operator of the Majestic Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

"It is regrettable," wrote Mr. Crivollo, "that the wide-spread circulation of Liberty is placed at the disposal of Mr. Mayer that he might counteract the efforts of the Legion of Decency with the alibi that the public demands the type of motion pictures that are being produced and that Hollywood is simply answering the demand."

The Authors' League of America, in a statement regarding the Decency Campaign, deplored the "intemperance, hysteria, injustice, and in some cases outright falsehood which characterizes certain expressions of this protest."

"Earnest and aggressive action by the government," by giving the NRA full power to check socalled "bad" pictures, was urged by Senator Lonergan (D.—Conn.).

In the field, the following developments were reported:

Independent exhibitors at Boston demanded the resignation of Will Hays.

Rev. Russell Sullivan, Boston, Cardinal O'Connell's aid, charged on the radio that screen actresses teach indecency to children.

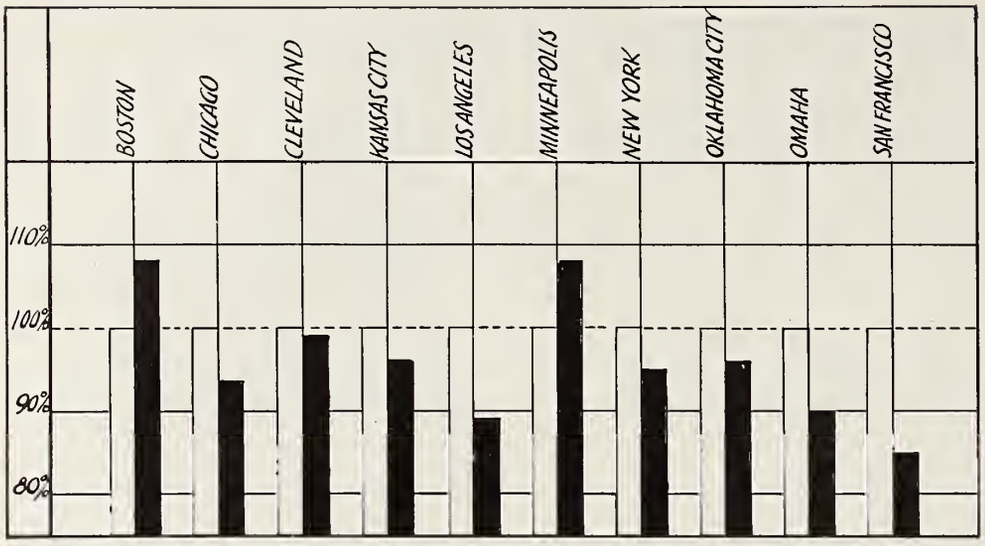
Jules Michael, of the Buffalo MPTO, defended Will Hays, charging distributors with lack of cooperation the last four years.

The Chicago Legion enrolled 500,000 Catholic women to campaign against theatres.

Detroit Catholics started using "We Demand Clean Movies" stickers on autos.

Newark's Catholic Diocese joined the crusade.

Jewish rabbis in New York were organizing members of their faith.



The Legion in Brooklyn enrolled 50,000 Catholics.

Rev. Alvin Hause, Kansas City minister, charged "movie filth" with having caused the drought and crop destruction.

Lutherans of Missouri joined the campaign.

The Missouri Daughters of the American Revolution indorsed the move.

Some 300,000 St. Louis Catholics signed Legion pledges.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of ten key cities during the four-weeks period from June 23 to July 14, 1934, with the receipts from the same cities for the corresponding period in 1933. In each city, the 1933 figure is taken as 100 per cent.

STUDIO CONTACT UNIT IS NAMED BY MPTOA

Vincent Chairman of Committee, Including Wilby, Beatty, Hoblitzelle, Walsh, To Report

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week set up its production contact committee as a channel for relaying to the studios public reactions and the frank opinions of local exhibitors to various types of pictures, personalities, scenes and dialogue. The committee, proposed at the MPTOA convention in Los Angeles in April of this year, will commence its duties at once.

Walter Vincent of the Wilmer & Vincent circuit, New York, is chairman of the committee, which has for its members R. B. Wilby, president of Valatenga Theatres, Atlanta; E. C. Beatty, general manager, Butterfield Theatres, Detroit; Karl Hoblitzelle, president, Interstate Circuit, Dallas, and Morgan A. Walsh, general manager of the Redwood-Midland Circuit, San Francisco.

Comment Not To Be Published

"This is not a publicity 'gag'," said the MPTOA bulletin. "In order to insure frank and specific reports, naming the pictures, scenes, stars, players, directors and others referred to, without fear of arousing ill-will or reprisals, and to avoid any inclination to 'paint a picture' rather than accurately report facts, the comment received from exhibitors who volunteer for this work will not be published. The original reports in each instance will remain in our files; the transcript forwarded to the studio will be identified by a number only."

The responsible heads of the studios are keenly interested in having this project established, the MPTOA said, and the MPTOA considered it particularly important now, when studios are "changing their course into uncharted fields," that they can know promptly and reliably the audience reaction to their new pictures.

One studio executive explained that he received intermittent expressions from exhibitors, frequently colored by passing through several hands before the comment reaches the studio, sometimes unreliable because the exhibitor sought to "paint" a picture instead of giving a frank and impartial statement of facts, and sometimes mere soap-box oratory from a professional organizer.

"The box office returns do not always tell the whole story nor tell it accurately," the MPTOA bulletin said. "Pictures that draw well because of star names or an intriguing title or exploitation sometimes leave the audience cold and dissatisfied, if not actually resentful or disgusted. On the other hand, some pictures with a light drawing power immensely please the paying customers who do come.

Henry K. Davis Dead; Was Paramount Referee

Funeral services for Henry K. Davis, 58, federal referee in bankruptcy of Paramount until he withdrew a few months ago, will be held Saturday at 10 a. m. from Fordham Manor Reformed Church, New York. Mr. Davis died of pneumonia Wednesday.

Artists Shy From Exclusive Contract

By JEANETTE MEEHAN

A new tendency among artists to shy from the exclusive long term contract with one studio is fast changing the aspect of the studio talent rosters in Hollywood.

An inclusive checkup reveals approximately sixty stars, directors and featured players, among them some of the biggest money names in the business, who hold independent contracts with two or more studios, or who prefer only picture-to-picture contracts.

Privilege of Story Selection

The consensus among Hollywood's talent indicates explicitly their belief in the advantages of the new semi-freelance setup which usually gives the artists privilege of story selection. Claudette Colbert, for instance, under contract to Paramount for several years, has just made what is called her most successful picture, "It Happened One Night," under the direction of Frank Capra at Columbia.

Of Paramount's talent, those under contract for a certain number of pictures or privileged to negotiate themselves for outside pictures include: George Raft, Bing Crosby, Mae West, Jack Oakie, W. C. Fields, Pauline Lord and Joe Penner. Gary Cooper has contracts with Paramount and Sam Goldwyn; Claudette Colbert with Paramount and Universal; Carole Lombard with Paramount and Columbia; Herbert Marshall with Paramount and MGM; Charles Laughton with Paramount and MGM; Constance Bennett with Twentieth Century and MGM; Gloria Swanson with MGM and Goldwyn; Loretta Young with MGM and Twentieth Century; Frank Lloyd with MGM and Fox; Gregory LaCava with Twentieth Century and MGM; Fay Wray with Twentieth Century and Columbia; Gene Raymond with Columbia and Jesse L. Lasky; Edmund Lowe with Universal and Fox; Frank Tuttle with Paramount and Fox; Raoul Walsh with Fox and MGM; Leslie Howard with Radio and Warners; Eddie G. Robinson with Warner and Paramount; Boris Karloff with Universal and Columbia; Zasu Pitts with Universal and Radio; Fredric March with Twentieth Century and Goldwyn.

For Stipulated Number of Films

Those under contract for a stipulated number of pictures are:

At MGM: Maurice Chevalier, Evelyn Laye, Louise Fazenda, Robert Z. Leonard, Paul Sloane, George Cukor, Tay Garnett, E. H. Griffith.

Columbia: Lewis Milestone, Howard Hawks, Nancy Carroll, Grace Moore, John Mack Brown, Victor Schertzinger.

Fox: David Butler, Erik Charell, Charles Farrell, Victor McLaglen.

Radio: Margaret Hamilton, Miriam Hopkins.

Warner: Paul Muni, Frank Borzage, Josephine Hutchinson, John Halliday.

Universal: Bela Lugosi, Chester Morris, Russ Columbo.

Twentieth Century: Paul Kelly.

Monogram: Edgar Kennedy, Robert Armstrong.

Frank R. Tate Dead

Frank R. Tate, 74, theatre builder, and pioneer in St. Louis, died at his home this week. His first theatre was the Columbia, opened in 1898. In 1912 he owned a circuit of theatres. He built the first film house in St. Louis, in 1906.

NRA SCHEDULES CODE COST SHARES FOR PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Production and distribution companies in the industry are to be assessed from $6 a month to $20,000 annually for support of the Code Authority, it was disclosed in Washington this week by the Recovery Administration. Warner, Paramount, MGM, Fox, United Artists and RKO are scheduled for assessments of $20,000 each, Universal and Columbia for $15,000 each.

Independent producers in Group One, the NRA revealed, in making public its schedule submitted for approval by the Code Authority, will pay from $600 to $1,500 annually each, with Monogram assessed at $1,500, Majestic and Mascot $900 each, the others $600 each.

Independent producers, in Group Two, are listed for $20 each per month, as are "miscellaneous importers, exporters and producers."

Most independent exchanges are scheduled at $6 a month, at $12, $18 and $24, and a few at $36.

Criticisms of the schedules are to be received by Mr. Rosenblatt up to August 6.
